Ninetieth Annual Conference

Of the Church Of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

FIRST DAY

The ninetieth annual conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the tabernacle in Salt Lake City at 10 o'clock a. m., Sunday, April 4, 1920. President Heber J. Grant presided.

AUTHORITIES PRESENT.

Of the First Presidency: Heber J. Grant, Anthon H. Lund, Charles W. Penrose; of the Council of the Twelve Apostles: Rudger Clawson, * Geo. F. Richards, Orson F. Whitney, David O. McKay, Anthony W. Ivins, Joseph Fielding Smith, James E. Talmage, Stephen L. Richards, Richard R. Lyman, and Melvin J. Ballard; presiding Patriarch: Hyrum G. Smith; of the First Council of Seventy: Seymour B. Young, B. H. Roberts, * Rulon S. Wells, Joseph W. McMurrin, Charles H. Hart, and Levi Edgar Young; of the Presiding Bishopric: Charles W. Nibley, David A. Smith, and John Wells; Assistant Historians: Andrew Jenson, and A. William Lund. There were a large number of Presidents of stakes with their counselors, Patriarchs, Bishops of wards, and numerous other prominent officers, men and women representing various quorums and organizations of the Church.

The following Presidents of Missions were in attendance: Charles A. Callis, Southern States; Samuel O. Bennion, Central States; Winslow Farr Smith, Northern States; Heber C. Iverson, Northwestern States; John M. Knight, Western States; Joseph W. McMurrin, California; Nephi Jensen, Canada; Ray L. Pratt; Mexican; Benjamin Goddard, Bureau of Information, Temple Block.

President Heber J. Grant called the congregation to order.

The great auditorium and galleries and every available standing space was occupied by people.

The choir and congregation sang, "O say, what is truth?" Prayer was offered by Elder Edward J. Wood, of the Alberta Stake of Zion, Canada.

The choir and congregation sang, "Come, O Thou King of kings."

*Reed Smoot was absent in Washington and George Albert Smith, presiding over the British and European Mission; J. Golden Kimball was absent in California, owing to ill health.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

It is certainly an inspiring sight to see so many of the Latter-day Saints gathered here at the opening of our conference. Considering the weather I had expected that there would be no need this morning of having an overflow meeting in the Assembly Hall, but I was mistaken.

I rejoice exceedingly in the faith that is in the hearts of the Latter-day Saints. I rejoice in the loyalty of the people to the Church of Jesus Christ, wherever they are located, from Canada on the north, to Mexico in the south, and in all the various missions throughout the world. I am convinced, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that there are no other people upon the face of the earth who are as devoted to their religion, or who are ready and willing to and who do in very deed make as many sacrifices for their church, as an absolute practical demonstration of their faith, as do the Latter-day Saints.

THE SAINTS ABSOLUTELY SINCERE.

When we realize that thousands of Latter-day Saints who are absolutely honest in the payment of their tithes, who look upon the obligation to pay one-tenth of all they make as sacredly as they would look upon the obligation to divide with a partner, if that partner had a one-tenth interest in their business; when we think of the donations that are made for the support of the poor, for the erection of meetinghouses in the various wards, for the erection of stake tabernacles, for the building of academies, the construction of temples, and last, greatest of all, when we think of the wonderful sacrifice that is made by the men and women, giving two, three and five years of their time for missionary work, and some of them ten and fifteen years, at their own expense or the expense of their families, not only giving their time but paying their own way—I am sure that any person who stops to reflect upon these sacrifices must acknowledge that there can be no greater evidence of absolute sincerity and devotion given by any people to their faith and to the cause of God, as they understand it, than is given by the Latter-day Saints.

DISPOSITION OF TITHING.

I will read for your information some of the things that have been assisted by your tithing during the past year. The Saints themselves have contributed $500,000, because it has been the custom for the Church to pay one-third only in the building of meetinghouses. During the latter part of the year, however, the Church has been doing one-half in the constructing of meetinghouses, and I would like to call attention to the fact that there are no applications now made for assistance from the Trustee-in-Trust, but what the different wards and stakes ask for one-half of the money needed to erect their meetinghouses and their schoolhouses, and there are applications on file now with the Trustee-in-Trust for considerably above one million dollars. It is just as well for you to know that it is a financial impossibility for us to comply with all of those applications. Buildings cost today twice as much as they did a few years ago, so if a building that would cost $30,000 three or four years ago were erected now it would cost $60,000. In the past the Church has given ten thousand; today it is asked for thirty thousand, which is an increase of two hundred per cent. We can not possibly comply with all the requests, much as we would like to.

There has been appropriated for maintenance of meetinghouses in the various wards during last year $254,108.59; for stake tabernacles, $35,811.82; appropriations to the various stakes, $167,410.96; for wards throughout the Church, $444,763.60; for hospitals, $70,121.00; for temple maintenance and construction, $214,476.51; for the various missions, $420,359.88; in addition to money contributed in these missions. Expended for charity, $354,283.26. For education, the Church gave $722,353.83, and the applications now for our schools amount to over one million for the coming year. We can not reach all that is required, but we will do as much as we possibly can. The total amount that has been expended in the various stakes, wards and missions of the Church funds, for the year 1919 is $2,683,689.45.

I am reminded of the fact that in two more days we will be celebrating the 90th anniversary of the birth of the Church of Jesus Christ upon the earth in this last dispensation. Before the Church was organized there were a few people who believed in the vision that the prophet Joseph Smith had had as a boy, fourteen years of age. They also believed that he had been visited by heavenly messengers, that he had had years of instruction, and they believed beyond the shadow of a doubt, that he had in his possession the golden plates from which he was translating the Book of Mormon. They believed in the many revelations that God gave to him and which he wrote out and delivered to the few with whom he was associated prior to the organization of the Church. One of those revelations was to the prophet's father—it is brief and I will read it—given a little more than a year before the organization of the Church.

REVELATION TO THE PROPHET'S FATHER.

Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men;

Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day;

Therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work,

For behold the field is white already to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul;

And faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.

Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence.

Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you. (Doctrine and Covenants, Section 4.)

Truly a great and marvelous work has come forth and been proclaimed in every land and in every clime all over the wide world. The gospel of Jesus Christ has been restored—by a personal visitation of the apostles Peter, James and John, laying their hands upon the heads of Oliver Cowdery and the Prophet Joseph Smith and ordaining them to the apostleship; by a personal visitation of John the Baptist, who baptized the Savior, laying his hands upon Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith and ordaining them to the Aaronic, or the lesser priesthood—the gospel is again restored to the earth, with the power and authority that existed in the days of the Savior. Millions of dollars in money have been expended for erecting and maintaining temples wherein ordinances are performed for the salvation of those who have died without a knowledge of the gospel. All these things bear witness of the inspiration of God to that man Joseph Smith, when he delivered this statement in a revelation to his father, that a great and a marvelous work was about to come forth among the children of men.

TRIBUTE TO LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

The readiness, the willingness, the spirit of sacrifice among the Latter-day Saints are an inspiration to those not of our faith. I had intended to read here this morning some of the very splendid things that were said in the United States Senate regarding the Latter-day Saints by the senators from Nevada, from Colorado and from Arizona. I did not intend to read anything said by our own senator from Utah, but I rejoice when men not of our faith can bear the testimony that these men did, respecting the loyalty of our people.

[President Grant here read selections from the speeches of the senators referred to. The tributes, in full, however, including the speech of Senator Smoot, are here given]:

BY SENATOR SMOOT, OF UTAH.

Mr. Smoot. Mr. President, I am not going to occupy more than about 15 minutes of the time of the Senate.

For over 16 years I have paid no attention whatever to any of the false and malicious newspaper reports and statements made against the so-called "Mormon" Church. The only excuse that I have to offer for doing so at this time is that I have received a request from members of a number of the principal clubs of the State of Utah to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to certain false statements published in different newspapers throughout the United States.

First, I desire to call attention to an article that appeared in the New York World of October 22, under the date line of London, October 21. This same article, I will state, was published in many other newspapers throughout the United States. It is as follows:

"Girls, Mormon Converts, Want to Leave England.—Fully 1,200 of them, Says Authoress, Have Asked Passports so They Can go to Utah.

"London, October 21.

"Winifred Graham, the well-known English authoress, who has done much in this country to expose Mormonism, told the World correspondent today that fully 1,200 English girls have recently been persuaded by Mormon propagandists here to go to Utah. 'During the war,' she said, 'the Mormons made great headway in the United Kingdom. I hope the American authorities will prevent the departure of these girls for America. From reliable sources I learn that there are 1,200 of them anxious to sail immediately. Only last week one was bound over in a London police court for falsification of a passport in her efforts to go to Utah.'

"Winifred Graham is the pen name of Mrs. Theodore Cory. She sails on the Baltic October 29 as the British delegate to the World Citizenship Congress in Pittsburgh, which begins November 9. She will speak on Mormonism. Her anti-Mormon work here, she says, has caused her to be shadowed and threatened by the Mormons. United States consuls are on the lookout for any Mormon converts. Owing to the strict passport regulations there is little chance that any of these English girls will be able to sail. Some of the girls to whom passport visas were refused recently were suspected of being Mormon converts."

Mr. President, I thought the time had arrived when the newspapers of the country would cease publishing such rot. How easy it is for any newspaper to send a representative to the Bureau of Immigration and find out just the number of immigrants entering the United States going to the State of Utah for any year in the past, and also to find out the professions and occupation of the immigrants, and the different classification of each as provided by the department. If the newspaper doing so wants to publish the truth it would never publish such statements as I have just read.

I went to the department, upon my attention being called to the newspaper article and asked for a statement of the number of immigrants for Utah for the years of 1917, 1918, and 1919. The statistics taken from the annual report of the Commissioner General of Immigration show some interesting facts. I have taken the State of Utah and compared it with the State of Colorado and the following is the result:

| Profession. | Utah. | | | Colorado. | | |
| | 1917 | 1918 | 1919 | 1917 | 1918 | 1919 |
| Professional | 6 | 8 | () | 33 | 19 | () |
| Skilled laborers | 96 | 49 | () | 98 | 43 | () |
| Miscellaneous occupations | 501 | 202 | () | 448 | 185 | () |
| No occupation (including women and children)..... | 362 | 254 | () | 398 | 326 | () |
| Grand total of all immigrants..... | 965 | 513 | 588 | 977 | 573 | 738 |
| Total of immigrants from England..... | 118 | 48 | () | 136 | 56 | () |

*Figures not available.

The above table shows that the total number of immigrants with no occupation—including women and children—going to Utah was smaller on a percentage basis than the same class going to Colorado.

It also shows the percentage of English immigrants of the total which went to both states, the percentage being about the same.

Mr. President, the Commercial Club of Salt Lake City, the leading business club of the State of Utah, upon seeing this scurrilous article against the "Mormon" Church published throughout the United States, prepared and issued a statement, dated November 4, 1919, entitled "Refutation issued by the board of governors of the Commercial Club of Salt Lake City," which I desire to read, as follows:

A STATEMENT OF REFUTATION.

Issued by the Board of Governors of the Commercial Club, Salt Lake City.
The attention of the Salt Lake Commercial Club has been called to the appearance in newspapers in the United States, of a "syndicate article" bearing the date line of London, Eng., in some instances as "October 19", from the pen of one purporting to be George Selden, writer of the English metropolis, which is vicious, inconsistent and maliciously false in its accusations against the "Mormon" Church.

This article, sent broadcast through the United States, contains quotations credited to one Winifred Graham, to whom the article refers as a novelist, some of which are as follows:

"What is Mormonism doing in England? It works secretly as in America and snaps its fingers at law in both countries. This very minute the Church elders have twelve hundred girls ready for shipment to Utah.

"The Mormon Church pays the fares and offers excellent wages, but once it gets women over it uses them as it pleases. The war gave the Mormon elders their greatest opportunity for proselyting. In the absence of the men folk and because of the deaths of thousands of soldiers, the women of the poorer classes fell easy victims. Secret meetings were held in homes that attracted the neighborhood without attracting suspicion.

"Every girl is baptized. They then become silent about polygamy, but they become either polygamous wives or slaves of the Mormon Church. Occasionally we hear of girls who are slaving on Mormon farms."

The Commercial Club of Salt Lake City, Utah, through its duly constituted Board of Governors, hereby desires that it be known that it has taken cognizance of and read these statements, which it brands as being vicious in intent and so obviously inconsistent as to be their own refutation, and they are scandalous, pernicious and false.

The Commercial Club, in line with its activities from the time of its organization, is critically persistent and thorough in its survey of conditions relating to the interests of our commonwealth and is fully qualified by its knowledge of facts to thus brand these sensational stories as unmitigated falsehoods.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, commonly called the "Mormon" Church, is working in harmony with other institutions in Utah, ecclesiastical and civic, for the maintenance of the highest attainable standard of morality, and has made an enviable record in their accomplishment, as also in patriotic and devoted service to the country's needs.

This Commercial Club disavows and condemns, with disapprobation equally strong the circulated falsehoods of "Mormon" interference in State or National politics. The "Mormon" people exercise their political rights and preferences in common with their fellow-citizens who are not of their faith; and this Club unhesitatingly affirms that the stories alleging "Mormon" control of political parties in this State or elsewhere are but myths and fables, without even the merit of apparent consistency to excuse their periodical re-telling.

(Board of Governors)

Mr. President, I protest against the libelous press matter that has been published throughout the country, that the blatantly heralded announcement of the falsehoods an English writer of fiction has come here to tell. The Church has nothing to conceal. I want the people of the United States to know that as far as polygamy is concerned it is dead, and scandalmongers in the future must find some other hobby to ride.

All I ask is that the "Mormon" Church and its adherents be judged by the fruit of the tree. No one can examine the record made by that people during the World War without coming to the conclusion that no more loyal people live on this earth. No call was made upon them without an immediate response, and not only for the amount asked for but for nearly double the amount in most every case. They not only furnished their quota of soldiers but in some of the calls 100 and 200 per cent more.

Mr. President, I would not have taken the time of the Senate to make this short statement if it had not been requested of me. I will say: The signers of the statement of refutation are at least three-fourths non-members of the "Mormon" Church, and they are the leading business men of the State. It seems to me that the people of this country ought now to understand the true situation and if the "New York World" or the "New York American" desires to learn the truth about the "Mormon" people, I will gladly pay all expenses of a representative of either paper, if it desired to make an honest investigation.

I am a Senator of the United States. I represent all the people of Utah and not any church as such. I have never felt called upon to defend the "Mormon" Church against false attacks, because I felt that sooner or later the truth would be understood by all the people. I am not making this statement as a representative of the "Mormon" Church but as a United States Senator.

The "Mormon" Church has been foully misrepresented from many sources in the past. I confidently look forward to the day when the "Mormon" people will be known as they are and not as represented.

BY SENATOR ASHURST, OF ARIZONA.

Mr. Ashurst. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] has spoken as he has. It was time for such a speech. A matchless maker of epigrams said that when "once a lie or a counterfeit statement gets into circulation it is well-nigh impossible to overtake it", and therefore I believe the Senator has done a service to his country in exposing this infamous slander, which has been published broadcast against so many worthy people.

When I read the article, I felt offended because there are in Arizona a large number of "Mormon" people, or people who belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; and I would be false to that principle of fair play for which I have always pretended that I stood if I failed at this time to say a word on the subject.

It may be true that I do not understand fully the theology of the "Mormon" Church; but, Mr. President, the first church I ever attended was a "Mormon" Church. When there was no other church within 100 miles of the lonely frontier cabin where my parents lived, we found solace and comfort in attending the "Mormon" Church situated 9 miles distant. Our nearest—in fact, our only—neighbors for years were the "Mormon" people. Better neighbors no pioneer ever had. I am proud of the "Mormon" people. I am proud of the friendship that I have for them, and that I believe they have for me; and while, as I said before, I do not completely understand their theology, I am able to say here, in the Senate of the United States, that their church has elevated many intellects and purified many hearts in my State.

As pioneers in a new country, the "Mormons" are unrivaled. They are sober, industrious, frugal, honest. They are pre-eminently state builders; and today, if called upon to name a people who could most expeditiously transform a desert of swirling and heated sands into splendid fields and farms, I would unhesitatingly choose the "Mormon" people. In many places where once cacti lifted their thorny arms into the brazen and heated air, "Mormon" industry has reared temples, hospitals, homes, factories, and schools.

Moreover, I never saw a "Mormon" I. W. W.; but I have, at some county courthouses in my State, heard disgruntled, lazy, and indolent men who did not belong to the "Mormon" Church, sit on the steps of the courthouse and curse the Government and curse the President, while "Mormon" citizens were going into the same county courthouse to pay taxes without complaint.

Mr. Owen. Mr. President——

Mr. Ashurst. I yield for a question.

Mr. Owen. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a tenet of the "Mormons" to teach and preach industry and thrift?

Mr. Ashurst. I am able to state that industry and thrift are amongst the foundation stones of the "Mormon" Church. Absolute and unquestioned obedience to law is a tenet of the "Mormon" Church. Respect for authority is one of the tenets of the "Mormon" Church. We need more of such people in these perilous times of the Republic; and again I would be false to every principle of justice and to every sentiment of gratitude if I failed to state at this time that when savage Indians galloped along by our pioneer homes, burning and murdering, plundering and scalping as they went, it was to the "Mormon" people that my defenseless but heroic parents went for refuge and defense.

So, Mr. President, I say the Senator from Utah has done well in "scotching" this falsehood, which has been given such wide circulation. I believe the American people are coming at last fully to understand the "Mormon" people. Their temples, schools, fields, homes, industry, frugality, their morality and their patriotism testify for them in more eloquent terms than the Senator or I could speak. Then, again, observe their Representatives in the House and in the Senate. Look at the high class of public servants they send here. I ask that the "Mormons" be judged as a people, judged as a religion, as the Senator says, by their fruits; and if they be judged by their fruits the verdict of the world will be in their favor.

It seems to me that the time should be welcomed in America when men shall not further be assailed because of their religion or lack of religion. Men ought not further to be assailed or discriminated against because of their particular view of how to follow the Master. America was built up, and one of the reasons why the migrations came from the old countries to these shores was that our ancestors desired to find a place to build free and strong states where such ignoble sentiments as bigotry could not survive.

Mr. President, I do not forget that this splendid domain of Arizona, one of the imperial states of this Union, came into being largely through the brave exploits of the "Mormon" people. When General Stephen Kearny was beleaguered near San Diego during the Mexican War, and it seemed as if the Mexicans were going to capture and annihilate him and his entire command, it was the "Mormon" battalion that marched all the long way from Iowa into Tucson, Arizona, and occupied in Mexican territory a domain we now know as the Gadsden Purchase, which was purchased by our Government in 1854. When the commanding officer, Lieut. Col. St. George Cooke, entered the Mexican town of Tucson and raised the American flag, he issued a pronunciamiento, and I wish the German outragers had read that document before they invaded Belgium. The lieutenant colonel entering the city of Tucson, nearly 1,500 miles from civilization, said in his manifesto to the people of Mexico:

"We do not war upon civilians. We make war against men in uniform only. The property of individuals will be held sacred. All civil rights will be upheld. Those who obey the law and conform to order will be protected."

The command remained there some days to refresh itself and then marched on to the relief of General Kearny, who, as I said, was beleaguered and surrounded near San Diego.

So, Mr. President, the "Mormon" people, as pioneers, as state-builders, as statesmen, as people of industry and patriotism, in every department of life, compare well and favorably with the general mass of their fellow citizens. This much I feel I should have said; more than that I need not say.

BY SENATOR THOMAS, OF COLORADO.

Mr. Thomas. Mr. President, I am not and never have been a communicant of any church, and if I live to be as old again as I am now, I would not change. In my youth I was greatly impressed with a remark of Gibbon, that "all religions are to the vulgar equally true, to the philosopher equally false, and to the statesman equally useful," and the experience of mature years has served to deepen the impression. I have never been able to reconcile the tenets and doctrines of all religious faiths with that spirit of persecution and fanaticism they develop toward each other, and which has so many times culminated in destructive and decimating wars. I believe in religious toleration, without any conditions whatever, except those required by the tenets of morality and of law and order. Hence I have remained aloof from identification with any faith.

Up to this time I have never found occasion to publicly defend the "Mormon" people, because it has not seemed necessary; but I can not allow the occasion to pass without paying tribute to their morality and usefulness, not only to their own communities, but as exemplars to the whole country in perilous times like these.

Mr. President, when respect for the law is the exception and not the rule, when the different forces of society are so antagonistic that the political structure is menaced with danger, it is refreshing to note that the adherents of this faith have at all times been the advocates and the exponents of peace, of justice, of law, and of order; and however just the criticisms aimed against former institutions, the fact remains, as established by more than half a century of practice, that the communities professing the "Mormon" faith are among the best and highest exemplars of American citizenship.

During the war there was much disloyalty in America.. Scarcely any commonwealth was entirely free from it. During the war resistance to the draft occasionally punctuated our dispatches, and the expression of toleration or friendliness to the enemy was one of the commonest of occurrences. But during that critical period upon no occasion which I can remember did the people of Utah, "Mormon" and Gentile, fail to whole-heartedly, loyally, and enthusiastically respond to every call made by the Government for soldiers or for money. Not in a single instance did this people falter. Their splendid youth were given freely to our armies, and the blood of their boys sanctifies the soil of every battle field in France.

Every loan drive was responded to, not by the quota, but far beyond it, and in everything that contributed to good citizenship, to patriotism, to loyalty, and to love of country, these people were ever conspicuous; and it is due to them, as one of the representatives from a neighboring state wherein many of these people are located, and are among our best citizens, that I should say so.

We have not many "Mormons" in the State of Colorado. Some years ago a settlement was established in what is known as the San Luis Valley. It has grown, it has flourished, it is prosperous. Its people are law-abiding, they are industrious, they are hard working, they pay their debts, they obey and support the authorities. Bolshevism, anarchism, and socialism are foreign to the atmosphere of that community. They can not take root in such a soil.

These people are today, therefore, one of the pillars of the social, economic, and political systems of the country, whose removal might imperil the entire structure of our social, economic, and political life. Their faith I am not concerned with; their character and their achievements are a credit to them and an incalculable benefit to the country.

BY SENATOR HENDERSON, OF NEVADA.

Mr. Henderson. Mr. President, I wish to express my approval of and join in all that has been said by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Thomas] relative to those of the "Mormon" faith. We have in eastern Nevada a number of "Mormon" settlements. I have visited a number of them. I wish to say that there are no better citizens in the country than those of that faith. In one community that I know of, established over 40 years ago, there has never been a jail. I believe that is true of the others. These people never have any use for jails. Where they go, law and order prevail, and thrift and economy are taught and practiced.

Mr. President, the record of the "Mormon" people, throughout the war has been without a blemish. Their sons were amongst the first to enlist and their quota was quickly filled. They oversubscribed their proportion of Liberty bonds. Their patriotism has been of the highest order and without question.

There is much that can be said in their favor, Mr. President, but I shall not detain the Senate longer, as there are some Senators waiting to address the Senate on the proposed reservation to article 10. I am glad, however, of the opportunity to express my disapproval of the attack directed against the "Mormons" referred to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot].

I thank the Lord that these Senators can truthfully pay such tributes to our people.

I wish to lift my voice and to warn every member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints against the destruction of the property of any man, of any corporation or of any city in these United States of America.

LATTER-DAY SAINTS WORK AGAINST DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY.

Property is the fruit of labor; property is desirable, it is a positive good in the world; that some should be rich shows that others may become rich and hence is just encouragement to industry and enterprise. Let not him who is houseless pull down the house of another, but let him work diligently and build one for himself, thus by example assuring that his own shall be safe from violence when built."—Abraham Lincoln.

There is an evil rampant, at the present time, among some who are teaching that it is justifiable to destroy property, and even to destroy life in trying to accomplish their purposes, and I desire to lift my voice, with all the ability and with all the power with which God has endowed me, against anything of this kind. I have been criticized and letters have been written to me by professed Latter-day Saints, finding fault with my remarks at the last conference, about upholding the law; and the only answer that I desire to give to these criticisms, as I have not taken the time to answer the letters, is to read again the identical words that I delivered when I stood here before you six months ago. They were not premeditated or thought out and I have concluded that I could not do any better than to read them, word for word, and say they are my sentiments today;

MUST RESPECT RIGHTS OF OTHERS.

As Latter-day Saints we have what is known as The Articles of Faith, and one of them reads: "We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law," and no Latter-day Saint can in very deed be a Latter-day Saints if he does not honor and sustain and uphold the law. Nearly all over the world, at the present time there is a spirit of lawlessness, a spirit of ridicule, and a lack of respect for the men who hold positions.

I want to say that I am perfectly willing that men shall join labor unions, that they shall band together for the purpose of protecting their rights, provided they do not interfere with the rights of other people. Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness belong to all people in the United States, according to the laws of our country, and should, upon all the face of the earth; and I say that, to my mind, a provision in a labor union is all wrong that favors boycotting and the laying down of tools or the quitting of employment because a non-union man obtains employment while exercising his God-given right to stay out of a union. Men who have that kind of a rule have a rule that is in direct opposition to the laws of God. There was a battle fought in heaven—for what? To give to man his individual liberty. An attempt to take the agency of man away is made when he does not see fit to join a union, and when men in that union, without any complaint or grievance, strike because a non-union man is employed.

Now, I'd better not say any more, perhaps, on this question, or I may offend somebody, I may hurt somebody's feelings; but it is the God-given right of men to earn their livelihood. The Savior said it was the first great law or commandment to love the Lord with all our hearts, and that the second was like unto it, to love thy neighbor as thyself. That is the doctrine for every true Latter-day Saint. How much love is there in starving your neighbor because he will not surrender his manhood and his individuality, and allow a labor union to direct his labor? Mighty little love, mighty little of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in any such a rule! I hope to see the day when no Latter-day Saint will join a union unless the union eliminate that clause from its rules. I am not going to ask them to leave their union. I am not going to lay it down that they must, that it is the mind and the will of the Lord for them to leave a union. I want, as I said here two weeks ago, to give every man his free agency, to give every man the right to act as he thinks proper, but I cannot see how a Latter-day Saint who is a member of such a union can get down on his knees and pray for God to inspire and bless him, to bless the Saints and to protect them and then be a party to allowing one of his own brethren to go, year after year, without employment, because that brother will not surrender his manhood and join a union with him. There is none of the Spirit of the Lord in that, to my mind. That is exactly the way I see it.

I desire, as stated, to emphasize and re-emphasize those statements delivered here six months ago. I believe that it is the absolute right of men to combine together for their protection, for their advancement, for their welfare in unions, but as stated here, I deprecate the idea of their undertaking to dictate to those who will not join them. I believe this is all I desire to say upon that subject.

PROGRESS IN THE MISSIONS.

Since we last met here, it has fallen to my lot to hold meetings in the Central States Mission, in the Eastern States Mission, in the Canadian Mission, and three times in various parts of the California Mission. It has fallen to my lot to visit the capital of our Union and to hold a meeting there. It has fallen to my lot to visit some of the stakes of Zion, especially two in Arizona, the Maricopa and the St. Joseph stakes, and to hold a meeting in the capital of Arizona. I wish to say that I rejoice in the wonderful change of sentiment regarding the Latter-day Saints that has come to people wherever I have met with them during the past six months. In addition to these visits I have had the privilege of visiting the Hawaiian Islands, with some of the brethren of the general authorities, and of dedicating there to the Lord one more temple for holy ordinances for the salvation of the dead. And I want to bear witness to the Latter-day Saints that there was, with our small party on that trip to the Hawaiian Islands, in the dedication of that temple, in the various services that were held there, lasting for a number of days, the inspiration of the Lord God Almighty, and that we were blessed abundantly, beyond our power to tell. There is something that no mortal tongue can tell, when an individual realizes and knows that while proclaiming the gospel of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ he has been blessed by the inspiration of the Lord; and that was our experience in dedicating another temple to the Lord in that far-off land. The Hawaiian people have a dark skin, but their hearts are white, their loyalty to God is perfect, and the Lord Almighty has abundantly blessed many of that people by giving to them an absolute knowledge of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged.

RESPECT GROWING FOR OUR CHURCH.

I am thankful that wherever I have traveled during the past six months I have found a feeling of respect, a feeling of love in the hearts of many for the Latter-day Saints, in the hearts of those not of our faith. I heard many very splendid compliments while in Washington by members of the president's cabinet, by senators and representatives, and by officials of the government in the Federal Reserve banking departments, and in others, wherever I went, and with all the people that I met, bankers in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and other cities, I heard good things said of the Latter-day Saints; we are coming into our own, so to speak. Our character is becoming known, and no longer can men lie about the Latter-day Saints, or women either, and get away with the lies with the great majority of the people in our country.

While our reputation has been bad, this reputation has come to us, how? Because of the lies, as a rule, by men who have been excommunicated from this Church. No loyal, patriotic American citizen wants the people of our country to be judged by the Benedict Arnolds that the country has produced; but the men of America desire that our country shall be judged by its achievements, by the men who have been loyal to that God-inspired instrument, the Constitution of our country. All we ask of any people upon the face of the earth is that they shall judge the Latter-day Saints by Joseph Smith, the prophet of the living God, by the record that he made in the few short years that he stood at the head of the Church. The Church was organized in 1830, 90 years ago, and he presided over it for only 14 years. The accomplishments of those 14 years under his administration, what he did, and what he left to the Church in the wonderful revelations that he gave to us, in the translating of the Book of Mormon, that sacred Scripture of the forefathers of the American Indian, and the wonderful labors that he performed, these stand as a monument stamping him, in very deed, a prophet of the living God. No man without the inspiration of God, in 14 short years, could have accomplished what Joseph Smith did; could have laid the foundation of this great work to which you and I belong. And as the years come and go, men are beginning to recognize the greatness of the labor he performed.

MAKE SACRIFICES FOR GOSPEL.

I remember as a boy that I borrowed a book from the Thirteenth ward Sunday School library; it was on the evidences of Christianity by Dr. Paley, and I remember among other things, in that book, that he stated that the strongest evidence of the divine mission of the Savior of the world was the absolute loyalty of those who embraced Christianity, and their willingness to lay down their lives, if need be, for the testimony that they possessed of the divine mission of the Savior. I remember thinking as a boy: If that is the strongest evidence, of men being willing to lay down their lives and to voluntarily make sacrifices and to stand up under persecution, then that same identical evidence applies to the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The Latter-day Saints were driven from city to city, county to county, state to state, and finally beyond the confines of the United States to the Rocky Mountains, then Mexican territory. They could have had immunity, they could have dwelt in peace, had they renounced their faith; but our fathers and our mothers had received the witness of the Holy Spirit and they knew that Jesus was the Savior, they knew that Joseph Smith was in very deed a prophet of God. The Lord Almighty had implanted in their hearts a knowledge that God did, one hundred years ago this spring, appear to a boy; that he did speak to that boy; and that when the boy asked of our Father in Heaven, "Which of all the religious denominations in the world is the true Church of Christ?" in answer to that question our God and our Father pointed to the Savior of the world and said: "This is my beloved Son, hear Him." The Savior of the world told that boy to join none of the sects, that they had all gone astray, that they were teaching for doctrine the ideas and the commandments of men, and that they did not have the true Church of Christ. When that boy returned from that wonderful and marvelous vision, the greatest event in all the history of the world, excepting only the birth and death of the Savior, his mother saw that there was something strange about his appearance and asked him some questions; and he simply answered, in substance, and said to his mother (who was a Presbyterian): "Mother, there is one thing I know now, and that is that the Presbyterian church is not the Church of Christ."

When he related his vision to ministers and others the boy was ridiculed.

Three years later an angel of God appeared and told him there was buried in the hill Cumorah some golden plates containing a record, a sacred record of the forefathers of the American Indian, and that he should be the instrument in the hands of God of translating those plates. The angel gave him many wonderful instructions and quoted much Scripture to him; then disappeared. He returned and repeated his instructions and disappeared. He returned again and repeated those instructions, the three visitations occupying the entire night. The next day when that boy went to his work in the field with his father, having had no rest during the night, his father saw that he was not feeling well and told him to go home; and as he was climbing a fence he fainted, but he was aroused from his faint by the voice of the messenger who for the fourth time repeated all that he had said during the previous night, and told him to go back to his father and tell his father all that he had heard and seen. This he did, and the boy's father answered: "This is of God. Listen to the teachings of the angel." The boy visited the hill Cumorah; he saw the plates and was instructed by the messenger to come there once a year for four years, to be instructed by that angel of God, regarding the great and marvelous work that was to come forth in the last days. At the end of four years the plates containing the record were delivered to him by the angel Moroni. He translated those plates, and the translation is the Book of Mormon.

VAST MULTITUDE HAVE TESTIMONY.

O but, says one, I don't believe a word of it. There are thousands, there are tens of thousands of men and women, from the midnight sun country in Scandinavia to South Africa, all over Europe, from Canada to South America, in every state of the Union of the United States, upon the islands of the Pacific, who stand up and in all humility bear witness before high heaven that God has given to them a knowledge that Joseph Smith did see him, that Joseph Smith did see the Savior of the world, that Joseph Smith was visited by angels of God, that he was ordained to the apostleship, that he did in very deed commune with the Savior of the world, that he was a prophet of the living God. All the non-belief, all the lack of faith of all the people in all the world cannot change that fact, if it be a fact, and God has given many of us a knowledge, an absolute knowledge that it is a fact, that Joseph Smith was a prophet and that this Gospel, called by the world "Mormonism," is in very deed the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

TESTIMONY OF PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH.

I want to read one of the latest testimonies regarding the divinity of this gospel, given from this stand by our late beloved Prophet, Joseph F. Smith, as to where divine authority exists today:

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is no partisan church. It is not a sect. It is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is the only one today existing in the world that can and does legitimately bear the name of Jesus Christ and his divine authority. I make this declaration in all simplicity and honesty before you and before all the world, bitter as the truth may seem to those who are opposed and who have no reason for that opposition. It is nevertheless true and will remain true until he who has a right to rule among the nations of the earth and among the individual children of God throughout the world shall come and take the reins of government and receive the bride that shall be prepared for the coming of the Bridegroom.

Many of our great writers have recently been querying and wondering where the divine authority exists today to command in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, so that it will be in effect and acceptable at the throne of the Eternal Father. I will announce here and now, presumptuous as it may seem to be to those who know not the truth, that the divine authority of Almighty God, to speak in the name of the Father and of the Son, is here in the midst of these everlasting hills, in the midst of this intermountain region, and it will abide and will continue, for God is its source, and God is the power by which it has been maintained against all opposition in the world up to the present, and by which it will continue to progress and grow and increase on the earth until it shall cover the earth from sea to sea. This is my testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, and I have a fulness of joy and of satisfaction in being able to declare this without regard to, or fear of, all the adversaries of the truth.

We heard sung here three verses of the hymn, "O, say what is truth?" and I request that in the future the choir sing all four verses, and not omit the last.

OH, SAY, WHAT IS TRUTH?

O, say, what is truth? 'Tis the fairest gem
That the riches of worlds can produce
And priceless the value of truth will be,
When the proud monarch's costliest diadem
Is counted but dross and refuse.

Yes, say what is truth? 'Tis the brightest prize
To which mortals or Gods can aspire:
Go search in the depths where it flittering lies,
Or ascend in pursuit to the loftiest skies:
'Tis an aim for the noblest desire.

The scepter may fall from the despot's grasp,
When with winds of stern justice he copes;
But the pillar of truth will endure to the last,
And its firm-rooted bulwarks outstand the rude blast
And the wreck of the fell tyrant's hopes.

Then, say, what is truth? 'Tis the last and the first,
For the limits of time it steps o'er:
Though the heavens depart and the earth's fountains burst,
Truth, the sum of existence, will weather the worst,
Eternal, unchanged, evermore.

CLOSING TESTIMONY.

And I bear witness to you here today that we have the truth, that God has spoken again, that every gift, every grace, every power, and every endowment that came through the Holy Priesthood of the living God in the days of the Savior, are enjoyed today. God lives, Jesus is the Christ, Joseph Smith was a prophet of the true and the living God. "Mormonism," so called, is in very deed the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. God has given me a witness of these things. I know them and I bear that witness to you, in all humility, and I do it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah." Three verses were sung and President Heber J. Grant stated that hereafter he would like to have the fourth verse sung by the choir whenever sung in his presence. He then read the last verse of the hymn.

PRESIDENT ANTHON H. LUND

I hope that the remarks I shall make can be heard by you. I know you are all able to hear our President, and we all rejoiced in the strong testimony that he bore of the truth of the gospel as revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith. I felt thankful that in my heart I could say "Amen" to that testimony.

THE, LATTER-DAY SAINTS NOT RECOGNIZED BY THE WORLD AS CHRISTIANS.

Ever since I can remember, almost, I have had a testimony of the truth of that which the world calls "Mormonism." I know it is the gospel of Jesus Christ and I know that men upon the earth hold the power of the holy Priesthood, which enables them to perform the ordinances that are given for the salvation of men. How thankful we ought to be that the Lord has given us this knowledge concerning his will and what he wishes us to do. We have not been recognized by the world as being a Christian people; but we do claim that if there be any people upon the earth who believe in Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world, it is the Latter-day Saints. How strange it is, when men have read our articles of faith, that they can believe that the "Mormons" are not Christians! When I say "Christians" I mean those who believe in Jesus Christ.

THE SAINTS BELIEVE SINCERELY IN JESUS CHRIST AND TRY TO OBEY THE COMMANDMENTS OF GOD.

We know that he is the Son of God; we believe in him as the Redeemer of the world and as the Savior of mankind. That we are not Christians is held by the world. In their so-called Christian conventions, they do not wish to hear anything from us. Notwithstanding the fact that they did admit heathens, or men not believing in God, to come and give their religious beliefs to the Convention of Religions, yet they were not willing that we should explain our belief. However, we are trying to reach the hearts of the people. Our missionaries go out by the hundreds and thousands into the world. They seek to reach the people; they go from door to door, patiently enduring the mocking remarks that are made concerning them; and yet they are always willing to explain what the Lord has given them, and to declare the message which they have for all mankind.

We, brethren and sisters, have received the gospel, and all of us ought to feel that we owe the duty to our heavenly Father and to our fellow men to make known unto them what the Lord has shown us. We must be careful to so live that the Spirit of the Lord is alive within us. We must try to live according to the commandments that our heavenly Father has given us. We know that they are for the betterment of men.

I was pleased to read the remarks of Senator Ashurst and others in the Senate of the United States. I know that what they said concerning this people is true. They knew the truth of these things, and they were brave enough, in spite of the opposition of the world, to speak as they did regarding the Latter-day Saints. There are many others who believe the same, but are afraid to bear their testimony of what they know. I pity such; but I honor those who are brave enough to express what they know to be true concerning a people, even if that people should be like the people of old that Paul tells us "were everywhere spoken against." If they will search and investigate, they will find that the Latter-day Saints, as a people, try to live their religion, and to keep the commandments of God, that they are prayerful and try to seek the Lord early and late to obtain power and strength from him to carry out that which they know to be right.

THE SAINTS ENJOINED TO ATTEND SACRAMENTAL MEETINGS.

During the past year we have had much to be grateful for. We are especially thankful to know that the people are living their religion and are showing in their works that they are in earnest. If I should find any fault with our people, it is this, that they should be more attentive to quorum meetings of the Priesthood and to sacrament meetings. In some places there can be but little fault found; while in others, there seems to be some carelessness about attending our meetings. Now, brethren and sisters, we cannot develop in godliness without going to the meetings. We should be present to hear the servants of God and to partake of the Sacrament of the Lord, and renew our covenants with him, showing that we are willing to take upon us his name and keep his commandments. It gives us strength to do so; but by staying away from sacrament meetings, we gradually grow careless, and we think that we cannot be edified by attending them. Do not go to meeting just because a good speaker is going to talk, but go to the meetings as the Lord has commanded that on the Sabbath day we should go to the house of prayer and offer our oblations to the Almighty. Do not let us be lacking in this nor in other duties.

THE LORD BLESSES THOSE WHO PAY AN HONEST TITHING.

You heard how much had been expended last year for different things to uphold the work of the Church. This shows that the Saints have attended to the duty of paying their tithing. There are those, however, who ought to be encouraged to obey that law more strictly than they do. We honor those who are honest with the Lord, who pay their tithing which they owe unto him. Those who do so will feel blessed. They are not the ones who complain of how the tithing is spent, but they feel blessed in paying a tenth as the tithing of their income, knowing that the Lord sees what they are doing, and knows their hearts, and they will receive their reward for so doing. We would like to encourage all to obey this law, whether they owe a few cents or many dollars. They should remember the law of tithing and remember that the Lord blesses those who pay an honest tithing, be it little or much.

WARNING AGAINST FOLLOWING FALSE TEACHERS.

There are some who think they are in advance of the rest of the people, and they are trying to strike out in certain different courses. I would like to say to the Latter-day Saints: Let no one deceive you, let no one draw you away from the pale of the Church; for within it there are the servants of the Lord who have been authorized to administer unto you and to perform the ordinances of the gospel. You will not find that authority outside of the Church. If one pretends that he is the one "great and mighty," or that he has power to start a new church to improve on this, examine carefully before you take a step away from the Church. You will not be happy if you follow such men. True happiness will come to you if you keep the covenants which you have made with the Lord. The covenants that we have made, at the time we were baptized, in holy places, are all for our good to help us to come nearer to the Lord and to know his will. As we have made covenants to do his will, let us not forget what we have promised to do. There is a joy in knowing that we are fulfilling our duty, and there is sorrow in our hearts when we feel that we are not doing it. Of course, by continuing in negligence, our conscience may not smite us so much as at first; but let us all listen to that monitor which the Lord has given us; listen to the whisperings of the Holy Spirit and try to so live that we may feel, by the Spirit of God that we are acceptable in the sight of the Lord.

THOUGHTS ON THE FIRST VISION AND WHAT FOLLOWED.

There has been some reference here today to the first vision of the Prophet Joseph, which we look upon as the dawn of this last dispensation, the dispensation of the fulness of times. It was indeed the beginning, the very initiating of this work; and the Lord chose an instrument, not learned and educated, but a man who was willing to do that which he should be commanded to do. He had full faith in the Lord and was ever ready to offer himself and his time for the upbuilding of this work. We just sang a beautiful hymn about him. He did accomplish a great work during the short time that was given him to live, after the Church was organized and those years preceding the organization of the Church. How much we rejoice to read what he did! He was poor, he had to work for his living, and yet the great task of translating the Book of Mormon was given unto him. Some have thought: "Well now, the Lord owns everything; why did he not bestow enough upon the Prophet so that he could do his work more easily?" Not so; the Lord gave him a task to do and he gave him his Spirit also that he might have strength to do it. He raised up friends to the Prophet who were willing to help, even with their temporal means—such a man as Martin Harris, such men as David Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery. They came to his help before the Church was organized. Full of faith, they were willing to assist him, and with this help, the Prophet was enabled to translate those ancient writings and to publish the Book of Mormon unto the world. Many have studied that book and have tried to find some fault with it. Now, in reading it, we see that it covers a period of about a thousand years, relating to the Lamanites and Nephites, and a much longer time to those who left the Tower of Babel, the people of Jared and his brother. Yet by the search of critics they have not been able to find any anachronism or wrong time in its chronology. The whole book is a unit, although it was written by a number of writers. They were inspired by the Lord, as were those who wrote the holy Scriptures, called the Bible. The holy Scriptures called the Book of Mormon were written by different men, prophets of the Lord, and they were all true men. The book is a unit as to doctrine and as to the spirit that goes through it.

I have referred to the men who helped the Prophet Joseph. They bore a strong testimony concerning the truth of that book. They knew they had seen the engravings that were on the plates. They knew that they were translated correctly, because a voice from heaven had so declared, and an angel from heaven had shown these things unto them. After that these men could not say that Joseph Smith had deceived them. They knew for themselves that the testimony which now appears in the front of the book was true. Notwithstanding the fact that these men became careless, and some fell into transgression and were cut off from the Church, yet they continued to bear a truthful testimony of what they had written in that book. Two of them came back into the Church.

One of them, David Whitmer, remained outside of the Church until his death; but hundreds of visitors came to him, knowing that he was not what they called a "Mormon;" that is, that he did not belong to the Church, and they thought they would get what they desired as the truth from him; but he was always ready to bear the testimony that he saw the plates, and even on his death bed he bore that testimony.

Martin Harris, we know, came here and from this stand has borne his testimony to the truth of the translation of the Book of Mormon from ancient plates.

Oliver Cowdery came to the Church when it was at its lowest ebb, I may say, when it looked as if the Church was not able to continue as a Church; for the people had been driven into the wilderness, and several divisions had taken place and members had been scattered; but he came to the little branch at Council Bluffs and asked simply that he might become a member of the Church. He did not join the Church to become a leading member in it or to hold a big office. He came because he did not dare to die outside of the pale of the Church, and he did not live many months afterward. But he bore the testimony to that congregation that the gospel is true, that he had seen angels, that Joseph and he had been ordained to the Priesthood, both the Aaronic and the Melchizedek Priesthood. This testimony he bore to them and he asked forgiveness for the past and, like any other member who had been excommunicated, he asked, penitently that he might come into the Church and become a member with the rest of them.

While, as it has been said, three of the witnesses left the Church, yet they always bore that faithful testimony that the Book of Mormon was true. They had helped in the translation and in the publishing of the book, and it is before the world. Oh, how many glorious truths it contains! It is indeed an inspired work, and what the Prophet Joseph received and gave unto us we all bear the testimony is true; and while some people may have thought they were new doctrines, because they were not understood by the world, we have found them to be true principles, and since that time we have proved them to be such.

THE SECOND VISION AND VICARIOUS WORK FOR THE DEAD.

At the second vision that the Prophet Joseph received, when the angel Moroni came to him and told him about the Book of Mormon, or rather the plates that were concealed in the Hill Cumorah, he also told him things that Joseph, perhaps, could not fully understand; and, in order, that the young man might not forget what he was told, the angel repeated them three times, spending the whole night with him. Among the things that were revealed to him was the principle of vicarious work for the dead, and the principle of the gathering of the people, principles of our Church that are unique to it. These were given by the angel Moroni. He also read from the book of Malachi about the hearts of children being turned to their fathers, and the fathers' hearts to the children. He read to him the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, which refers to the gathering; and other principles he explained to the young man. Today we have heard read how much has been given for temples and for temple buildings, and this shows that the Latter-day Saints believe in the principle revealed to the Prophet Joseph as early as 1823. And just before his death, how interested he was in this work! He saw the great necessity that there was for the Saints to turn their hearts to the fathers, so as to avoid the curse that otherwise would come upon the earth. We have felt this today. We have gone into the temples, we have labored for our dead and we have had the witness in our souls that the Lord accepted of the work. Many people have told me what they have heard and seen in the temples. Names have been given to them of persons they had forgotten, who wanted their work done. How interested the people have been in searching for their genealogies! We must thank the genealogists of the world also, because they have come to our help. They have spent a great deal of money in publishing genealogies, especially here in the United States; also in England. They have begun the same work in other countries, too. The spirit is upon them; their hearts are turning to their fathers. I know they do not believe in the necessity of doing work for them, but we believe that it is a necessity; and it is a joy and blessing to us to do this.

THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST.

Today we celebrate the resurrection of our Savior. This is indeed one of the most hope-inspiring events that ever took place. Men have believed in life after death, but the real truth that there is such a thing as a resurrection was given by our Savior. The testimony has come to us that many saw him after he was resurrected. Some have argued that the resurrection is not possible; that we have never seen a person who has come back to us from another world, nor have we seen any who has seen such a person, and they argue that, therefore, it cannot be possible that anybody was ever resurrected.

Now, if we are to judge only by what we have experienced ourselves, I fear our knowing would be very small. We take the sayings of men, the writings of men and we believe what they have said and written. By this means we have extended our field of knowledge. It would be a very narrow conception to argue that things that we have not seen cannot be true. We have the testimony of twelve men who saw the Savior after his resurrection. We have the testimony that five hundred men beheld him at one time. Ten times he was seen after his resurrection. His apostles and disciples felt very down-hearted when they saw that he suffered death on the cross; but they rejoiced when the testimony came to them that he was risen, and especially when they saw him, when they could feel of him and listen to his words. These men went out into the world preaching Christ and him crucified. They were not afraid to bear that testimony to the world. You might say that twelve men could conspire to tell a lie, but we have never heard of a number of men doing so, when they were promised only martyrdom and no honor among the people, also that they should be brought up before judges, and be jailed and scourged for their testimonies—you have never heard of men conspiring together with such a future before them, if that which they declared was not true. But they knew it was true. Peter, though he did falter once and denied the Savior, was still a brave man. He never faltered after Jesus had given him the mission to look after the Saints, to feed his lambs and sheep. More than thirty years he continued to labor and all the time knowing that Jesus had told him how he should die; that he would have to suffer martyrdom. He did not say it in those words, but he told him that another should gird him and carry him whither he would not. He alluded to the death which Peter would suffer. When it came to the real point, Peter went gladly, only he said at the very last moment, according to the legend, that he was not worthy to die as the Savior had died on the cross, and he asked that he might be crucified with his head down. Of course, this is a legendary story that has come to us, but it shows us that he suffered death; and his life was given as a witness of the truth that he had proclaimed all the way through.

Paul had been a persecutor of the Saints, but was converted by the vision of the Savior on the way to Damascus; he knew then that Jesus of Nazareth, the man who had been crucified, was indeed the Son of God, and he bravely continued his labors until at last he too gave his life in defense of the truth. These men saw the Savior. Thomas, the doubter, was not willing to take the testimony of his brethren, the apostles; but Jesus appeared where he was and told him to feel of the wounds. Then Thomas declared that he was the Lord. He was willing then to believe. Jesus gave him a gentle rebuke by saying: "Blessed are those who believe, though they have not seen."

We believe many things that we have not seen, many things that have come to us by the Spirit of God, and they have been made as plain to us as knowledge obtained by our five senses could be. We have received, by the Spirit witnessing to our spirit, the truth of these heavenly things that have been given to us.

THE SAINTS WARNED TO BE FAITHFUL TO THE END.

Brethren and sisters, let us continue to be faithful, whatever it shall cost. Remember the long eternity before us, and that by being faithful in keeping the Lord's commandments and keeping our covenants, the celestial glory will be obtainable by us. Let us not forfeit the great opportunity the Lord has given us, but remember that he sees us; we walk as in his sight, and he knows us. We cannot deceive him. Let us walk honestly and uprightly before him and then, brethren and sisters, I know that the great object for which we are striving shall be obtained by us—an entrance into the celestial kingdom and a return to our heavenly Father will be our lot. God bless you all. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

There is so little time left that we will not impose on anyone of our speakers by asking him to try to concentrate his thoughts and condense his remarks to occupy the few minutes that remain. Perhaps

I can overrun the time myself without creating much criticism, so I will take the time and a few minutes beyond.

THE "ERA" AND "THE VISION" BY EVAN STEPHENS ENDORSED.

I hold in my hand the last issue of the Improvement Era. I read it, from cover to cover, before it was printed, when it was in proof sheet form. I am very grateful to the men and women who have written for this number, every article of which refers to the vision given to the Prophet Joseph. The words of the sacred historical cantata entitled "The Vision," written by Professor Evan Stephens, which will be sung here tomorrow night is also recorded in this number. I have requested the Deseret News to print ten thousand extra copies of this issue of the Era. I think that every person who believes in that wonderful vision ought to get this number of the Era.

IN MEMORY OF RICHARD W. YOUNG.

As announced, Richard W. Young, President of the Ensign stake, and a Brigadier General in the United States army, has passed away, by death, since the last conference. He spoke at the overflow meeting in the Assembly Hall, on the afternoon of October 5, 1919, and I desire to read a few words from that address:

I was just looking over that wonderful poem, "The Seer," written by President John Taylor, that remarkable, splendid father of President Frank Y. Taylor who is here today. I find written there, concerning the Prophet Joseph, that

"He shared their joys, their sorrows too,
He loved the Saints, he loved Nauvoo."

I have been away from this people long enough to develop a strong love for the Saints of God; the good people, who make up the congregations of the Church are the dearest people in all the world to you and me. There is no experience that touches my heart more deeply than the sight of the face of a good old brother or sister whom I have known, and known to be faithful for many years. I share their joys and their sorrows too. I deeply love the Saints and their association, and am proud of being a member the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

I was thinking during the noon hour how much reason we all have to be proud of the record of the Church. When you stop to think about it, you must conclude that this Church has been right throughout its whole history upon all of the important moral questions that have affected our welfare. In the nature of things there is not within the United States a people more patriotic than the Latter-day Saints. I know of no sect that assumes the position that the constitution of the United States was written as it were by the very finger of God. Surely that belief is an inspiration to the highest patriotism. You remember reading in the history of the Church that this people were accused in Missouri of being opposed to slavery. In that slave-holding state such an attitude became one of the reasons of our persecution and drivings. You remember that the first message that flashed across the completed telegraph line from here to the Atlantic ocean was a message of congratulation from Brigham Young to Abraham Lincoln that the Union was preserved or was in the way of preservation.

President Grant spoke this morning of the attitude of the Navajo Indians toward the "Mormons." They had confidence in the "Mormon" people because the "Mormon" people had never abused their confidence. Books have been written, one book that I remember in particular, called "A Century of Dishonor," an indictment covering hundreds of pages against the American people for treatment of the American Indians. But no indictment had ever been framed, or would be formulated against the "Mormon" people for their attitude or treatment of the aborigines of this continent. We have always treated them fairly and squarely, as of course they should have been treated.

We have stood square upon women's suffrage. We were among the very first—the second, as I now recall it—of the states to give what should have been given years before, the right of equal suffrage to the women, now recognized not only in this country but throughout the world as a long delayed measure of justice.

We have stood fairly and squarely upon the prohibition question throughout the Church.

IN MEMORY OF OSBORNE J. P. WIDTSOE.

Since our last conference, one of our greatest educators has passed away, Osborne J. P. Widtsøe. One of the splendid articles in this April number of the Improvement Era was from the pen of our departed brother, and I will read the last paragraph or two:

But while it is well it is not enough. Steadily to maintain the narrow way throughout the generations, there must needs be communion with the director of all. Where there is no revelation, the people perish; they wander from paths of rectitude; they deny even that which has given them life. This, then, is the sum of all: Not alone because the doctrines revealed through Joseph the Prophet spurs the energies of man to work, and to know, and to do; nor yet alone because it is based on the law of association, will it thrive and prosper; but because there is added hereto the still more basic principle of faith in God and his power to guide man by continued revelation—as times and seasons and countries shall require—will ultimate triumph be achieved. The far-reaching extent of the work of the Prophet Joseph Smith cannot be declared; the monument he has erected to his memory cannot be measured. But this much is certain: It is as natural as that the rising sun shall appear in the east to spread its glory gradually over the world, that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints should prosper and progress to come ultimately to inherit the earth.

THEY GAVE THEIR LIVES FOR SERVICE TO THE PEOPLE.

Richard W. Young offered his life twice, by volunteering in the service of his country, going once to the Philippine Islands, and once to France. Osborne Widtsoe gave his life to the service of the Church and for the uplift, educationally, of the people. The lives of these two noble men stand as a testimony to the divinity of this work. No more upright clean men ever drew the breath of life. We thank God for the record that they have left and pray God to bless and comfort their families and to assist them to walk in that straight and narrow path in which their fathers walked. May God's comforting influence be and abide with them and with all those who have been called upon to mourn, since we were last here, is my prayer and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The anthem, "Oh, Happy is the Man," by Prof. J. J. McClellan, words by Parley P. Pratt, was sung by the choir.

The closing prayer was offered by Elder John L. Herrick, former President of the Western States Mission.

AFTERNOON SESSION

President Heber J. Grant presided and called the congregation to order at 2 o'clock. The house was filled to capacity. Overflow meetings were held in the Assembly Hall and in the Bureau of Information.

The choir and congregation sang, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

Prayer was offered by Elder German E. Ellsworth, former President of the Northern States Mission.

The choir sang, "Hallelujah to the Father (Beethoven's "Mount of Olives").

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. PENROSE

I am very thankful for this privilege. Just to look at this congregation is a pleasure and a treat. To be called upon to speak—I was going to say—is a task, and it really is, for I do not feel prepared to deliver a discourse upon any particular topic or subject. But I feel thankful that I am able to be here, and to lift up my voice once more in testimony of the truth. I bear testimony that what we heard this morning, that which was delivered from this stand, was true, divinely revealed and divinely spoken. I felt like shouting and singing, “Hallelujah, Praise to God,” when President Grant closed his remarks: for I felt that he was inspired of God to give to us words in due season: and I believe the whole congregation, this immense audience, was thrilled with the same feeling and spirit. I enjoy preaching of that kind. I do enjoy a well said discourse, prepared already in thought and in language to deliver to a public assembly, but I must say that I do much more enjoy addresses that are delivered by the power of God, accompanied by that splendid spirit which came to us all when we first embraced the gospel. When we first heard the glad tidings of salvation brought to earth in the latter days through the Prophet Joseph Smith and his associates, our whole souls thrilled with joy, with thanksgiving and praise to the Lord: and no matter how often we heard the same simple truths declared, we enjoyed the hearing of them, and the same spirit that rested upon the speakers rested upon the hearers, so we rejoiced together. I felt that this morning, as I have many times during the conferences that we have held in years that are past, and I was impressed with the feeling that the promise made by the Almighty in regard to the continuance of his work, was verily true, and will be fulfilled to the uttermost, no matter what may occur, no matter what changes may come, either through the martyrdom of our prophet or the decease of our leaders, by what we call “natural means.” No matter what the opposition may be in the world, though thrones may totter, empires fall, and the systems of men may be broken up and perish, the Church and Kingdom of our God shall continue and abide and increase.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST SHALL GROW AND PREVAIL.

This great audience, this afternoon, is evidence of the truth of the prediction of the Prophet Joseph Smith, addressing his father by revelation, which was read to us this morning. This work will abide. It was so destined by the Almighty, when he revealed it. When he appeared with his Son Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, to the Prophet Joseph Smith, he ordained and declared that this organization should remain on the earth, and should not be broken to pieces, nor given to any people except to the Saints of the Most High, and they should continue the work and possess the Kingdom and the greatness of the Kingdom until it should spread forth under the whole heavens.

I know that this is true, and I felt the influence and spirit of it this morning, when I looked upon the great congregation here, and realized that another large audience of Saints was gathered in the Assembly Hall, and that there was a great number of inspired men, ready at the word, when they receive it from the head, to go forth to the nations, or to labor at home, to do anything and everything required of them under the power and influence of the Spirit of the Lord which they hold, associated with their offices and callings in the holy Priesthood.

It is a joy to my heart to realize and know this, that the work shall not be broken up, shall not be given to another people, but this Church and Kingdom—for the terms are used almost synonymously—shall continue and stand forth and overcome every opposition of every kind that may come against it. I do not say this in the spirit of defiance against the powers of darkness, either in the flesh or out of the flesh, but I say it in humility, and with full confidence that the word of God shall be fulfilled, and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints shall continue and abide, and the gospel it brings shall be preached to the living and to the dead, until all of the race of Adam, who are able to receive and hear, shall hear the word and have the free opportunity and liberty, if they will, to obey it, to repent of their sins, and to come unto God the Eternal Father, be obedient to him, and bow the knee to King Immanuel, Jesus the Christ.

THE VISION OF JOSEPH.

We have reminders, frequently now, of the fact that about a century has elapsed since the time when the Prophet Joseph, as a boy, went into a grove near his father's residence—where many of us have been, and have rejoiced in the spirit we found there—and there for the first time in vocal prayer—I presume he had prayed before, in a fashion—but in vocal prayer, from the heart, with faith, he called upon the Lord that he might learn which was the true religion. As we have heard today, and have heard many times before, the Father and the Son appeared to him. He saw them; they were there before him. We may not perhaps exactly explain how and by what means Joseph saw the Father and the Son. He called it a vision. That is right, it was a vision. But what is a vision of that kind? A vision like that which Moses had when he saw the Lord face to face. He saw the Father and spoke to him, and the Lord spoke to him. Moses declared that he saw him, not with his natural eyes, but with his spiritual vision: and that there is such a thing I presume many of us who are here are fully assured. We know it in our own experience, but not perhaps to the same degree as Joseph or Moses had it, when they conversed with the Lord. But that there is a spiritual sight or vision we realize, and we can draw very near to our Father and our God in the name of Jesus Christ, and see when others are in the dark, and comprehend when others are blinded in regard to the heavenly truths which come to people from him for their salvation.

VIRTUE IN THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

I rejoice in the knowledge of this great truth, and I know that there is virtue in the prayer of faith. It is the prayer of faith that saves the sick when we administer to them in the way that is appointed. The real efficacious prayer must be accompanied by faith, which is the strength and power of it; and by faith we can draw near to him who is our living Head. And by faith we can accomplish the work set us to do, no matter what it may be. If we put our souls in it, and in faith attempt the work that we are entrusted with, in that we shall succeed. In God we trust: in God we have faith; on God we rely: and when we do that with full purpose of heart, the Lord, and the powers behind the veil are with us. The heavenly power of the Priesthood is with us who hold it here in the flesh, and it is by that power that we shall prevail and succeed and overcome, and accomplish the great work of salvation entrusted to us.

ALL THINGS TO BE DONE IN THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST.

Everything in this Church is to be done in the name of Jesus Christ; so we have been commanded. This Church is called "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." That was given by revelation and commandment. It is not merely the Church of man: and though men are called of God to work in it, and to occupy prominent places in it, and to use great influence in building it up, we are building it up to him who is our living Head, even Jesus the Christ. We are to do all things in his name. When Peter was instrumental in curing the lame man by the gate of the temple, he said: "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have, give I unto thee: in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk;" and the man leaped and walked. And so it shall be with this Church, which Jesus Christ has established in the latter days. It shall prevail and overcome every obstacle in the path.

Now, concerning that name: It is the name of Jesus Christ that we are to use. I will read a verse or two from the Doctrine and Covenants, the 18th section. There are a number of other sections that convey the same idea, but I will not take time to read them. I will begin with the 21st verse:

Take upon you the name of Christ, and speak the truth in soberness; And as many as repent, and are baptized in my name, which is Jesus Christ, and endure to the end, the same shall be saved.

Behold, Jesus Christ is the name which is given of the Father, and there is none other name given whereby man can be saved;

Wherefore, all men must take upon them the name which is given of the Father, for in that name shall they be called at the last day;

Wherefore, if they know not the name by which they are called, they cannot have place in the kingdom of my Father.

Some people may think that there is nothing new in that; neither is there, but many of us have fallen into the habit of doing things in the name of Jesus, and I notice that when people bless their food at the table, (or ask a blessing upon it) they do it in a sort of peculiar, hurried manner, and close it by saying rapidly, "In the name of Jesus. Amen." When some men dismiss a meeting they are in haste to pronounce the benediction, and they do it "in the name of Jesus. Amen." There are many men in the world named "Jesus" in these latter days. I was reading in a newspaper recently about a murderer whose first name was Jesus, who crucified his own child. He was a fanatic, a madman. I notice, too, when you travel, in many foreign countries you find over the doors the names of men who keep what we call "saloons" or public houses, and it is Jesus So-and-so. Now, we are to take upon us the name of Christ, and you will find, if you will read the Pearl of Great Price, in the revelation of God to Enoch and to Moses 52, 57, that it is specified there, particularly, that Jesus Christ is the name of "a righteous judge who shall come," and that he is the beloved of the Father, that he is the firstborn of the Father; he is the beloved Son, and when speaking in regard to the future in the flesh he is called "the Only Begotten" Son. God's only Begotten Son is Jesus Christ—Jesus, the Savior, Christ the anointed. The two names go together, and they belong to each other. Jesus Christ has said that is the name he received from the Father, and we are to use that name. When we baptize, we baptize in the name of Jesus Christ: "Having authority from Jesus Christ, I baptize you," and so on. So when we pronounce the blessing upon the sacrament, the bread or the water, we ask the Father, in the name of his Son Jesus Christ, to bless the bread or to bless the water. So, my brethren, in administering in any of the ordinances of the house of God, it is to be done in the name of Jesus Christ.

Do not be afraid to use reverently the name of Christ. He uses it continually. We can read about it in the Book of Mormon. The Church was the Church of Christ, and in the last days the Church is to be called by that name. You may think perhaps that is a matter of little importance. Perhaps it is so to you; but I have found in my experience, from the beginning of my membership in this Church, that there is power in that name. "In my name they that believe shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues," and so on. There is power in the name of Jesus Christ. Demons tremble at that name. They recognize it. But when we, in a slipshod way, use the name of Jesus, and say nothing about Christ, I don't know that it has so much power and influence. The Lord may in mercy to our omission accept our meaning, but never mind about that, let us do what we are told to do, and administer in the way that Jesus Christ himself says we are to administer. I will not take time to read from other sections, that relate to the same subject, but all the revelations in this book [the Doc. and Cov.] given through the Prophet, or to others, are in the name of Jesus Christ, He says: "Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, the great I Am, whose arm of mercy hath atoned for your sins." (See Sections 29, 38, 39 and others.) He is the Great I Am spoken of in the Hebrew scriptures.

JEHOVAH OF THE OLD TESTAMENT IS JESUS CHRIST OF THE NEW.

He is the Jehovah spoken of in the Old Testament. Jesus Christ of the New Testament, is Jehovah of the Old Testament, and he so proclaimed it when he came to the Prophet Joseph and Oliver Cowdery in the temple of the Lord, the account of which we read in the 110th section of the Doctrine and Covenants. They speak of his appearance, the glorious appearance and power, and his voice was like the rush of many waters. It was the voice of Jehovah. I say this for the benefit of some few of my friends who do not believe in the doctrine that Jesus of the New Testament was Jehovah of the Old Testament. Jesus the Christ represents the Father fully. In him dwelleth the fulness of the Godhead bodily, as we read in the scriptures. "It pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell." And so he could tell Philip, when asked, "Lord, show us the Father:" "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." God was manifest in the flesh, in the personality of Jesus of Nazareth, and he was verily the Son of God, begotten of the Father, and his mother was the virgin Mary. There should be no dispute in regard to this matter, because it has been made so clear and full in the revelations of God to us.

THE TRINITY, THREE DISTINCT PERSONALITIES.

There is a trinity in the Godhead, so the Prophet Joseph taught—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost,—and they are three distinct personalities in perfect unity. There is a spirit which "proceedeth from the presence of God throughout the immensity of space," the light which is in all things, and through all things, and round about all things, and the law by which all things are governed." By that spirit, our Heavenly Father declares, he created all things in the beginning, firstly spiritually, and afterwards temporally. Doc. and Cov. Sec. 29.

We learn also that this spirit of truth and intelligence and power proceedeth from the Deity, "throughout the immensity of space, and is the law, by which all things are governed, by which God is omnipresent, by which the word of God is declared, whether through Jesus the Christ, or by the personality of the Holy Ghost. That spirit pervadeth all things. The Word is declared through and by its influence in all the worlds that God has created. We should understand the distinction between this universally diffused essence, and the personality called the Holy Ghost, whom Jesus Christ said he would send to his disciples, and who no doubt came on the Day of Pentecost, in person.

These may seem small matters to some, but we should try and get right on all things, that we may have the unity of the faith, that there may be no discord among us.

WHAT IS TRUTH?

The spirit of truth reveals truth, conveys the light of truth. It conveys intelligence. What is intelligence? It is "the light of truth."

I was pleased when President Grant read the concluding verse of Brother Jaques' splendid hymn, where it says, "Truth, the sum of existence, shall weather the worst." All the hymn is eulogistic of that divine influence that we call truth.

Oh say, what is truth? 'tis the fairest gem
That the riches of worlds can produce, and so on. But here it tells something about what it is. It is "the sum of existence"—things past, things present, and things to come, facts. These are truth, and the Lord says that "truth is knowledge of things as they are and as they were, and as they are to come." (Sec. 93.) Some of our brethren in writing, and a good many in talking, say truth is the knowledge, or a knowledge of things. That is something that you can have or I can have or can reject. The insertion of a or the is a mistake. Truth is knowledge itself, information, intelligence, things that are, things that were, things that are to come—knowledge concerning them. That is truth. It is a splendid definition and answers the question of ages more clearly than anything I have ever heard attempted; even better than "truth the sum of existence," and yet the two in meaning are identical. Now, let us be correct in that little thing, and so in all things that pertain to our doctrines, our duties in the Priesthood, brethren, and in our quotations of scripture let us try to be right, as nearly correct as we can.

THE NATURE AND RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

This day, as Brother Lund so plainly pointed out to us, is called the anniversary of the resurrection of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. I do not know whether it is exactly the right day, and it does not matter. It is something like it is with Christmas Day. We join with the Christian world, as they please to call themselves, in revering the name of Jesus Christ, and celebrating his resurrection. We claim that he actually was raised from the dead; not merely continued his existence after death, but the body that was put into the sepulchre was brought forth from the tomb, and nothing was left but the napkin and other things that were placed around it when the body was interred. He appeared to his disciples, and to many others, five hundred brethren we are told. They do not give us their written testimony, but it is given in the New Testament. They all saw him at once, and he discoursed with them, and showed his disciples his hands and his feet. What for? To deceive them? To make them think something that was not true? Not at all. He wanted them to understand that that was the body that was on the cross, in which the Roman soldiers drove the spikes or nails through the hands and through the feet. He exhibited himself, and told them to handle him and see, "For a spirit," said he, "hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." Many of the apostles lost their lives because they testified concerning this fact. They were witnesses of the resurrection, the raising from the dead of the body of the Redeemer, quickened by the spirit, immortalized, beautified, made glorious; but the changes wrought upon it that it might be immortal did not change the structure of the body. It was the body of Jesus, the Christ, who hung upon the cross, and died for the sins of the world. And that is the great truth that we have to declare, not only his actual resurrection from the dead, but that he is the Savior; through him and by him and of him, the Father declared, the worlds were created and made. We know little about his actual life on the earth during the three years that he labored in the ministry, and still less about his childhood, and we know next to nothing concerning the details of his preexistence, except the fact of it. He was with the Father in the beginning; he says so in revelation to us, in the 93rd section of the Doctrine and Covenants: "I also was in the beginning with the Father, and am the Firstborn." Now, do not be deceived, any of you, by speculations that people have had about his being "the son of Adam," and other theoretical notions. He was the Firstborn of the Father, as we read in the Epistle to the Hebrews. "When he bringeth his Firstbegotten into the world, he saith, let all the angels of God worship him," Jesus the Christ, whose spirit, whose light is in all the worlds that have been created, and is "the power by which they were made." He was the Firstborn of the great family to which we belong, so we call him not only our Redeemer, but our Elder Brother.

Well, some ask, did he have a beginning? Certainly, in his individuality. He had no beginning in the essence that composes his spiritual personality. Neither is he, in that, different from us. We also, he says, were in the beginning with the Father, that which is spirit, God says that he created them all. But doesn't he say that intelligence never was created or made? Yes. But what is intelligence? I have quoted to you that "intelligence is the light of truth," without beginning, without end: But "intelligences" are individuals begotten of the Father, created, he says, by him, or organized; and whether you use the term "created" or "organized" or "begotten," it means the same thing. They were his sons and his daughters. But Christ Jesus was the Firstborn, and so he is preeminent in all things, and all things will become, some time, subject to him, and every knee will bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ, to the glory of God the Father.

Let us get this clearly in our minds, and we will find that there are no contradictions in the scriptures of the Lord. Intelligence is without beginning. It is something that can be imparted or withheld. It is the light of truth, and it proceeds from the Father, and is conveyed to us if we will open our hearts to receive it, and we will receive its gifts according to our organization and capacities and the blessings of God to us. It is the spirit by which God made the worlds, by which he governs them, by which he is present in them and round about them, and the fulness of it is in Jesus the Christ, his Only Begotten in the flesh, and his Firstborn in the spirit.

THANKS BE TO GOD FOR THE GIFT OF HIS SON JESUS CHRIST.

We desire to praise Jesus our Redeemer. Oh, what a blessing was his crucifixion to all the world, to all generations of the sons and daughters of Adam; by and through him and his atonement we can be redeemed from the dead, from death, from hell, from darkness, from the grave, from everything that is hurtful and injurious and that brings unhappiness. And we can be imbued with his Spirit if we obey his gospel, and be able to draw near unto him, and to realize who and what he is, for a fact, for ourselves. For he will reveal himself to us if we will draw near unto him. To use a figurative expression that he used to his disciples; he will come in with us and sup with us and be in us and round about us, and be our leader and our guide. Thanks be to God the eternal Father! Hallelujah, praise his holy name, for the gift of his Son Jesus Christ, for the redemption of mankind from the transgression of Adam, who is our earthly head. He is our father in that sense, the father of all the race. We have had fathers of our flesh, we have obeyed them, and so the chain goes up to the great man who stood at the head, the father of all, Adam. But our Father whom we worship is the great Elohim, who sits on high, who is working, through his Son Jesus Christ, for our redemption, and he is the Savior, after all, of all that are saved. Through and by his Son Jesus Christ are we redeemed from our own sins and also from the sin of our first parents, the transgression of Adam and Eve in the garden. He who knew no sin offered himself as a sacrifice for those who had sinned, and that reaches right back to Adam. It is through Jesus the Christ that Adam is redeemed from the effects of the fall, and through him we are redeemed from death and hell and the grave, from our own sins as well as from the sin committed by our first parents. By obedience to his commandments we can be washed clean from our sins and imperfections, but it is the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth from all sin. Thanks be to God, I say, for this great gift unto us!

Let us try to understand the word of the Lord. It is not particularly necessary that we should spend all our time thinking on these ideas and theories, but there is value in them because they are true, and it is the truth that will save. Jesus prayed to the Father to sanctify his disciples. "Sanctify them by the truth, thy word is truth;" and by his word we can obtain knowledge of things that are past or present or are to come, and can be in harmony with the Father and with the Son and with the Holy Ghost, and with all the great and mighty beings who held authority from them in the ages that are past, and those who have held it in the dispensation in which we live, those who are living, and those who have passed away. What a glorious kingdom there will be, when sin is banished, when darkness is dispersed, when false governments will perish; when the true Kingdom of God shall be set up, and Jesus Christ as King of kings and Lord of lords shall reign over all the earth; and those who obey his commandments will reign with him in glory. The Saints of olden days and the Saints of modern days will be together there in that great company. There will be no disunion; there will be no darkness; there will be no pain, and there will be no more death, but we shall live, and live because of the atonement wrought out for us by Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. We shall be there, as he will be there, as distinct individual personalities.

THE GLORY AWAITING THE RIGHTEOUS.

We shall not be blended into one body, except as an organization of people. Each one will be himself or herself, and will shine in the glory of our Father; and every quality that we have, every attribute, every gift and power of our being that we have obtained from our birthright from our Father, all the knowledge we have gained by our experiences in the spirit life or in mortality will be ours, and the power of endless lives will be in us, because the spirit and the body will be inseparably joined together in glory, never more to be separated, and all eternity will be before us in which to progress and improve and rejoice, and find out more about our Father and Jesus Christ, our Elder Brother, the great Mediator and Exemplar, whom we are to follow always, and joy will be made supreme and perfect. In this life we only have it imperfectly, for the body without the spirit cannot receive a fulness of joy, neither can the spirit without the body. The elements of both are eternal, but each of us has an individual personality. When we were born in the spirit, that was our first estate. Now we are in our second estate, and when the third estate comes, if we have been faithful in both, and obtained this great blessing of the spirit and the body joined together in one, in perfection, in complete harmony with the Father and with the Son and with the Holy Ghost, and all the great and mighty and just and pure and honest of heart of all the centuries into one great kingdom and glory, oh, how happy we shall be in shouting "Hallelujah to his holy Name!"

CLOSING INJUNCTION TO FAITHFULNESS.

I feel that I can do that this afternoon, echoing the anthem by the choir. I do not want to take up too much time. Perhaps I have talked too long already. There are a number of brethren here whom all the people want to hear. I rejoice with them and glorify God to know that the organization of this Church has been fully established. Study the 107th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants, elders of Israel. Read it carefully from beginning to end. Weigh every phrase in it, and see the beauty of that organization of Priesthood which the Lord has set up, and, so far, has perfected. Live as servants and priests of the Most High God, perform your duties, and set a good example. Take the hint given to you this morning by Brother Lund in regard to your tithing. We learn from President Grant of the immense amount of money that is being expended and that which is called for. Oh, if all the Latter-day Saints could realize what a blessing there is in the payment of their tithes, honestly,—which means a tenth; it does not mean a fifth nor a twentieth, it is the tenth, the tenth of our interest before the Lord,—if they would do that we would have no difficulty in complying with the requests that are coming in by the hundreds every day of our lives there in the office—for appropriations for different objects that are very good, but there are not means enough now to comply with the demands.

If all the servants of God, high priests, seventies, elders, and the members of the lesser Priesthood, would obey that commandment of Jesus Christ, that is, to pay their tenth, and the means come into the hands of the servants of God, who are honestly and faithfully and patiently striving to use it and distribute it to bring about the best results, what a blessing it would be to them individually, for they would grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, and have confidence in God when they pray, and it would be an example to the Saints and be a blessing to the Church to which we belong, this splendid organization that God has set up to continue and abide. Faithful and true should be those who have received the authority of the holy Priesthood, honest and pure in their dealings with one another, and in their dealings with the Lord.

The tithing is called “a voluntary contribution.” But what should that be? It should be a tenth, just as the Lord has commanded. And so, of course, in regard to all other duties in the Church. That is not the only one, by any means. Every one of us Latter-day Saints should endeavor to be a member of the Church in the full sense of the word, baptized into Christ, having put on Christ, trying to carry out the commandments of Jesus Christ, trying to live in the spirit of Jesus Christ, so that we shall not be ashamed when we stand up in the midst of that great concourse in judgment, and behold the face of our Redeemer, and realize that he is indeed what he has been proclaimed to be. Let us be members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the full sense of the word, and use our talents and abilities, such as they are, in the service of the Lord, and we will find the truth of his promise: “Behold I come. My reward is with me, but my work is before me.” Do your work, Israel, and gain the reward through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The duet “God With Us” was sung by James H. Nielson, tenor, and Raymond Williams, baritone.

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, in the testimonies that have been borne during the sessions of this conference, and am very happy, for in my heart there are, today, feelings of gratitude to our Father in heaven that I also know that that which the brethren have testified to is true.

WHY LATTER-DAY SAINTS ARE POSITIVE IN THEIR RELIGIOUS DECLARATIONS.

It undoubtedly seems a very positive position for us to take, to be able to speak with such certainty concerning the work the Lord is doing in the world, in our day; to speak with such certainty concerning the visitation the prophet Joseph Smith received a hundred years ago, wherein the Father and the Son actually appeared to him. We may impress our friends, by reason of our positive position, with arrogance, but that is not the thought that is in our hearts. We know what we know, and we testify to it in earnestness and in humility. I remember a gentleman, a minister, said on one occasion, in a private discussion which I had with him, that he thought we were too positive about the things of religion. He thought we had not considered the question of God enough to be able to speak with such certainty. He informed me that he belonged to a church that was several hundred years older than the one to which I belonged, and he said that his church had been considering these questions for a long time and had altered their view and their opinion about a good many theological questions. I granted that that was true; and he ventured the assertion that after we had been discussing these theological questions as long as they had, perhaps we would change our opinion also. And in order to establish his point he used this illustration:

"If you had a problem to give for solution and you selected ten boys to solve the problem, and you gave one of them ten days in which to study it, and then another boy nine days and still another boy eight, and so forth, until you had one boy studying on the problem but one day and one studying ten days; now which boy, at the conclusion of the ten days, would know most about the problem, the one who had been studying but one day or the one who had studied ten days?"

Well, you would have to concede, as I did, that if all things were equal, of course, the boy that had been studying ten days ought to know most about the problem.

"Well, there you are," he said; "we have been studying it longer than you have, and you are one of the youngest churches, and so you are likely to change your mind when you study it a little longer."

"But," I said, "suppose the boy who has had the problem but one day receives the visit of a professor who knows all about the problem and who illustrates it so that now it is perfectly clear to the mind of the boy, who knows most about it, the boy who has thus been aided, only having had the chance to study it one day, or the boy who has been dreaming about it for ten days?"

"Why," he said, "of course, the boy who was thus aided and assisted knew most about the problem."

Then I said: "That is exactly where we stand." Joseph Smith did not know, because of earthly wisdom and his reading of the scriptures, more about our Father in heaven and his Son Jesus Christ, than the learned ministers of the world. Not by that means did he obtain his knowledge, but in the few moments that he knelt in the sacred grove in the presence of the Father and the Son he knew more about God the eternal Father and his Son Jesus Christ than all the ministers of all the world ever have known, or ever will know, except they shall be, in like manner, informed and instructed. So that the wisdom he had came to him from the source to which men must go if they shall know our Father in heaven.

While we speak with this certainty and this positiveness, we desire to be charitable to our brethren and sisters who have not this faith. I think of their condition with a feeling of almost pity and sorrow. I realize that among them are many who desire to do right, who do right so far as they have knowledge, who are blinded because of the traditions of their fathers, who have ears but hear not, eyes and see not, and hearts that can not understand. We have not read the scriptures and obtained this superior knowledge because of our increased intelligence. If we should sweep away the knowledge that has come to the Latter-day Saints in the revelations contained in the book of Doctrine and Covenants, in the revelations we have concerning the great plan of salvation, as revealed in the Book of Mormon, and other inspired utterances that have fallen from the lips of the prophets of God from the days of Joseph until this day,—if we should sweep those away, and have nothing but the fragmentary utterances of the Lord Jesus Christ and his apostles, as found in the scriptures, left, we would not know any better than others the truth concerning the gospel of Jesus Christ, nor the plan of church organization.

Just at this time the whole Christian world is considering the question of a unity of churches, acknowledging that the system that has produced division is wrong, and makes for weakness and not for strength. Now, how in the world will they ever unite, except that which is lost shall come again? Their lamentable condition has been produced because men have not preserved, from the days of the Redeemer's ministry among his servants on the earth, the truth Jesus taught. When we think of his three years of ministry it must have amounted to hundreds of sermons, hours in length, in which he discoursed upon all the fundamental truths of the gospel. There evidently was no question in the minds of his followers as to what they should do to be saved, but the difficulty with the present situation is that we have but a fragment of what he uttered. If you should combine all the several narratives, as they are found in the Gospels, into one narrative and eliminate the duplication of the story, it is said that it could be read in an hour and fifteen minutes and would constitute but seventeen pages of our scripture. That is a very small part of the great message which the Master delivered to men. No wonder the world is in confusion and some believe in worshipping on the seventh day and others disagree with that opinion and each seems to find some scripture to justify his position. No wonder there is doubt and uncertainty concerning the subject of baptism, concerning the form and the manner of it, because the details concerning that doctrine have not been preserved; and likewise concerning the organization of the church. It is true that the names of prophets and apostles and pastors and teachers occur in the sacred record, but the duties of each are not so well defined; the work and the labor and the relative position of these several officers are not set forth so that men can work out again or reestablish, without further knowledge, the true organization of the Church of Christ. When I think of the contention of our Protestant brethren, that the world had gone into idolatry and had lost the truth, and that a state of apostasy existed up to the time of the Reformation, I cannot blame these men. It seems to me that there ought to be rejoicing among those who belong to the Protestant cause that there is proof of the truthfulness of their contention found in the utterances of the Lord Jesus Christ to Joseph Smith, who verified what those great reformers had been declaring, namely, that there was an apostasy and the truth was not in the earth. What has happened, from the time they took their stand and made these positive declarations, that gives evidence that the truth which had been lost was restored? For they themselves confessed it did not exist in the earth. None of them claimed that an angel had visited them and restored the Priesthood; none of them claimed to have received any new word from the Lord clarifying the situation, and making the doctrines of the church now plain and simple, so that the way-faring man, though a fool, need not err therein.

I wish we had all that Jesus uttered. I believe it would be perfectly easy to make it plain to the minds of men who are honest that there has been a departure from the gospel as Jesus established it, and that they themselves are going at cross purposes to the plan he devised. Why don't we have more of that which Jesus spoke? Simply because years elapsed before some men wrote what they could remember of the sermons, or the substance of the sermons, of Christ; and it was only a very brief account; after all, precious as it is, very meagre and not sufficient to guide all men to a common understanding of the gospel. Every word that fell from the lips of the Master was essential; not one word was idle, not one word was useless, but every word was essential for the salvation of men; and "Mormonism" proclaims to the world that that which has been lost has come again, and until that which has been lost does come again the world will continue to be in darkness and in ignorance of the truth; and not until men shall go to the Source that Joseph Smith applied to himself, when on bended knee he sought the Lord to know which of all the denominations was right, shall they know the truth. Not until all men shall acknowledge that that and that alone is the Source from whence light and knowledge must come, can the world come to a unity of the faith. Until that day we shall find the world wandering in darkness, hither and thither, seeking light, but can not find it, their eyes being blinded. O how the world ought to rejoice that in this day that which so long has been lost has been restored, the fulness of the gospel, the power and authority of the holy Priesthood, the doctrines of the Church, and not only that but the organization of the Church as well in its perfection and in its power. When I think of the efforts of men to rebuild the Church,—and I do not want to belittle their efforts—I do not blame them. I believe that Joseph Smith and his associates could not have done any better than Martin Luther, nor than Wesley or others, except for the fact that the Lord revealed himself to him. So I do not belittle the efforts of these men who did the best they could with the light and knowledge which they had, but their knowledge was limited. Their effort to rebuild and establish the Church of Christ reminds me of the experience I had with my first watch. I wanted to see what it was made of, so I took it to pieces, and I had so many wheels that when I tried to put it together again I could not get all those wheels within that case. I put in as many as I could and it looked like a watch all right; but it did not serve the purpose for which a watch is made, to keep the time. Every wheel was important and necessary. And so men have tried to fix up a church. They have read of numerous officers, apostles, and prophets and pastors, but they could not fit them together. They just took a few officers—like I did with the wheels of my watch—and made it look like a church, with a deacon and an elder, or an elder and a priest. It might seem like a church, but it was as useless to accomplish the thing for which the Church of Christ was established, as my watch was useless without its important wheels, each one fitting into the other; for it is said of old that the head could not say to the foot: "I have no need of thee;" but every officer in his place for his purpose, for the work of the ministry, for the perfection of the Saints.

These, our Christian brethren, have done the best they could, but they have failed, and it remained for the Lord to build his Church again. No man can do it. He is a Master Builder and he has sent his inspired servants who have taught men the plan and the pattern of the organization of his Church and have fitted in these officers, so that, while the "Mormon" Church is admired and even envied by those opposed to us, as the most wonderful organization in the world, the most wonderful part of it is that it works, and that it does not become a machine that easily gets out of joint or kilter, but it works forward for the material salvation of the people as well as for their spiritual salvation. Men may duplicate the organization of this Church and when they have done it, when they have fitted in the officers and given them their appointed places, still they shall have a dead thing. You may establish a perfect system of electric lighting in this building or this city, you may have your dynamo, you may have your wires running through the streets, properly insulated, your poles and everything complete, and the globes here, but you can have no light, and no power, until through your perfect system there runs light and power and heat. And so you may have a perfect church organization, but it will be perfectly dead and useless unless, going through it, there is the power of the living God, which is the source of life and light to his Church. We have the perfect system and it has, radiating through it, the power of the living God, the authority of the holy Priesthood, and the ordinances thus performed are efficacious and valid for men on the earth and remain sealed upon their heads through their faithfulness, even into the eternal world.

THE GLORY OF THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

I rejoice in the testimonies that we have listened to on this Easter Sabbath day, with respect to the resurrection of the Redeemer, and when I think of his ascension from the grave, I rejoice to know that he is the Life and that he is the Way. And when I think also of removing that last act in the great drama of his life, his coming forth from the tomb—remove that and you take away the crowning glory of the ministry of the Redeemer. Had the stone not been rolled away and had he not risen from the dead, then it would have been exceedingly difficult for men to have had the faith in him they now have. He had power in his life over disease that the sick could be healed; he had power over death that men could be called from death back to mortal life. Many had witnessed this. He had power over the elements that the winds and the waves should obey his voice. He could speak, and loaves and fishes would materialize under his power. He had more power than had ever been revealed to man from the beginning of time on this earth, but there remained one thing more. He promised, just before he laid his body down, that he would be equal to the emergency and bring it up from the dead, not back to mortal life, but to a newness of life, to immortality and eternal life. And when he arose from the dead and came forth in splendor, a resurrected, immortal and eternal being, he then arose to the height of power, of glory and of majesty, and became the Master of all things, even death yielding to him, and he said he did only that which he had witnessed his Father do. Then, if it brought glory and honor and power and majesty to the Master to rise from the dead, so in like manner did it bring glory and honor and power and majesty to his Father to have in a similar manner arisen from the grave to possess a glorified body dwelling in the eternal world as the great organizer and presiding genius over all his creations, his sons and his daughters.

A TESTIMONY THAT CHRIST AROSE FROM THE TOMB AND LIVES.

Therefore, we rejoice in the witness we have that Jesus told the truth, that the testimony of his disciples concerning his resurrection is the truth, and we also know that the testimony of Joseph Smith and his brethren, who looked upon the face of the Redeemer, is true. I bear witness that I know what they have said is the truth. I know, as well as I know that I live and look into your faces, that Jesus Christ lives, and he is the Redeemer of the world, that he arose from the dead with a tangible body, and still has that real body which Thomas touched when he thrust his hands into his side and felt the wound of the spear, and also the prints of the nails in his hands. I know by the witness and the revelations of God to me that Thomas told the truth. I know that Joseph Smith told the truth, for mine eyes have seen. For in the visions of the Lord to my soul, I have seen Christ's face, I have heard his voice. I know that he lives, that he is the Redeemer of the world, and that as he arose from the dead, a tangible and real individual, so shall all men arise in the resurrection from the dead.

The Lord bless us to keep this faith in our hearts that we may go forth with charity for our brethren and sisters of the world, intrusted with these glorious truths for their blessings, that we may bring to them that which they sadly need, the fulness of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, for their salvation. May they divest themselves of pride and of preconceived notions and prejudices, and not despise the source from whence this message comes, and not be as blind and ignorant as their fathers were before them, who thought no good could come from Nazareth.

And if it should now happen, as it has happened, that from a despised source there has come the light of the Lord for the blessing of the world from a despised "Mormon," Oh, may our father's children divest themselves of blindness and see the glorious truth that has come that we now offer to the east and to the west, to the north and to the south, for their salvation in this life and in the world to come.

The Lord bless us to do our part, and bless them that they may see that we are their friends, that we love them, and we would not harm them, that we hold precious and sacred things in trust for them and for ourselves, that we may honor and respect these glorious privileges that are ours, rise to the emergency with due gratitude, embrace every commandment of our Father, and keep it that we may continue to be the light of the world and the salt of the earth, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Mrs. Franzeska Raabe Parkinson sang a soprano solo, "The Lord's Prayer."

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

My heart is filled with a desire to say something to this wonderful audience, that will be prompted by the inspiration of our heavenly Father. I regret that, since I was presiding at the overflow meeting this morning, I did not hear what was said at the meeting in this building. I have been thrilled with the testimonies that have been borne this afternoon. The remarks of President Penrose were powerful, although he is nearly ninety years of age. In him we have a living witness of the blessing of our heavenly Father for his servants.

I was touched, too, with the thrilling faith and testimony of Brother Ballard.

WHAT IS THE POWER BEHIND THE CHURCH?

He made some references to an electric lighting system. What is it that makes the light? As he explained, it is not the globe, nor the wires, nor the poles, nor the generators; but it is the water on the wheel that does the work.

One hundred years ago, in the interest of humanity, the heavens were opened. God the Father and Jesus Christ, his Son, came to the earth and revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith this gospel of Jesus Christ. What is it that gives this Church its power? What is it that has brought all these people together on this occasion? Why have you come from afar to attend this conference? Because of the Spirit of our Father in heaven. It is this Spirit that is the water on the wheel.

EXAMPLES OF THIS POWER.

Some six months ago a rather delicate little woman came into my office. She is the wife of one of our missionaries. When her husband came to see me, as he was starting out to preach the gospel, I said to him: "Young man, what is it going to cost you to take this mission?" He replied: "I don't know, I have no idea. But," he continued, "my little wife and I have been saving for a long time. It has been her ambition and mine, as it has been the ambition of my widowed mother, that sometime I would go on a mission. Our savings in the bank amount to $1,500, and we think probably that will be enough."

"My girl," I said to the little wife, "how are you getting along? Have you spent all that money yet?"

"No, not yet," she replied.

"How much have you spent?" I asked.

"Not any, yet," she replied, "my strawberries and peaches and garden stuff have been so profitable that instead of taking money out of the bank I have sent my husband all he needed and have added two hundred dollars to the account." That is water on the wheel.

Not very long ago I called into my office a young man in whom I am greatly interested. He came with a smile and said: "You have a job for me, have you?"

"Yes, I have a job for you?"

"All right, what is it?"

"I want you to go on a mission."

"On a mission? I should say not, I can't go on a mission. I haven't been very active in Church work. My folks have been sending me to school. I have just been graduated."

He was graduated with a bachelor of arts degree.

"I have been studying all these years," he continued, "preparing myself to make a living. It is my duty now to go to work and help my folks."

A few words to his excellent mother, a few words to his excellent father, a little encouragement to the boy himself, and away he went to preach the gospel—to induce his fellow men to strive to live in accordance with the perfect life and example of Jesus Christ.

We are all familiar with the parable of Lazarus and the rich man. This missionary having gone into the field has been touched by the power and Spirit of God. The water has been working on the wheel, and, like Lazarus, he has become greatly interested in his friends who are left at home. He wants me to take up a labor with his associates to get them into the mission field. He urges especially that I talk to his brother. "I want him," he says, "to take a mission as soon as mine is completed."

In my pocket I have a letter from him of fourteen pages. He writes that he has, during his college course, been studying philosophy, history, logic, ethics, etc., and he is amazed to find that all the wisdom of the wise men of the ages is contained in the gospel of Jesus Christ. He begins to see that there is water on our wheel.

This young man has gone into the mission field. The Spirit has touched him and he writes giving me the names of his chums. If any of them are here this afternoon they will probably be keeping out of my way. He gives me a long list and asks me to work with them and send them into the mission field. When they are ready to come he says he will give them help, he will give them service, he will send them outlines of the doctrines, he will give them the line of argument that means more than any kind of logic except that which is found in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

HOW MAY WE KNOW THE TRUTH?

My life has been devoted pretty largely to a study of mathematics. The conclusions that I have reached in this work have been based upon some sort of definite and positive hypotheses and in coming to conclusions from these hypotheses, I have moved by logical steps to definite and certain conclusions.

Now, how can we know that the gospel is true? This afternoon you heard the testimony of Brother Ballard, you heard the testimony of President Penrose. If I were to ask all those present who know that the gospel is true to stand, nearly all of this great multitude would probably arise. In the Assembly Hall, this morning, three or four speakers each stood up and said he knew that Joseph Smith was a prophet, that Joseph Smith is a prophet, that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ. How can they know it? How can they speak thus positively?

I will tell you how. Jesus himself has said: "This is not my doctrine but his that sent me," and "if any man"—not a few—but "if any man will do the will of my Father which is in heaven, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." Therefore I say to you and to all the world, all a man needs to do is to live in accordance with the gospel teachings and he will know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether the man speaks of himself.

MISSIONARIES LEARN THE TRUTH THROUGH SERVICE.

Brethren and sisters, it is one hundred years ago this spring since the heavens were opened and the gospel was revealed. Those who have gone into the field to give service, without an exception, so far as I know, have gone not for money, not for honor, not for personal gain, but because they loved the Lord. In the mission field missionaries work for the good of others; they do good to their fellowmen, they live in strict conformity with the Master's teachings and the promise in Holy Writ is fulfilled because into their heart comes that knowledge and each one says: "I know that Jesus is the Christ, that the gospel has been revealed and that those who keep the commandments of our Father in heaven will be saved in his kingdom."

Let us struggle on together, remembering that we all have weaknesses; let us live on, struggle on, and hope on, that our shortcomings may be overcome; that we may be thoroughly worthy of the wonderful blessings promised to the faithful, that the purposes of our Father may be fulfilled and that they may be fulfilled swiftly; I ask it, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

(President of the Southern States Mission)

It is because of a spirit of obedience to the request of the President of the Church that I stand here at this time. I feel my weakness and utter inability without the aid of the Lord to supplement the splendid discourses that have been delivered at this conference thus far.

It has been impressed upon my mind, by the instructions we have received, that our heavenly Father should be our eternal refuge and our guide through life. God said unto Moses: "I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me." One of old worshiped the god of ambition, and when earthly joys had grown dim, and earthly hopes been crushed, he said, out of the depths of a broken heart, "Had I but served my God with half the zeal I served my king, he would not in mine old age have left me naked unto my enemies." Another one, who was wealthy, when he was dying, said: "All that I have kept I have lost, and all that I have given away I have." What a splendid example of the lesson and value of sacrifice!

God is our refuge. To him Oliver Cowdery went when he was a school-teacher, boarding with the parents of Joseph Smith, the Prophet. After conversing about the plates, from which the Book of Mormon was translated, Oliver appealed unto the Lord, and it was revealed unto him that of a verity, in truth Joseph did receive these plates from the angel Moroni. He went to help Joseph translate the sacred record, and in a revelation that God gave to the Prophet, he told Oliver that he had heard his prayers on that night; therefore Oliver knew that Joseph was a prophet, and that the work was true, because no one but himself and God knew that he had prayed for divine guidance in this matter.

The Spirit of the Lord is given to those who are worthy of it, and by that Spirit, as the Book of Mormon says, we may know the truth of all things. The Latter-day Saints have an anointing of the Holy One, the gift of the Holy Ghost, and this gift and guide makes it necessary that they be taught of men in things pertaining to God.

As we have been told, this afternoon, by President Penrose, "Truth is knowledge of things as they are and as they were, and as they are to come." This truth embraces every principle of the gospel. Joseph sought unto the Father and the glorious results are manifest. Elijah, in the power of his Priesthood, gave to the prophet the keys of salvation for the dead.

"An angel from on high,
The long, long silence broke,
Descending from the sky,
These gracious words he spoke;
Lo, in Cumorah's lonely hill
A sacred record lies concealed.

"It speaks of Joseph's seed,
And makes the remnant known,
Of nations long since dead,
Who once had dwelt alone.
The fulness of the gospel, too,
Its pages will reveal to view."

So the sacred Nephite record came forth, another witness to the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ. Moses came and restored the keys of the gathering unto the Prophet Joseph Smith, and behold the miraculous development of the gathering in all the earth, especially the gathering of the Jews, and the events that are making that great movement certain and near of accomplishment.

Brethren and sisters, we have the knowledge, in this Church, that will enable every man and woman to secure salvation. We are told by the Apostle John: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God, because many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of anti-Christ."

With some sects a belief in the divinity of Christ is not required. Spiritualism, particularly, aims to destroy belief in the doctrine of the essentiality of the atoning blood of Jesus Christ. But the gospel teaches the divinity of Christ. It testifies that he is the Redeemer, the Son of God.

The Apostle Paul says: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord, Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." And so I testify unto you, that in the gospel, in the Church, is every blessing and ordinance to be found which will bring forth eternal happiness and joy in the kingdom of God.

How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word.
What more can he say, than to you he hath said,
You who unto Jesus for refuge have fled?

I bear my testimony that Jesus lives; that he is the Christ, the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world; that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, and that the men who have stood at the head of this Church, and who now stand at the head of this, God's Church, as prophets, seers, and revelators, are wise shepherds, faithful leaders, fathers to the people and to all mankind who will listen to their instructions. I bear this testimony humbly, in the fear of God, and in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang the anthem, "The Lord Victorious" (Mascagni), with great beauty and effect, calling forth much commendation for the leader and members of the chorus.

Conference adjourned, until Monday morning at 10 o'clock. Benediction was pronounced by Elder William L. Rich, President of the Bear Lake stake of Zion.

FIRST OVERFLOW MEETING

An overflow meeting of the conference was held in the Assembly Hall at 10 a. m., Sunday morning, April 4, presided over by Elder Richard R. Lyman, of the Council of the Twelve.

The singing was furnished by the Ogden Tabernacle Choir, Professor Joseph E. Ballantyne, conductor.

The choir song, "Come Unto Me," solo, by Agnes Warner.

Prayer was offered by Elder Antone Christensen.

The choir sang, "O, Love Divine," solo by Mildred Ware.

ELDER JAMES DUCKWORTH

(President of the Blackfoot Stake of Zion)

My brethren and sisters. I feel very keenly my responsibility in being invited to make a few remarks to this splendid body of Latter-day Saints; and I realize that without the assistance of the Spirit of the Lord, it will be impossible for me to discharge acceptably to the Lord this great responsibility. I therefore crave an interest in your faith and prayers, to the end that there may be no impediment whatever in the enjoyment of that Spirit today, to which we are entitled on all such occasions, and that always leads and guides into all truth.

I have been profoundly impressed by the large attendance, not only in this building but in the larger tabernacle, in spite of the inclemency of the weather, and I have been asking myself the question, What does this mean, that so many people are gathered from far and near upon these grounds? I call to mind that which you no doubt have already thought of, that it is one hundred years ago, this spring, since the Prophet Joseph Smith received that wonderful manifestation of the Father and the Son, at which time the great Latter-day work was ushered in. He was blessed more than any other man that we have knowledge of in seeing the Father and the Son, both personally before him, one of whom, the Son, told him in reply to his query, that none of the sects of the earth then extant were right; and he became the instrument in the hands of the Lord in establishing the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are not all privileged to enjoy the same manifestation which he enjoyed, but through the establishment of that work, the Church of Jesus Christ, there has been placed within the reach of all of our Father's children, a knowledge of the divinity of the work that the Prophet Joseph Smith was instrumental in establishing upon the earth; and I have been thinking seriously of that phase of the great Latter-day work.

The question has been raised in outside quarters, what is it that holds the Latter-day Saints together? What is it that gives strength and stability to "Mormonism?" Because, contrary to the expectation of those who hope for the failure and the downfall of the latter-day work, with the growing years and the advancement of time, it seems to gather in strength and stability with promise of perpetuity for all time.

I recall an incident in the life of the Savior, familiar to all of you, found in the 16th chapter of the Gospel according to St. Matthew, which reads:

When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

As it was in those days, so it is in these days, flesh and blood cannot reveal unto men and women a knowledge of the divinity of the personality of the Lord Jesus-Christ, or of the existence of God our Eternal Father and a knowledge of his character and attributes. Men, by human learning and human seeking, cannot find out these things which pertain to divinity. There is a way provided, however, in the divine providence of the Father whereby men may come to a knowledge of the truth, and know these things for themselves, and that way is open to the Latter-day Saints and to all men and women. Flesh and blood cannot give to men and women a knowledge of the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith; man-wisdom alone cannot bring that knowledge to our Father's children. But there is a way provided whereby a knowledge of that great truth can be brought within the reach of every man and woman, and that way is pointed out in the incident to which I have called attention: "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." He is my Father in heaven, and if we will do right today, he is just as willing to bless us with the knowledge of his divinity as he was willing to bless the Apostle Peter with a knowledge of the divinity of the Savior.

So, in answer to the query, wherein does the strength of "Mormonism" lie? my answer would be this, that it lies in the individual testimony that is given to all Latter-day Saints who will honestly and prayerfully and righteously live for that same divine testimony. That testimony does not depend upon our learning, nor upon our education. That testimony does not depend upon family relationship nor worldly possessions. It depends upon conditions that every man and woman can comply with. If we will exercise faith in God the eternal Father, if we will repent in all sincerity of our shortcomings and our transgressions, if we will go down into the waters and receive baptism by immersion, by one having authority, for the remission of our sins; if we then shall receive the imposition of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, and live in such a way that his influence shall be with us and abide with us, we shall know for ourselves whether or not this work is of God the eternal Father, and whether the Savior has spoken in divine right, and is indeed the Savior of the world; and no power of man can take this knowledge from the Latter-day Saints. We may know these things for ourselves, and we are not dependent upon any other man or any other men in all the world for a knowledge of these things; and if there is one thing that we should prize above another, it is that testimony which our heavenly Father has promised unto us. We need it; we are not safe without it, in this day of contending creeds and conflicting opinions, with reference to matters religious. It is of the utmost importance that our feet should be planted upon a foundation that cannot be moved, that is safe and solid beyond all question; and that is the foundation of this great Latter-day work, that is the foundation upon which your faith and mine is placed, and until it rests upon that foundation it is not secure. It is given unto every man and every woman and to every boy and girl, for the Lord is no respecter of persons, and "in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." Thus, when our elders go into the nations of the earth, they make the promise to all nations, that that testimony is within the reach of our Father's children; and in our testimony meetings, as they are held throughout the length and breadth of Zion, the Saints from England, from Scotland, from Belgium, from any and every other part of the world in which the gospel has been preached, bear record of the same truth, that in the land from which they came the Holy Ghost is enjoyed by those who have accepted the truth. They all bear the same testimony of the goodness of God to them in giving to them a knowledge of the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith and the divinity of the great Latter-day work that he was instrumental in initiating upon the earth. And so long as we enjoy that testimony we shall never be led astray; for this is God's work, it is not the work of man. It is the work of the Almighty, and he will take care of it, and it will never fall, no matter what its enemies may hope and pray to the contrary.

Upon another occasion, the Savior was confronted with a defection in the ranks of those who had been his professed believers, and turning to the Twelve, he said to them, "And will ye also go away?" And Peter, that same apostle that was so impetuous on all occasions, said, "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." So it is today. Outside of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, where shall we go? For in this work is found the words of eternal life, for it is indeed the work of God, and it has to deal with everything that is essential to the growth and the happiness of our Father's children, in temporalities as well as spiritualities, for the Lord is interested in all that concerns your happiness and mine. He is our Father in very deed, and in the establishment of his work upon the earth in these days he has in mind not only the spiritual welfare of his children, but also their temporal welfare; and through his servants from time to time he gives unto us his mind and will.

And here I want to bear testimony to the character of his servants as they have been placed in the Church in the past, and as they exist in the Church today. I know that these men are men of God. I know that they give to the Latter-day Saints the revelations of the Lord, the mind and will of God, the Father, and that in so far as we will abide by the counsels which they are inspired to give unto us from time to time we shall be continually in the path of eternal life; that we shall enjoy real happiness in this life and prepare ourselves for that which is greater in the life to come. I do not know of the divinity of the Latter-day work by what any man has said to me; but I know as I live that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of the living God, and that his successors in the presidency have been and are prophets of the living God, for the inspiration of the Almighty has given into my soul that knowledge, to my complete and absolute satisfaction. I pray the Lord that he will bless the Latter-day Saints, that he will help us to be true to the opportunities we enjoy, that his Spirit will ever be with us through our lives, and that in the end we will all receive that welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

(Executive Director of the Y. M. M. I. A.)

It is certainly an inspiration to look out upon this great sea of faces. I sincerely trust that God will bless me with his Holy Spirit for the few minutes that I address you, and that you in turn may know what I am talking about.

The great teacher, Karl G. Maeser, said: "It is not what is said so much that counts, but how it is received." It is how you receive what shall be spoken here this morning, and what has been spoken, not so much the words, but how they are received, and how they pour virtue into our lives, that counts.

I want to make an appeal for the people that are dearest and nearest to your hearts, the boys and girls of this Church. This wonderful story has come from the great world war: When the Hun came knocking at the gates of Belgium, and tore into that wonderfully fortified city of Liege, the word went rapidly out to France, that every Frenchman must take his gun and hurry to defend his fatherland. There was no time to go to training camps; there was no time to go to splendid places like our boys have had an opportunity to go to, and study for a time and prepare themselves. But every Frenchman must take his gun at once and hurry to the front. Away down in Southern France, a father met this call, said good-bye to his wife, Marie, and his only boy, a lad of 16 years, Noal; The Hun came tearing on through Northern France, until finally he had driven the armies to the river Marne. Then there arose that great leader Joffre, who spoke these wonderfully inspiring words, "They shall not pass!" And every Frenchman's heart was thrilled, and each was determined that he would give his last drop of blood, if need be, to hold that land. In the midst of this terrible conflict, this father, with many other fathers, fell. The line was held, the great battle was over, and when this father came from the hospital his arm was gone, and through his body bullets had torn a terrible hole. He went back to his humble home in Southern France. At the gate he met his wife, Marie, in tears, and yet they resolved that they would fight anew.

And then the father said, "Yes, but where is Noal, where is Noal!"

And the mother replied: "O, when you went away he became a law unto himself. He would not listen to me. He went off into the city; he spent the money, and there he is now, in the hospital, the result of his sin and riotous living."

Then that French father said these wonderful words: "My God, what have I been fighting for?"

What did 50,000 American men give their lives for, and millions in Flander's field, and thousands of them, of our splendid American youth? For something that we call liberty? For something that we call the privilege of men to go and come, a statute on a book, a written page, the understanding of nations? It was for the youth. It was for them we bled, for whom the world indeed bled and suffered; your boys and your girls. Who shall reap that harvest of peace and progress which God has in store for this world, in years that are before us, in the preparation for his personal coming to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords? That day is coming, and there is a marvelous day preceding it, the day of preparation. There is not a man or a woman in this audience today but who would give help in this important preparation, and the help is just so simple: it is just taking care of the boy that you are going to meet when you go back home, and the girl that you are going to meet there. And if every father might get it deep into his heart, the absolute necessity of knowing where they are and what they are doing, he'll make a real contribution, not only to the honor of his name but to the citizenship of this splendid Church and Nation of ours.

Now, I am very much interested in some definite programs that have been prepared for the boy scout work, that this uniform represents, for I happen to be the representative of some couple of thousands of boys in Salt Lake City as well as in other parts. An excellent program! Have you got it in your wards? Do your boys follow that program? A person told me the other evening that the program of seeking out boy scouts increased the efficiency of priesthood quorums in his ward; it had meant an increased attendance from 4 to 48; that it had increased attendance at Sunday schools; that it made a real contribution not only to the boys themselves but to the great work of the Church and its auxiliaries. It may be said by some bishops: "We do not want any scouting among our boys; our boys are well enough." Well, these bishops do not understand. We called at a meeting where the boys of such a bishop were, and they were tearing up the benches. He, in his despair cried, "Sit down!" This good old bishop, after what he said about not wanting this program, finally planted a number of those boys down on a bench. I took a rope out of my pocket, and tied a knot, and I said, "Can you tie that knot?" And one rough fellow said, "Ah, nuts! What are you going to do?" and never took any interest in it! I took no notice of it, but tied another knot, a more complicated one. And then another fellow said, "Can you tie that again?" I said, "Sure." And I got another piece of rope. It wasn't two minutes until every boy was so quiet you could hear the old clock tick upon the wall, and the bishop was just as anxious as he could be to get hold of a piece of rope himself!

Yes, we cannot just say, "Be good," to Johnny and Mary: we must think out many things for them to do. The busy boy is an interested boy, he is a safe boy. We have had 800 of them up at the University of Utah this week. My, you should have seen them, as they went to the swim, and how they were taught to save life. They enjoyed these things as many, many boys do now in this Church. One boy in Arizona dug his father from under a load of hay, and taught him a better method of respiration, and when a doctor came, and saw what the boy had done, he said, "You have saved the life of that man, your father, my boy." Their hearts were all bent on doing that type of thing.

You say, the youth of the land are becoming wayward; the girls go out in automobiles in the summer time, and many of them fall, and the boys are a law unto themselves. Let me say this, in all the sincerity of my soul, that it is not "Lost, a Boy," but "Lost, a Leader." The responsibility is ours; it belongs to us; and when God opens the book of life we will be astonished and surprised to know that our hearts were bent on things that we thought were bigger, and we left undone and uncared for the greatest responsibility that God gave us, the keeping of our children.

May God help us to remember when we look into their faces that they are ours, that God gives them to us not only to clothe and to school and to discipline as we meet them at the table, perhaps, but they are ours to walk with, ours to play with; they are ours to pray with, is my humble prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER S. NORMAN LEE

(President of the Box Elder Stake of Zion.)

I think it very fitting, at this time, to refer to the resurrection of the Savior; in fact, to the atonement; and I wish to express myself concerning the fitness of these very modest decorations upon the stand. I had forgotten all about this being Easter—it was snowing outside—and I saw these flowers; that reminded me of the great work done in the meridian of time for the human family, the light of which has reflected even unto our day. I have no notion of saying very much about the atonement at the present time, except to use it as an introduction to the restoration of the gospel through the medium and instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

I remember very well the story of the interest the Prophet took in the propaganda of various religious denominations in the vicinity of his home town, when he was a boy about 14 years of age, and the concern that he felt about allying himself with one sect or another. And I recall very particularly the words of the Savior to him at the time of the vision in the sacred grove, that he was to join none of the sects in the world at that time, because they observed only a form of godliness; that they drew near unto him with their lips but their hearts were far from him.

I have heard one of the authorities of the Church in this day remark that we do not say prayers. Now, I think perhaps that he was anxious to impress upon us the futility of words; that if we observe to speak our prayers only, we are as the people in that day, who drew near unto the Lord with their lips, but their hearts were far from him. What this brother desired to impress upon us is that prayers come from the heart, and are acted out. This lesson has remained with me, but I do not think that it excludes the utterance of the fulness of the heart, because there is a danger of forgetting the Lord, except with our mouths. I think that the utterance of the prayers that are in our hearts should not be excluded for that reason. I regard prayer as one of the most important observances of the people of the Lord, and I cannot understand, after twenty-five years as a servant of the Lord in active service, how Latter-day Saints can be content to go about their daily duties without the expression of the fulness of their hearts in prayer. I cannot understand how people expect to make any progress in this Church without prayer, which is the key to the Father's heart.

In Box Elder we are detached from the busy world, which the people in the center stakes of Zion are subjected to, and I think we live a simpler life. I believe we live a more simple life than that which I discover in my visits to the larger cities of Salt Lake and Ogden. We are more simple as a rule in our dress—with some few exceptions. Of course, we have imitators among us, just the same as we have imitators everywhere; and some of them make monkeys of themselves in trying to imitate, because that is the particular function of a monkey or an ape. So those who do that do not imitate, exactly. Our stake numbers about seven thousand. We are mostly farmers and fruit growers. We talk simply to one another and directly. When I have occasion to say to a bishop in the stake that he is not doing quite what he is required to do, I say to him: "Bishop, you are not toeing the mark, you are not up to the scratch," instead of saying, "Bishop, we have a great work to perform in the Church. We require all of the force available. We must all work together, and do the very best we can. Now, you are doing splendidly in this ward. You are a very fine bishop. The people love you, and the authorities of the Church love you; but now, bishop, in this department here, there is something that is not quite right. I do not suppose you are to blame for it, it probably has escaped your notice," etc. We do not do that sort of thing up there. Although I am a very young man comparatively, I say, "Bishop, buck up, and see that that thing is attended to." And we said to one a short time ago, "Now, bishop, we expect you to bear the responsibility of the progress of your ward, and we do not expect you to come to us and complain about any officer you have in your ward. That is your business, do not bother us with it. But we hold you directly accountable." Well, at first some of our bishops said, "Do not come and interfere with any of our meetings, if you are going to hold us responsible. Do not bring speakers of the general authorities, especially on a night when our officers are supposed to be attending to that we are responsible for, and thereby interrupt things for which we are responsible in our ward."

Now, I am just endeavoring to get at a point I wish to make in reference to prayer. I probably have gone a long way around to it; whereas, my habit is to go directly to the point. But I believe in the simplicity of the utterance of the prayer that is in our hearts. I do not think we need deal with the Lord in forms of generality. I think the Lord understands what is in our hearts. In fact, the scriptures say so. He understands what we need before we ask it, but he requires that we ask for the things that we need, and therein lies a line of development. We learn to know thereby the things that are good for us, and that are not good for us. We learn to draw near unto the Lord, and also learn what would estrange us from the Lord and erect a barrier between us and him.

And so in our teachings in the Box Elder stake, we have directed our people to be quite simple in their expressions and utterances of what is in their hearts; and, to set an example to the stake, the presidency do that. And when something comes up regarding the conduct of some one in the Church—say a high councilor, or bishop,—because that makes the matter more effective, they being more prominent than others—when one of them becomes hard to control, or insists upon doing something he should not do, we go before the Lord and say: “Father, help us that we may be able to reach that man, and set him right. He is wrong, we know that. But in our wisdom and intelligence and ability, we are unable to set him right. We have tried it, and we have not been able to succeed. Now, Father, we would like to have you help us in this matter. It is not a matter of selfishness; it is a matter of the welfare of the Church. We do not desire to be set up before the people as great men. We want to be known among thy people here in this stake where we live as the most serviceable and democratic of all. Now, Father, if you will help us do this, we shall do all that we can do.”

And then, instead of waiting for a miraculous manifestation in answer to that prayer, we use all the judgment that the Lord has blessed us with, and we go about our work, and the testimony that I want to bear is that it has resulted in good. We do not wait until we are urged, but we go ahead and use our intelligence and the wisdom God has blessed us with, but we do not wish to use that intelligence independently of the Lord. That is the point I wish to make.

Now, the Prophet Joseph was simple. The Savior used simplicity in prayer. One of the things that I think has discouraged young people in reference to prayer is that in our wards we find almost half of our people who do not observe family prayer. A few years ago it was thought an achievement to be eloquent in prayer, to repeat high platitudes, something that had been memorable in the Church, and it took a long while to use these things, and the young people grew tired. I remember in a family I belonged to that I dreaded to have a certain one called upon to be “mouth” at prayers in the morning, because I was very sure to be tired, and by the time it was over I would perhaps be found sitting upon the floor instead of kneeling. One thing I admire is simplicity in prayer. Indeed, I think it is very necessary. I do not understand how parents can expect to have the influence over their children that they should have if they do not engage in family prayers. Now, I am not authorized to speak authoritatively upon this point, because we are advised not to shout until we are safely out of danger. My family is just growing up, but they have grown up far enough so that I know that without family prayers I should have lost much of the grip upon them that I have. I know there is a way to prevent young people from breaking away, and even if they should get loose, there is a way whereby one may regain control of his children, through the medium of prayer. I have seen many incipient quarrels nipped in the bud, or quarrels stopped after they had begun, by the family prayer in the morning or in the evening; and ill feelings in the family have been stopped, and not been started again, because who can fall down and direct a prayer to the Lord with hard feelings in his heart? His heart may feel sore and hard when he kneels down, but those feelings are sure to be banished, and he is sure to displace those feelings by the feeling that he is in communion with his Father in heaven.

I wish I could preach this sermon on prayer to the Saints everywhere, that men might be induced to turn from their carelessness and enter seriously into this form of devotion which has been established in the Church. I have written of it for many years past, in an ordinary newspaper. I have written of it in Church periodicals where I have had an opportunity, because it is close to my heart. I believe with all my soul in the effectiveness of sincere, simple prayer, and I believe after three years of experience in the Box Elder stake, that we can go into any part of the stake and receive evidence there, beyond question, of the loyalty and faithfulness of the Saints. That is a testimony to me that our prayers have been answered, because we never attempt to pray before the Saints without having prepared ourselves through the medium of prayer. And we do not think prayer alone is sufficient.

The Lord has said, Take no thought what ye shall say, for it shall be given unto you in the very hour what we shall say; but lay up continually the words of life that you may have something to draw upon.

I wish to say, in conclusion, that there is not anything that I desire for myself that I do not desire for every member of this Church, and for that matter, for every member of the human family. I have spent some years in carrying the message of truth to those who sit in darkness. I have seen some of the fruits of my labors, and there would be nothing dearer to me than to spend all my days in preaching the truth to those who are ready to receive it. May that spirit take hold of this people, because, in my opinion, there is going to be such a call for missionaries as the Church has never experienced before, and we are going to be sent into every part of the world. A great many of us are going to know the truth of the work from actual experience, and a great many are going to suffer one way and another for the testimony of the truth; and I am preaching to the people to make reservations for a few years to be devoted to the work of the ministry among those who are in darkness; and may God bless this people and all who are active in the work of the Lord, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir, with Myrtle Higley and Mildred Ware, sang, "Now Jesus Loved Martha and her Sister and Lazarus."

ELDER WILLIAM T. JACK

(President of the Cassia Stake of Zion)

This conference marks the 90th year since the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and I feel very happy to be present and partake of the spirit that is always present with the Latter-day Saints when they assemble together for the purpose of being instructed in the work of the Lord.

I have listened with very much interest to the remarks of the previous speakers, and see in them very much food for reflection, and they should be a means of valuable suggestion to all present that have listened to them.

This passage of scripture came to my mind while Elder Kirkham was addressing us upon the importance of our boys and our girls, "What doth it profit a man, though he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul, and what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" This sentence was uttered by the Redeemer, after he had made a survey of the conditions then existing in the world, and I think, looking down the stream of time to the age in which we live, and viewing ambitions and aspirations, aims, and means and ways adopted by the children of men for the accumulation of wealth, realizing that where their treasure is shall their hearts be also, this sentence comes to us not only as an interrogation, but it comes as a very strong warning. It comes to us bearing with it its own answer. There is no person who can read that sentence, and not receive the answer in the same spirit in which the question is written; and the thought that came to my mind in this connection was with reference to us as parents in Israel—what shall it profit us, though we gain honor, renown, popularity, and place, and means to gratify our vain ambitions, and lose our sons and our daughters? And what shall we give in exchange for their souls?

The Lord has told us in one of the revelations to the Prophet Joseph Smith, that the responsibility of the early training of the boys and girls rests upon the heads of the parents; and that if we fail in that responsibility, and our children should go astray later on in life, the condemnation will be ours. I think that is an inevitable, definite law. I remember the remarks made by our Father in heaven to Enoch, when he told him of his work and of his desires, they were summed up in a very few words, the work that the Lord had gone to in the firmament and in beautifying the earth, in making the trees to grow and providing grain for food and means for the manufacture of wearing apparel of the people, and all that we wish and have around about us. The Lord in forming all these, and in creating man, placing him on the earth, and giving him laws, commandments and precepts, made a history of the past that is a great criterion for man to follow. It resolved itself into these words: "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and the eternal life of man." Now, I take it from that sentence that all this that the Lord is doing and all that he has so far accomplished in the earth, in the great fall, in the bringing to pass of the immortality and the eternal life of man, that the plan would be a failure, be fruitless indeed, and esteemed for naught, if parents do not do their duty. I see parents who, when their children become a little reckless, get hold of the false spirit that everything is natural. I think it has come to us in an old tale, from away back in the mystic history of the early days of Greece. When

Hercules was a boy, just reaching the period of life when there was a question in his mind which path he should pursue, he went forth by himself, and sat down and meditated. There came to him the temptation pictured to us in the form of a beautiful young woman. She came to him and said, "Hercules, I know what you want; the path that I will point out to you will bring pleasure, will bring you constant place in society, will bring the choice things of life, to eat and to drink and clothing to wear, and you shall be popular in the society in which you shall move, and your whole life will be one constant round of pleasure." But he said to her, "What is your name?" And in reply, she said, "My enemies call me vice, but my friends call me pleasure." Then there appeared to him another beautiful woman, and she said to Hercules, "I shall not deceive you; the path that I shall point out to you will be a path of labor, a path of toil, a path of self-sacrifice, a path in which you will have to devote a great deal of your effort and energy; you will have to forget yourself; you will have to serve your friends; you will have to serve the people of Greece; but if you will take this path and pursue it, although it may bring to you much sweat and toil and much privation and many self-sacrifices, you shall become immortal." Then he said, "What is your name?" She replied, "My name is duty."

Now, I think this same spirit comes into the lives of many of our boys and girls during the age of adolescence; so I say, when parents see a disposition among the young people to go their own way, to do as they please, as they express it, parents should not give them the lines, so to speak, relinquish to them all of their parental care, and permit the boys, like a wild team, to run away. I wonder how many of our fathers, when they have a team which tries to run away, let loose the lines and let them go. Not many. I think our common sense would suggest the importance of taking a similar course to prevent the running astray of some of our boys. I have always believed that if our parents are honest in their religion; if they have their conscience in the work that they are doing, and if they will go before the Lord, as has been stated here by President Lee, in constant supplication; though their sons and daughters may go wild and recreant for a time, the Lord will always bring them back, and will save them. If we have taken our part in teaching them the principles of the gospel and in training them in the ways they should go, I believe that the Lord will take hold and help us by his divine power, and will bring them back; and our glory will be materially increased in the future. If we are successful in this life, it seems to me, in the rearing of an honorable family of boys and girls, men and women who are instruments in the hands of the Lord in helping to bring about his work, and helping to bring about his purposes in the earth, that will be accounted successful. Our success will not be counted by our public show or our popularity among men, but there is more in the fact of the proper rearing of families, the exercising of a righteous and wholesome influence all our lives upon those who are round about us, that our lives may radiate the spirit and the impression that will make the young people better men and women in the future than they have been in the past, and will be a credit to us in the future.

I rejoice in the testimony of the truth and in the opportunity that has been given to the Latter-day Saints to live acceptable lives before the Lord. If we are successful in this, and especially during these times through which we are passing, I believe that the few words expressed through the Prophet Daniel, by the Lord, after the Lord had shown him the great vision of war and turmoil that were coming into the world and through which we are passing at the present time, will apply. He makes this simple statement, conveying a volume of thought to every Latter-day Saint, that those who are faithful during these times among the Latter-day Saints shall shine with the brightness of the firmament, while those who turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.

May we devote our lives to this work that these blessings may come to us, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang the anthem, "Earth and Heaven."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Charles B. Stewart.

SECOND OVERFLOW MEETING

A second overflow meeting was held in the Assembly Hall at 2 o'clock p. m.

President Rudger Clawson of the Council of the Twelve Presided.

The Ogden Tabernacle Choir, Joseph Ballantyne, conductor, furnished the music which was entirely from C. W. Whitney's work, "The First Christmas."

The choir sang, "As the Earth Brings Forth Her Bud."

Prayer by Elder Rodney C. Badger.

The choir and quintet sang, "I Will Greatly Rejoice in the Lord."

ELDER SERGE BALLIF

(President of the Cache Stake of Zion)

My beloved brethren and sisters, in standing before this congregation, I feel very humble and weak, and I sincerely desire that I may have your sympathy, and that I may have the Spirit of the Lord to direct me in the few remarks that I make this afternoon.

My heart is full of thanksgiving to our heavenly Father for the membership which I have in this Church. I prize it above all other things. I am thankful for the Priesthood which I have received, for the blessings and the unspeakable joy that it has brought to my soul.

It was indeed a great manifestation and blessing to me this morning to hear our President sound the key-note of our conference. I felt that he was inspired of the Lord in his remarks, and the testimony came to my soul that he is indeed a prophet of the Lord, that the mantle of the Prophet Joseph F. Smith has fallen upon him. That is burning in my bosom. This is my testimony, my brethren and sisters, I know that he is a prophet of God.

It is a great joy to the world when we announce that it is one hundred years since the appearance of the Father and the Son to the Prophet Joseph Smith. There has never been a time in my life since my father told me of the occurrence that I have had any doubt in my soul that the Prophet saw the Father and the Son, and that he heard the Father say to him "Joseph, this is my beloved Son; hear him." And indeed he had a message to deliver to that youthful person who so soon became the Prophet of the Lord.

In my experience in traveling in different parts of the world, I have often thought of the words, "They are all wrong, they worship me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men." I have many times testified before congregations of the world to this wonderful statement; and I have often thought, I wonder what the people think, what these great so-called Christian nations think, when we stand before them and make that statement. My brethren and sisters, it has been my privilege to bear my testimony of the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith in England, in Belgium, in France, in Switzerland, in all the provinces of Germany, and in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, and my heart has been aglow with joy and satisfaction unspeakable when I have had the privilege of bearing this testimony to the people.

I remember when on my first mission, in 1890, I was called to Switzerland, and was going from house to house without money and without price, and bearing my testimony to the people, I was once about to go into a large house, the owner of which must have been a very wealthy man, and he met me at the door. He did not invite me in, but in my humble way I bore my testimony to him of the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith and of the gospel being restored in its fulness; and I preached to him the principles of faith, repentance and baptism, and I will never forget the reply that he made to me. "My dear boy," he said, "I admire you for your courage, but your doctrine I cannot accept."

Not very long ago I read a letter from one of my old friends in the city of Vienna, capital of Austria. This man was in one of the high schools of Vienna when I was there on my mission, I remember; and he related to me in that letter the condition that exists in that land at the present time. He said, "Brother Baliff, it is not as it was when you were here. When we go along the main thoroughfares and the places, or gardens, in Vienna, we see mothers with infants in their arms starving, they are so much in want of bread to keep life in the souls of their little ones, and hundreds and thousands of people, women and children, are dying for the want of food and clothing to keep them warm." I thought to myself, I wonder how many of those people who are in that condition today heard the elders bear their testimony to them in days gone by. I believe that those people who did hear those testimonies, and who are now suffering those terrible privations and hardships, are touched in their feelings, and that their hearts are filled with remorse because they turned away from that humble message of life and salvation.

I often feel, too, many times in looking over the congregations of the Saints, and I ask myself the question: Do we appreciate the blessings that we enjoy in this land of plenty? O how kind and merciful the Lord has been to us. We have plenty; we have to spare. And sometimes I wonder, in our times of plenty, if we remember the Lord as we should do.

In our stake, the Cache stake of Zion, last year we paid the largest tithing that has been known in the history of the stake. But, in looking over the records, examining our conditions, examining myself and my friends, I ask myself the question, Are we paying a tithing? And I want to say, my brethren and sisters, I do not want to judge Israel, but I believe that many of us have forgotten the Lord and the great blessings that he has poured out upon us, and do not remember how he has blessed this land, how he has made this land indeed prosperous, has blessed the soil so that it produces in its richness. We came into this barren land, and it is now teeming with wealth. The Lord has blessed us in all our outgoings and incomings. But I ask today, how many of our sons and daughters remember the Lord? How many of them, night and morning, call their little families about the family altar and offer up thanksgiving and praise to God the eternal Father for the blessings of health and strength and for the things that have come into their homes. I am afraid, my brethren and sisters, that we are not grateful enough for all of these things. I believe that we ought to be more prayerful and more humble, that our children, the greatest gifts and blessings that we could have come into our homes, have been given to us. But what a responsibility there is in every home, to care for and train and properly rear those children that God has blessed us with. What a great responsibility in training those young men and women that when they grow to the age of understanding they may indeed be representatives of the pioneer families.

I was thinking last evening, in reading the account of the Relief Society conference, that in that vast gathering there were only four who had seen the Prophet Joseph Smith. Today the witnesses who have seen and known the Prophet Joseph are getting rare, and the time will soon come when we will not have these living testimonies from men and women who can stand up and bear testimony that they have seen and heard the Prophet Joseph. Do we appreciate the testimonies of these living witnesses of the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith? I hope and trust that it will grow into our souls, and be burned into the souls of the children of the Latter-day Saints, the testimony of the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and also the testimony of those who have come after them.

I want to bear testimony that I knew the Prophet Brigham

Young. I heard his voice, I heard his testimony; and the Spirit of the Lord testified to me that he was indeed a prophet of the Lord, and so it is with all of his successors, and I am thankful in my heart to God, my heavenly Father, that he raised up these mighty men. And when I look upon this great congregation that gather together in our conferences, I think of the many millions of people who have heard the testimony of the gospel, and many hundreds of thousands have embraced the gospel, and a wonderful work has been wrought in this one hundred years. There is nothing recorded in history to compare with the marvelous work and a wonder that has been accomplished since the Father and his Son appeared unto the Prophet Joseph Smith.

I am very grateful for the privilege of being with you today and partaking of the spirit of this conference; and I pray that the Lord may help us all, that we may live better lives, and appreciate more highly the great blessings that come through obedience to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

May the Lord help us to be humble and true to our covenants, is my prayer, which I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Quartet and choir sang, "Blessed Be the Lord God of Israel."

ELDER URIAH G. MILLER

(President of the Cottonwood Stake of Zion)

My brethren and sisters, I am not accustomed to standing before a congregation of this magnitude, and I am confident, if you knew just exactly how I feel at this particular time, that in your hearts would be a prayer that the weight of the load might be lifted, and that for the short time that I stand before you I may be blessed with the spirit of this office and calling. I recognize the fact that people are gathered together from all parts of the Church for the purpose of attending the general conference of the Church, and that they are desirous of hearing from the authorities of the Church; and inasmuch as I have been asked along with some other brethren to occupy a portion of the time on this occasion, I hope and trust that the Lord will be merciful and will bless me with the spirit of liberty.

I believe that we have all enjoyed the meetings thus far. We have been particularly taken up with the most splendid singing that we have heard. Many of us, possibly, have never before had the privilege of hearing the Ogden choir. We have heard of it; and we have heard many very fine things from this most splendid musical organization today.

I want to read to you a passage of scripture, and if I say nothing more than to read this passage of scripture I trust that it will be to our value. Recorded in the 8th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles is some history of the ancient Church, that deals with the persecutions that came upon the Saints. It was about or soon after the time when

Stephen was stoned to death. Evidently, from the reading of the Bible, a great deal of persecution was organized against the Church at that particular time. The people were scattered from one part of the country to the other, out from Jerusalem. The brethren, in whatever direction they went, were preaching Christ and him crucified unto the people with whom they came in contact. And Philip, one of the authorized servants of the Lord, went into Samaria, and preached the gospel unto the people of Samaria. Many of them believed on his words, and the apostles evidently were at Jerusalem or thereabout, and through some means or other they learned of this, and here we read: "Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost, for as yet he was fallen upon none of them, only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Then laid they their hands upon them, and they received the Holy Ghost." It is the latter part of these verses that I desire to draw attention to at this time, that part which deals with the conferring of the Holy Ghost. There are many beautiful things in these few passages of scripture. The question of authority, with other things, is recorded, but you know I have in mind more than any other one item the question of the reception of the Holy Ghost. As a religious organization, we believe in God, the Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost. We believe that there is only one authorized way by which the Holy Ghost can be conferred upon mankind. That is through the ordinance of the laying on of hands. We believe in the laying on of hands as one of the ordinances of the gospel; and when the Church came into existence, following that great and mighty vision of the Prophet Joseph Smith, about one hundred years ago, when the heavens were opened and the Father and the Son made their appearance unto the Prophet Joseph, and answered the petition of his humble heart; from that start grew the Church. In the Church came the ordinances of the gospel. Among these is the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Religious history bears out, it seems to me, the evident fact that, in all of God's dealings with the children of men in the various generations of the world, when one member of the Godhead is upon the earth ministering generally among mankind, another one is taken away from the earth. It was altogether possible, no doubt was true, when Christ was upon the earth that he at times was visited by the Father, and that when he went down into the river Jordan and was baptized by John the Baptist, the Holy Ghost descended upon him in the form of a dove. We are told also in this sacred writing, that John the Baptist had in his soul the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb. Yet we find this rather startling declaration recorded in the Bible, in the 16th chapter of John and 7th verse, "Nevertheless, I tell you the truth, it is expedient that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you. But if I depart, I will send him unto you." Christ, one of the members of the Godhead, was upon the earth. While he was here, that passage of scripture would rather give us to understand, that the ministry of the Holy Ghost was not universal among the members of the Church. It was necessary that Christ should go, and when he went another member of the Godhead would descend and come and minister unto mankind. My brethren and sisters, we are living in that day and age of God's dealings with the children of men when one personage of the Godhead, the Holy Ghost, is ministering among the children of men; and I often wonder in our work in the Church, in our ministrations among the people, if we do not look for really too marvelous things, if, when we kneel down to pray, we do not really expect that the heavens are going to be opened and some divine personage is going to come unto us and deliver unto us the message that our souls are craving.

I desire to read to you a passage or two from the Doctrine and Covenants dealing with the ministry and the mission of the Holy Ghost. These passages of scripture are what came to the Prophet Joseph Smith and in behalf of Oliver Cowdery. They were given one year before the Church was organized, yet they carry with them that wonderful message, that the Holy Ghost is not only for Oliver Cowdery but for every member of the Church. It is recorded in the 6th section, commencing with the 20th verse:

Behold, thou art Oliver, and I have spoken unto thee because of thy desires; therefore treasure up these words in thy heart. Be faithful and diligent in keeping the commandments of God, and I will encircle thee in the arms of my love. Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the same that came unto my own, and my own received me not. I am the light which shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not. Verily, verily, I say unto you, if you desire a further witness, cast your mind upon the night that you cried unto me in your heart, that you might know concerning the truth of these things. Did I not speak peace to your mind concerning the matter? What greater witness can you have than from God?

In the 8th section, second verse, these words were recorded:

Yea, behold, I will tell you in your mind and in your heart, by the Holy Ghost, which shall come upon you and which shall dwell in your heart. Now, behold, this is the Spirit of revelation; behold, this is the Spirit by which Moses brought the children of Israel through the Red Sea on dry ground.

We might read other passages of scripture, if we had time, showing the principle, that the Holy Ghost will dwell upon us, be in our hearts, to give us peace, contentment, revelation, and those things that will lead us to Godliness.

I pray, my brethren and sisters, God's blessings upon the people and members of the Church, that we may be true to every covenant that we have made, that the Spirit and the blessings of the Lord may rest upon us, and the blessings and power of the Holy Ghost may be with us as a witness of this work, which I testify to you is true, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

AFTER ONE HUNDRED YEARS.

In the year 1820, Joseph Smith had his first vision. After one hundred years, what do we see? We behold a great and a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains, organized into a Church and founded upon principles and doctrines which he set forth. We behold a great conference of the Church here on the 4th day of April, 1920, and the people of the Latter-day Saints gathered together until the Great Tabernacle is filled to overflowing, the Assembly Hall is crowded to its utmost limit, and another overflow meeting is now in session upon this block, while hundreds have been turned away from these buildings because they could not get admission.

THREE PRECIOUS VOLUMES.

My brethren and sisters, between these two covers I now hold are three precious volumes. They are books that are most precious to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and to the world at large. I take it that these three books are perhaps as desirable and precious as any three volumes in the world. One is the Book of Mormon, translated by the Prophet Joseph Smith, giving a religious history of the ancient people of this continent; also in this book will be found the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in its fulness. This Book of Mormon is attested by eleven witnesses, in addition to the Prophet himself who brought it forth.

The book that follows is the Doctrine and Covenants. It emphasizes the fact that the channel of revelation is open between the heavens and the earth, a channel that had been closed for at least 1,800 years. Isn't that wonderful? Isn't that impressive, the fact that that channel has again been opened? For, as a matter of fact, this book contains the revelations of the Lord Jesus Christ to his prophet and to his Church. How blessed are this people, that we can have in the Church the voice of revelation.

This work is introduced to the Church and to the world by a most powerful preface. I will just read a line or two. It is wonderfully impressive. It emphasizes divine truth:

Hearken, O ye people of my Church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say, hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together. For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated.

See how comprehensive and how sweeping is this statement, every eye shall see and every heart throughout the world shall be penetrated by the power of God.

And the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed. And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days. And they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them. Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my preface unto the book of my commandments, which I have given them to publish unto you, O inhabitants of the earth. (Doc. and Cov. 1:16.)

The whole section is worthy of the deepest thought.

And now, in this book of Doctrine and Covenants you will find, among the many that have been given, a mighty revelation upon the authority of the holy Priesthood. You will also find there a mighty revelation with respect to the dead and the temple work, and a mighty revelation with regard to the great principle of marriage, and other communications from the heavens. Oh, is it not marvelous indeed!

The next book is the Pearl of Great Price, which is composed of writings, narrations, and translations of the Prophet Joseph Smith. In this book you will find a record entitled the Book of Moses, showing how great was the light and truth that was shed forth from God, and the dealings of God with his children and the doings of Moses and also of Enoch, who lived before the flood. You will also find there the Book of Abraham, a translation by the Prophet Joseph Smith, which has brought to light a knowledge of great things concerning Abraham and his authority and Priesthood, and the revelation of God to him concerning the heavens and the earth, all of which is subject matter for deep and thoughtful study. And you will further find a narration by the Prophet himself of the First Vision referred to. He gives an account of it in simple and impressive language. It is beautiful; the very simplicity of it is beautiful indeed. That communication did not come to us in scientific terms. No, it does not need to be translated. A child can understand the story of that First Vision, it is so simple and beautiful. And we find that the simplest things in the world often turn out to be the most profound, do we not? I think so. Well, you could hardly put a price on the Pearl of Great Price. It is most precious indeed.

And what a revelation, what a wonderful combination of books under one cover. If that were the only book of the kind in the world and it was in my possession, dear me, I would not part with it upon any consideration. I would hold on to it as I would hold on to my soul. I would eat with it and sleep with it, and have it with me at all times. But, brethren and sisters, you have this book. How many of the Latter-day Saints appreciate these great standard works of the Church? How many of the Latter-day Saints are giving them study and reflection? We are commanded to search out wisdom from all good books, and particularly good books of the Church.

The Book of Mormon has always been to me as interesting as a romance, as interesting to me as any thrilling story that I have ever read. It is marvelous, and yet in connection with the story of the people of the Nephites is the gospel of Jesus Christ laid before us in all its beauty and simplicity. Well, the Lord be praised. Surely this is "a marvelous work and a wonder," is it not? You cannot improve that definition? There is no use trying to elaborate upon it. You might speak for a month about "Mormonism," and you could not get beyond saying, it is a "marvelous work and a wonder," almost beyond human understanding and quite beyond full explanation.

Well, blessed be the Prophet of the Lord, the living prophet today; and blessed be the people of the Latter-day Saints, and now after the lapse of a hundred years let us rejoice together in the knowledge and testimony of these things.

APPRECIATION OF THE OGDEN TABERNACLE CHOIR.

Let me say, in conclusion, and I think very likely I am voicing the feeling of the entire congregation, when I say it, that I appreciate fully the effort put forth here by the Ogden tabernacle choir, led by Brother Joseph Ballantyne. They have done most excellent service today, and have helped to make this meeting a splendid success. Of course, our meetings are always successful when they are conducted under the direction of the Spirit of God, but we could not get along without the singing. We must have good singing. We must have singing that is tuneful, we must have singing that breathes forth the Spirit of God; we must have singing that is in harmony. And in the singing today we have had perfect harmony. The Lord bless the Ogden tabernacle choir, and may he bless us all, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The quartet, Agnes Warner and choir, sang, "I Bring You Glad Tidings."

ELDER ANDREW JENSON.

(Assistant Church Historian)

My brethren and sisters, I am expected by those who have appointed me to address this meeting to give an outline of "Mormonism" for one hundred years, and with the limited time at my command, I can only expect to touch the very high spots, in order to make my narrative at all comprehensive and interesting.

There is a notable similarity between some of the events of the first century of the Christian era and those of the nineteenth century. With the exception of the experience, which Jesus, when twelve years old, had with the Jewish rabbis in Jerusalem, we know next to nothing about his childhood days. Several books have been published dealing with Christ as a child, but they are largely, if not wholly, apocryphal, and consequently more or less unreliable. No great event seems to have taken place in the Savior's life, according to holy writ, until he was thirty years of age, when he was baptized by John in the river Jordan. With that event was commenced the real preaching of the gospel, ushering in that particular dispensation at the head of which stood Christ and his apostles. Yet we are safe in surmising that from the time the Savior was twelve years old until he was baptized he was training and preparing for the great mission before him.

So also with the Prophet Joseph Smith, who was born in the beginning of the nineteenth century. Nothing of importance seems to have occurred in his life, until he was between fourteen and fifteen years old. Born in Vermont he moved with his parents when ten years of age to western New York, where he resided in 1820, one hundred years ago, and where he received the glorious vision which may consistently be termed the very beginning of the new dispensation. The following ten years were years of preparation, and during that time Joseph was visited by the angel Moroni a number of times, received the plates from which he translated the Book of Mormon into the English language, was visited by John the Baptist, who confirmed upon him and Oliver Cowdery the Aaronic Priesthood, and later visited by Peter, James and John who confirmed upon him the Melchizedek Priesthood. Unfortunately we do not know the exact date on which the latter event took place, nor have we been able to establish the exact day or days upon which the Three Witnesses and the Eight Witnesses to the Book of Mormon saw and handled the plates and attached their signatures to the testimonies which are recorded at the beginning of that sacred record; but we are safe in saying that these important events took place in 1829. The Book of Mormon being published as early as March, 1830, the printing must have been commenced in 1829. We are able to state positively that the Book of Mormon was published early in 1830, because the Historian's office has secured a copy of an old newspaper published in Palmyra, New York, which announces the Book of Mormon for sale as early as March, 1830.

While I am speaking about the Book of Mormon, I may say that after the first edition of 5,000 copies, printed by Egbert Grandin, in Palmyra, New York, a great many other editions have been published of the book, both in America and in England; and besides being thus published in the English language on the two hemispheres the book has been translated and published in the Danish, the French, the German, the Italian, the Welsh, the Hawaiian, the Swedish, the Spanish, the Maori, the Dutch, the Tahitian, the Turkish and the Japanese languages, fourteen foreign languages in all.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized on the 6th of April, 1830. With the Priesthood conferred, and in possession of the Book of Mormon, which contains the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, Joseph Smith became an instrument in the hands of the Lord to establish once more upon the earth a true Christian Church, according to the divine order, and also in accordance with the laws of the State of New York.

It is interesting to note that before the end of the year 1830 missionaries of the Church had traveled 1300 miles westward from the place of organization, and to the Atlantic coast in the other direction. The gospel was also preached during the fall of 1830, and the winter of 1830-1831 to several tribes of Lamanites or Indians, some of them beyond the western boundary of the United States, as it was then (now the western part of the State of Missouri). Many people were converted and perhaps 200 persons had joined the Church by baptism before the close of 1830. Also a number of miraculous interpositions of the power of God took place right in the beginning. In fact, nearly all the gifts of the Church were manifested in that first year, including the gift of healing, prophecy, etc.

In the year 1831 the Church grew rapidly, not only in the east, but also in the western land; and we also find that the first attempt at colonization on the part of the Latter-day Saints took place that year. When the Church was only 15 months old, the Prophet Joseph and others traveled about thirteen hundred miles from Fayette, N. Y., to Jackson county, Missouri, where they founded a prosperous colony. They set up, among other things, a printing press and published a periodical, 120 miles further west than any other paper in the United States. This publication, commenced in June, 1832, was the first periodical of the Church. It was called the Evening and Morning Star. After that followed the Messenger and Advocate, then the Elders' Journal, next the Times and Seasons, the Millennial Star, the Nauvoo Neighbor, the Frontier Guardian, etc., and at length, commencing with June, 1850, the Deseret News, which is the present organ of the Church.

In 1832, also, a dreadful tragedy took place in the town of Hiram, Ohio, when the Prophet Joseph was tarred and feathered and left for dead, and the life of a little child, adopted by the Prophet and his wife Emma, was sacrificed through exposure on account of mob violence. Soon after this event the Prophet Joseph made a second visit to Missouri to bless and encourage the Saints who were gathering in Jackson county. His first visit to that State had been made by him in the summer of 1831, on which occasion the land of Zion was dedicated for the gathering of the Saints and the site of a temple selected and dedicated.

In 1833 a mob arose in Jackson county, Missouri, and drove the Saints, now numbering about twelve hundred souls, away from their homes, having previously destroyed the printing office and other property. In that year also the First Presidency of the Church was organized, Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams being ordained and set apart as counselors to the Prophet Joseph. This was the beginning of the First Presidency as it still exists.

After the expulsion from Jackson county most of the Saints settled temporarily across the Missouri river in Clay county, Missouri, where they made their second attempt at colonizing and were again successful. In the meantime the Saints also made a success at colonization in Kirtland, Ohio, where they commenced the erection of a Temple in 1833, and changed an insignificant village into a town of 2,000 people. The Temple built there still stands.

In 1834 another remarkable event took place in the history of the Church. The Saints, who had been driven from Jackson county, needed assistance and the Lord called the young men of the Church in the Eastern States to go to their relief. Hence the organization of Zion's Camp (numbering over two hundred persons) which, led by Joseph Smith in person, marched 1,000 miles to Missouri, taking their lives in their hands, prepared to sacrifice their all in the interest of their persecuted brethren and sisters, who had been so barbarously treated by the Jackson county mob. But the Lord did not allow this little army to enter into a physical encounter with the mob. In the famous revelation given on Fishing river in June, 1834, the Lord said that he had brought these young men that far, in order to give them an opportunity to show their integrity and their confidence in the Prophet of the Lord. The great majority of them made good, and although the Church was only four years old at the time, it was discovered on this journey of Zion's Camp that some very good and staunch men had already identified themselves with the Church of Christ. Among the members of Zion's Camp were such men as Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Parley P. and Orson Pratt, Hyrum Smith, Wilford Woodruff, George A. Smith and many others whose names have become household words among the Saints. The journey made by Zion's Camp in 1834 compares most favorably with that of the Mormon Battalion and that of the Utah Pioneers of 1847. In 1834 also the first two High Councils in the Church were organized, one in Kirtland, Ohio, and the other in Clay county, Missouri.

In February, 1835, the Prophet Joseph called the young men together who had distinguished themselves for their faithfulness and integrity as members of Zion's Camp the year before, the Lord having a blessing in store for them. On this occasion twelve of the most faithful men in the Church were chosen, mostly from among the members of Zion's Camp, to constitute the first quorum of the Twelve Apostles and soon afterwards seventy other men were chosen, mostly from the same body, to constitute the first quorum of Seventy. I may explain that up to this time the officers in the Priesthood had consisted of Deacons, Teachers, Priests, Bishops, Elders and High Priests.

The year 1836 witnessed the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, which had been built at a cost of about $100,000. It would indeed be a very easy task for the Saints now to erect a Temple like that, but it was a most stupendous work for the few, comparatively speaking, who at that time constituted the membership of the Church. In that Temple the Saints received great blessings and witnessed many grand and glorious manifestations of the power of God. Jesus Christ himself appeared to some of the brethren in that Temple and declared that he had accepted of the building which had been built and dedicated to his name. Moses also appeared in that holy edifice and committed to the Prophet Joseph the keys for the gathering of Israel from the four quarters of the globe, an event which is responsible for the many nationalities represented in the Church at the present time. Elijah the prophet, who was taken into heaven without tasting death, also appeared in the Kirtland Temple and conferred to men in mortality the keys for turning the hearts of the fathers to the children and the hearts of the children to their fathers, lest the whole earth should be smitten with a curse, as predicted by the prophet Malachi.

In passing, I will say, that the Kirtland Temple was not provided with a baptismal font, nor rooms for ordinance work; it simply provided a sacred place for Christ and other heavenly messengers to appear and restore certain keys to the brethren and confer blessings upon the people. It also provided a place for schools of learning for the priesthood. This year (1836) the Saints in Missouri were compelled to leave their possessions in Clay county and move into a prairie country which soon afterwards was organized into Caldwell county. When the Saints moved into that county it was inhabited only by two or three families who made their living by gathering honey, but in the course of three years the Saints turned that naked prairie country into beautiful farms and gardens. In Caldwell county they founded the city of Far West and many other villages; in the adjoining Daviess county they located Adam-ondi-Ahman on Grand river, and in Carroll county they purchased the little town of De Witt. They increased so rapidly in that part of upper Missouri that in 1838 there were as many thousand Saints there as there had formerly been hundreds in Jackson county.

In 1837 the first Latter-day Saint missionaries were sent to England where they commenced that great missionary labor which has resulted in so many thousands of Latter-day Saints from the British Isles migrating to America to become a most important factor in the growth of the Church. The British Mission was a natural outgrowth of missionary labors performed by Parley P. Pratt in 1836, in the Dominion of Canada, where John Taylor, a staunch and influential Englishman, who subsequently became president of the Church, believed the testimony of Brother Pratt and was baptized, together with many others.

In 1838 persecution by mobs was renewed in Caldwell county and that season became a veritable year of martyrdom. We are all familiar with the fact that seventeen Saints were massacred at Haun's Mill on the 30th of October, 1838, and that David W. Patten, one of the original members of the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and others were killed about the same time on Crooked river. During that year, also, the Prophet Joseph and others were thrown into filthy dungeons as prisoners and kept in durance vile for many months.

In 1839 the exodus of about 12,000 Saints from Missouri took place under the exterminating order of Gov. Lilburn W. Boggs. The exiled Saints fled to Illinois and there, during the following six years, founded and built up the city of Nauvoo, in Hancock county. I will here merely mention that attempts had previously been made by others to build up a town on the same site, but instead of building a town they built a good-sized graveyard on the side hill. Our people, "plucked and peeled," as they were, built up a city containing about 15,000 inhabitants. In Church history this city is known as Nauvoo the Beautiful. It stood on the east bank of the Mississippi river where that mighty stream changes its course so as to make a horse-shoe bend and on the projected area thus formed and bounded on three sides by the river, the city was built. There is still a remnant of Nauvoo left, but it is a matter of history that as soon as the Saints took their departure for the far west an apparent blight or curse settled down upon the place, and has rested upon it ever since. Instead of being the largest city in Illinois, as it was in 1846, Nauvoo of to-day is a small insignificant village, suffering under the displeasure of God as literally as does the land of Palestine which was placed under a curse because of the wickedness of its inhabitants.

In 1840 the Saints petitioned the President and Congress of the United States for redress for the persecutions endured by them in Missouri, but their prayer was met with this laconic answer from the chief executive of the nation: "Your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you." That year (1840) a number of the Twelve Apostles arrived in England as missionaries, Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Parley P. Pratt, Wilford Woodruff and Geo. A. Smith being among the number. These brethren commenced the publication of the Millennial Star, which is still published in England and is now the oldest periodical in the Church.

The year 1841 witnessed the laying of the foundation of a Temple in Nauvoo and the forming of the Nauvoo Legion for the protection of the Saints. This military organization was continued many years after the Saints located in Utah, and some of the brethren who are present today undoubtedly belonged to the Nauvoo Legion.

In 1842 Joseph Smith was troubled with vexatious lawsuits. During his lifetime it is asserted that he was arrested forty-seven times, but was acquitted in every instance; and when his enemies finally found that they could not prove him guilty of any crime, or even misdemeanor, they swore that "if the law could not touch him, powder and ball would."

In 1843 enemies made another attempt to kidnap Joseph and take him to Missouri, but the Saints of Nauvoo, who loved their Prophet as they loved no other man, except it be Christ himself, rose up in righteous indignation in his defense, and with the Nauvoo Legion at their back rescued their Prophet and brought him safely back to Nauvoo.

The year 1844 witnessed the assassination of the Prophet Joseph. He fell as a martyr to the cause of truth, together with his brother Hyrum and others.

In 1845 the mob burned nearly all the houses outside of Nauvoo, and in 1846 they sacked Nauvoo itself. A number of brethren were killed in the so-called Nauvoo battle and on other occasions. Early in 1846 the Saints made preparations to move westward into the land of the setting sun, and in February of that year, when the weather was so cold that the frost formed a natural bridge across the great Mississippi river, the exodus of the Saints commenced. One company of Saints from the Eastern States, instead of crossing the continent, traveled by sea, doubling Cape Horn and landed at the little Spanish village called Yerba Buena on the Bay of San Francisco, July 31, 1846. This company published a paper called the California Star and turned the village of Yerba Buena into the present town of San Francisco.

After the Saints in 1846 had traveled westward about three hundred miles from Nauvoo a request reached them from the United States government for five hundred men to participate in the war with Mexico, and while some of the Saints demurred on the ground that they needed all the able-bodied men in their camps to protect themselves against the Indians, President Brigham Young answered the government messenger by saying: "You shall have your battalion, even if we have to make it up of our Elders," and, sure, enough, the Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons of the Church were mustered into that battalion which commenced its famous march toward California in July, 1846. It is said that these volunteer soldiers made the most difficult march ever undertaken by infantry in any military campaign. The so-called sick detachment of the battalion, which was not considered strong enough to undertake the march all the way across the deserts to California, was sent to a place now called Pueblo, on the Arkansas river, where they spent the winter of 1846-1847, and thus became the first Anglo-Saxon settlers in what is now the State of Colorado.

Having served their time according to enlistment the Mormon Battalion was discharged in California in July, 1847, and early in 1848 some of the members discovered gold in California, an event which for a while almost turned the world upside down.

Most of the exiles from Nauvoo spent the winter of 1846-1847 on the west bank of the Missouri river, where they built a town called Winter Quarters, the first Anglo-Saxon settlement in what is now the State of Nebraska. This was done because the Mormon Battalion took away so many of the stronger men that the rest of the exiles could not continue the journey to the mountains that season, as had been contemplated, but in April, 1847, a company, known in history as the pioneers, consisting of 143 men, three women and two children, left Winter Quarters for the Rocky Mountains and arrived in Great Salt Lake Valley in July, 1847. About one thousand eight hundred others of the exiled Saints arrived in the valley in the fall and spent the winter of 1847-1848 in the valley.

Early in 1848 the pioneers in the Valley put in crops which from the beginning promised a rich harvest, and for a while everything looked promising and encouraging, but in the early part of the summer crickets came down in myriads from the mountains surrounding Great Salt Lake Valley and destroyed a great portion of the crops. Notwithstanding every effort was made to drive them off by means of bushes, long rods, etc., whole families and neighbors turning out en masse until almost exhausted, the whole would have been destroyed, had not the Almighty in his kindness sent gulls in vast numbers which covered the fields and destroyed the crickets. This circumstance saved the life of the colony which during the winter of 1847-1848 had lived on half rations and their whole hope of escaping starvation was centered on the harvest of 1848. They could not possibly have lived through another winter, nor could the four thousand other emigrants who arrived in the valley in 1848 have escaped starvation if the harvest of 1848 had proved a failure. Hence, when we view the beautiful statue erected on this block in honor of the sea gulls we may well offer up a prayer of thanksgiving for what these birds did for the pioneers of Utah.

While everything looked dreary and blue in Salt Lake Valley in 1848 and clothing of every description as well as foot gear was so extremely scarce that some of the men were obliged to make clothing of skins, Heber C. Kimball, as a prophet of the Lord, on a certain occasion arose in the midst of a congregation of Saints and said that within one year States goods would be sold on the streets of Salt Lake City as cheap as in the city of New York. After uttering the prophecy, Bro. Kimball remarked that it seemed almost impossible for his prediction to be fulfilled; nor did the brethren who heard him place any confidence in his words. Yet the prophecy was fulfilled in a most natural way in 1849, when tens of thousands of gold diggers from the east and from Europe passed through Salt Lake City on their way to the gold mines in California. Being anxious to continue their journey without delay these travelers were willing to exchange their States goods for fresh cattle and supplies of food, and thus were the wants of the people, so far as clothing was concerned, relieved, while the gold miners could continue their journey rejoicing. In 1849 Provo in Utah county and Manti in Sanpete county were founded, Ogden having been founded the year before. Early in 1849 the people in the valley organized the Provisional Government of the State of Deseret which was the only general government here for more than two years or until the machinery of the Territory of Utah came into existence in 1851. I could say much about this government and the conditions in the Valley, showing the loyalty and the good character of the Saints during those years, but time will not permit. In 1849 missionary operations, which on account of the exodus had been neglected for a few years, were revived, as missionaries were not only called to the United States and Great Britain but to continental Europe. Thus it was that new missions were opened up among many people who do not speak the English language, among them being missions to France, Italy, Denmark, Sweden and the Hawaiian Islands.

In 1850 a string of new settlements was founded in Utah Valley, including Lehi, American Fork, Pleasant Grove, Springville, Spanish Fork, and Payson.

In 1851 the government pertaining to the Territory of Utah (which had been created the year before) was set in motion and Fillmore, Millard county, chosen as the first capital of Utah. That year also Brigham City, Willard, Nephi, Parowan, Cedar City and other settlements of the Saints were founded in Utah and besides these, San Bernardino in California. This year Great Salt Lake City was made an incorporated city with Jedediah M. Grant as the first mayor. New missions were opened by the Church in South America, Australia, India, Switzerland, Norway and Iceland.

In 1852 nearly all the Saints who had stopped temporarily in the Pottawattamie country in Iowa emigrated to the Valley.

In 1853 the so-called Walker war broke out in Utah, in which a number of the settlers were killed. Fort Supply, near Fort Bridger, was founded by the Saints. This was the first Anglo-Saxon settlement in what is now the State of Wyoming. This year also the first branches of the Church were organized in Sweden.

In 1854 hundreds of emigrating Saints from Europe died from cholera while sailing up the Mississippi river and while crossing the plains. New missions of the Church were opened in New Zealand and in Gibraltar.

In 1855 the grasshoppers destroyed nearly all the crops in Utah. A colony of Saints was established in Carson Valley (now Nevada) and a missionary settlement founded near Salmon River in what is now the State of Idaho, this being the first Anglo-Saxon settlement in that State.

Owing to the destruction of the crops in 1855 food was very scarce in Utah during the early part of 1856, but the lives of the people were saved by their eating thistle tops and sego roots. In 1856 upwards of two thousand Saints crossed the plains with handcars, and as many more during following years.

In 1857 the so-called Johnston army troubles occurred, through the falsehoods circulated by Judge W. W. Drummond and others. This army was sent to Utah to punish the "Mormons" who were accused of being disloyal to the government. The Utah militia mustered into service by proclamation by Gov. Brigham Young, stopped the army temporarily and the troops spent the winter of 1857-1858 near Fort Bridger.

In 1858 through the good offices of Thos. L. Kane and peace commissioners the difficulties existing between the U. S. government and the citizens of Utah were settled and the army entered the Valley, but not until the inhabitants had vacated Salt Lake City and the northern settlements. They, however, returned to their homes.

In 1859 the Federal judges in Utah exercised undue authority and caused considerable difficulty by instituting unjust court proceedings against Church leaders and others.

In 1860 the so-called pony express was introduced which made communication between Utah and the east and California much easier.

In 1861 Utah was divided and Nevada came into existence as a territory, afterwards as a state. That year also upwards of two hundred wagons, with four yoke of cattle to each, were sent from Utah to the Missouri river to bring in the poor Saints who were emigrating to the valley. This movement on the part of the Church was repeated in 1862, 1863, 1864, 1866, and 1868. This year (1861) the overland telegraph line was completed to Salt Lake City.

In 1862 another convention was held in Utah which re-adopted with slight amendments, the constitution of 1856. Delegates were sent to Washington to ask for Utah's admission into the Union as a state; the request was again refused. In 1862 Camp Douglas was established, near Salt Lake City, by California volunteers.

In 1863 new settlements of Saints were founded in Sevier Valley, Utah, and Bear Lake Valley, Idaho.

In 1864 Calls Landing was established by the Saints on the Colorado. Others were subsequently called. The first "Mormon" settlements in Arizona.

In 1865 the so-called Black Hawk war broke out in Southern Utah and continued for three years, during which about 75 people were killed and thousands of head of stock taken off by the Indians. In consequence of these raids and massacres the counties of Piute and Sevier were abandoned as well as some of the small settlements and ranches in Kane county.

In 1866 ten companies of Church teams were sent to the Missouri river after the poor.

In 1867 the large tabernacle in Salt Lake City was nearly completed.

In 1868 nearly all the crops in Utah were destroyed by grasshoppers. In order to create employment for the people, that they might earn means to buy bread, President Brigham Young took a contract to grade ninety miles of the Union Pacific Railroad. Thus work and money became plentiful in Utah.

In 1869 the Union Pacific Railroad was completed to Ogden and on May 10th, 1869, the last rail connecting the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific railroads was laid at Promontory. This put an end to the long and tedious travel across the continent by ox teams. In January, 1870, the Utah Central Railroad was completed to Salt Lake City, thus making the capital of Utah a railroad town.

In February, 1871, the settlements of the Saints on the Muddy, now in Lincoln county, Nevada, were abandoned by them, owing to oppressive taxation by the officials of the new State of Nevada. That year also Judge James B. McKean, who had recently been appointed chief justice in Utah, united with the associate justice in setting the laws of the territory at defiance, which led to considerable disturbance, as under his rulings civil and religious liberty almost departed from Utah for the time being, and tyranny usurped their places.

Early in 1872 another constitutional convention met in Salt Lake City to adopt measures anew for the admission of Utah into the Union. A constitution and a memorial to Congress were finally adopted which provided for woman's suffrage and minority representation. When it was submitted to the people for their vote 25,324 persons voted for it and only 368 against it. In May the memorial was presented to Congress, but admission of the State of Deseret into the Union was denied because of the unpopularity of the religion of the Latter-day Saints.

In 1873 an unsuccessful attempt was made by a company of Saints to settle in Arizona territory. President Geo. A. Smith visited Palestine and other countries.

In 1874 a large number of Indians joined the Church and the United Order was introduced among the Saints in Utah.

In 1875 Geo. A. Smith, first counselor to President Brigham Young, and Church historian, died in Salt Lake City.

In 1876 a large number of families in Utah were called by the Church authorities to locate settlements of the Saints in Arizona; others were subsequently called. The first "Mormon" settlements in Arizona were founded on the Little Colorado river. There are now about fifty settlements of the Saints in Arizona, comprising four Stakes of Zion.

In April, 1877, the Temple in St. George was dedicated on the occasion of a general conference of the Church being held within its sacred walls. The erection of that temple, the first in Utah, was commenced in November, 1871. During the year, 1877, under the direction of President Brigham Young, a general re-organization of all the settlements of the Saints took place, regular Stakes of Zion being organized in the different counties in Utah and also in Idaho and Arizona, where the Saints resided. No sooner was this important organization completed than President Brigham Young, who had presided over the Church 33 years, took sick and died in Salt Lake City, August 29, 1877. After his death the Twelve Apostles, with John Taylor at their head, took the lead in all matters pertaining to the Church for three years.

In 1878 a number of Mexican claims were purchased by the Saints in Conejos county, Colorado, where several "Mormon" settlements were subsequently located; they now constitute the San Luis stake of Zion.

In May, 1879, Daniel H. Wells was imprisoned in the territorial penitentiary for alleged contempt of court. The offense consisted in his refusal to disclose the secrets of the Endowment House. In July Elder Joseph Standing was shot and killed by a mob near Varnell station, Whitfield county, Georgia, where he had labored as a missionary. The murderers of Elder Standing were subsequently all identified and three of them arraigned in court in Dalton, Georgia, on the charge of murder in the first degree, but, although the evidence against them was clear and direct, they were acquitted by a wicked and bigoted jury and an unrighteous judge.

In April, 1880, the Church celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its organization by a Jubilee conference held in Salt Lake City, at which the people voted to remit $820,000 of the indebtedness to the P. E. Fund in favor of the worthy poor and to distribute 1,000 cows and 5,000 sheep among the needy, all of which was done. In October, 1880, the First Presidency of the Church was once more reorganized, John Taylor being chosen president with George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, counselors.

In 1881, Gov. Eli H. Murray of Utah put himself on record in a most unusual manner by issuing a certificate of election to Allen G. Campbell, the minority candidate for delegate to Congress from Utah, although George Q. Cannon had been properly elected by an overwhelming majority.

In 1882 the so-called Edmunds anti-polygamy bill was passed by the U. S. Senate. Under this bill a large number of leading brethren were arrested in Utah, Idaho and Arizona, charged with so-called unlawful co-habitation, and about one thousand men were imprisoned in the Utah Penitentiary and elsewhere for refusing to desert their wives and children. That year (1882) another convention was held in Utah which adopted another constitution and memorial to Congress, praying that Utah be admitted into the Union as a State, but Congress again refused to accede to the wishes of the people of Utah.

In 1883 the Logan temple was finished and dedicated.

In 1884 Elders Wm. L. Berry and John H. Gibbs and others were cruelly murdered by a mob in Tennessee for no other crime than that they were Latter-day Saints.

In 1887 President John Taylor, who had been in exile for some time, died in Kaysville, Utah. The Twelve Apostles again came to the front as the presiding authorities of the Church with Wilford Woodruff, the senior Apostle, at their head.

In 1888 the missionaries were quite successful in their labors, especially on the islands of the sea, including Samoa, where the fullness of the gospel was introduced that year. A temple was completed and dedicated in Manti, Sanpete county.

In April, 1889, a First Presidency was again sustained by the Saints, Wilford Woodruff being unanimously chosen as President of the Church with George Q. Cannon as his first and Joseph F. Smith as his second counselor.

In 1890 the municipal government of Salt Lake City passed from the hands of the Saints represented by the People's Party into those of the so-called Liberal Party which for many years past had represented the anti-"Mormon" faction of the territory. The Liberal city council took possession in February and immediately inaugurated a reign of extravagance and blunders. Until this transfer Salt Lake City was one of the best governed cities in the world, life and property had been safe, peace and order the prominent characteristics of the community, and taxation light. But no sooner had the Liberals come into power than the city became a regular rendezvous for tramps, footpads and burglars, etc. Vile houses of resort, gambling hells, saloons, and other places of evil, multiplied and were at the close of the year in full operation with but little check, even on the Sabbath day. At the general conference of the Church held in Salt Lake City in October, 1890, the Saints voted unanimously to discontinue polygamous marriages, agreeable to the provisions of the manifesto issued by President Wilford Woodruff and dated Sept. 24, 1890.

The year 1891 witnessed the Saints in Utah dividing on party lines; the old People's Party was disorganized and the majority of the members of the Church joined, or acted in unison with, the two great national parties of the land, the Democrats and Republicans, according to their individual preference.

In 1892 missionary work was re-commenced on the Society and Tuamotu Islands; for forty years the Saints of those islands had been left without the guidance of Elders from Zion.

In April, 1893, the Temple in Salt Lake City was dedicated. It had been in course of erection forty years, and its estimated cost was $4,000,000. It was by far the largest Temple erected by the Church up to that time.

In 1894 President Grover Cleveland pardoned all polygamists and restored them to their civil rights.

In 1895 a State constitution was made and adopted by the Constitutional Convention held in Salt Lake City and every preparation made for Utah's admission into the Union as a State. President Grover Cleveland signed the proclamation which admitted Utah into the sisterhood of States Jan. 4, 1896. The occasion was honored by grand celebrations in Salt Lake City and other places in the new State.

In 1897 Utah celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the arrival of the Pioneers in Great Salt Lake Valley.

In 1898 President Wilford Woodruff died and the First Presidency of the Church was re-organized with Lorenzo Snow as president. In 1899 settlements of the Saints were organized in the Big Horn Basin in Wyoming, several quorums of Seventies were organized and the missionaries of the Church met with considerable success in their administrations abroad. The close of the century found the Church in a most healthy condition. There were 43 Stakes of Zion, comprising about 400 wards and eighteen missionary fields in the United States and in foreign lands. The total membership of the Church numbered about 400,000 in the whole world.

The next decade witnessed many changes and steady progress for the Church. President Lorenzo Snow died in 1901, and the First Presidency of the Church was re-organized with Joseph F. Smith as president and John R. Winder and Anthon H. Lund as counselors. Many new wards were organized in 1902, a Bureau of Information was established on the Temple block, in Salt Lake City, and a new mission house was built and dedicated in Copenhagen, Denmark. In 1903 the Book of Mormon was published in the Samoan language and a new mission house was built and dedicated in Denver, Colorado. In 1904, Salt Lake City was divided into four stakes, a number of prominent Church people were summoned to Washington, D. C., to testify before the Senate committee on Privileges and Elections in the Smoot case, and a mission house, purchased and remodeled by the Church, was dedicated in Stockholm, Sweden. The railway connecting Salt Lake City with southern California was completed, the Church purchased the old Mack farm in Vermont and erected a monument thereon, which was dedicated Dec. 23, 1905. The Church opened a mission field in ancient Greece. In 1906 President Joseph F. Smith made a trip to Europe; it was the first time in the history of the Church that a president of the Church visited Europe. In 1907 the First Presidency of the Church issued a significant address to the world, stating the policy and belief of the Church. During the following four years several new stakes of Zion and a number of new wards were organized.

During the decade commencing with 1911 a great many tabernacles, meetinghouses and chapels were erected. The missionaries met with considerable opposition in some of the European countries. Most of the Saints were forced to leave Mexico in 1912, owing to the revolution in that land. Permanent missionary homes were secured and dedicated in Chicago, Illinois, and in Los Angeles, California, in 1913. A site for a temple was dedicated in Alberta, Canada. President Joseph F. Smith died in Salt Lake City Nov. 19, 1918, and the First Presidency was re-organized a few days later with Heber J. Grant as President and Anthon H. Lund and Charles W. Penrose as counselors. In November, 1919, the newly erected Temple in Hawaii was dedicated by President Heber J. Grant, and early in 1920 a site for a temple was selected in Mesa, Arizona.

Now a word in conclusion, comparing the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, with the primitive Christian Church. When one hundred years had passed over the original church all the Apostles, save one, and many others, had been martyred, while great numbers of the early Christians had apostatized from the faith. If we compare our position, with theirs, our hearts will rejoice that we live in the latter days. If we had lived in the days of the Savior and his apostles, and had belonged to that dispensation, we might have had the privilege of falling as martyrs, or perhaps we might have denied the faith. But living in this day, we are members of a Church growing year by year, and now stronger than ever before. At least half a million people constitute the membership of the Church at the present time, and instead of having dead apostles, we have a live First Presidency, twelve live apostles, more than two hundred quorums of seventy and quorums of high priests and other orders of the Priesthood in every stake of the Church. As a Church organization we have grown until there are seventy-nine stakes of Zion and nearly one thousand wards and branches of the Church in these mountains alone, to say nothing of our membership in foreign lands, and still we are safe in saying that "Mormonism" is only singing, as it were, on its first verse. So much having been accomplished during the past one hundred years, what will not be witnessed in the next hundred years to come? For as a Church we are here to stay and grow until our influence for good shall be felt to the ends of the earth. Let us remember that it has cost some of the best blood of the nineteenth century to accomplish that which has already been done. Let us remember, too, the services of Zion's Camp, the Mormon Battalion, the Pioneers of 1847, and the many other faithful men and women who have made sacrifices for us, and through whose labors and faithfulness we today enjoy all the blessings that come within the reach of those who keep the commandments of God.

May God bless us all that we may always remain faithful and true, is my earnest prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir with William S. Wright, Mildred Ware and Myrtle B. Higley sang, "Is This the Messiah?"

Benediction pronounced by Elder Willard C. Burton.

THIRD OVERFLOW MEETING

A third overflow meeting was held in the Bureau of Information Hall at 2 o'clock p. m., April 4, 1920, Elder John M. Knight, President of the Ensign stake and of the Western States Mission, presiding.

The music was furnished by the Swanee singers.

The chorus sang, "Let the Lower Lights be Burning."

Prayer was offered by Elder Benjamin Goddard of the Bureau of Information.

The chorus sang "The Palms."

ELDER NEPHI JENSEN

(President of the Canadian Mission)

One Sunday afternoon last December I spoke in the Queen's Square Theatre in St. Johns, New Brunswick. At the close of the meeting a good Irish business man invited me to spend the evening at his home. I accepted the invitation and passed two delightful hours with this new found friend, talking about religion. My host was an old man, who had never joined a church. In fact for a number of years he had taken pleasure in detecting indications of the derth of spirituality in the popular churches. In the course of our conversation he told a story of a good Christian woman who had the misfortune of breaking her arm. She believed in the old faith and requested one of the pastors of St. John to come and pray for her recovery. A reverend gentleman went to her room and looked through his prayer book for a prayer suitable for the occasion. After some fruitless search, he shook his head and said, "I can find a prayer for rheumatism, and a broken leg, but I cannot find a prayer for a broken arm. I am sorry that I cannot pray for you." (Laughter.)

When I heard this story I was reminded of what Bill Nye wrote in his comic History of The United States about the religion of the first settlers of New England. He said, "The Pilgrims came to America because they did not believe in elocutionary prayers." I am thankful that I belong to a Church that does not believe in "elocutionary prayers," or "sermons."

Our religion commenced with the sincere prayer of a boy. God's own hand rocked its cradle, and his inspiring Spirit has unfailingly guided its destiny until it has become a mighty power for human purification and ennoblement.

I am deeply thankful for the opportunity of coming home to participate with you in the celebration of the glorious centennial anniversary of Joseph Smith's first prayer. The day that boy first prayed openly is one of the holiest days in the history of the human race. His intense faith-cry to God that day was the noblest act of the noblest soul except One. It marked the beginning of one of the greatest epochs in the history of religion. It started the real modern spiritual renaissance. For that day the true meaning of prayer was discovered for modern man.

True prayer is the soul of true religion. It distinguishes religion from superstition. As long as men pray from the heart with real faith they will retain some actual assurance of the existence of the true God.

When the Christ taught men how to pray the simple, undoubting prayer of faith, he gave to the human race its mightiest instrumentality. But alas, man lost this key to actual communion with his Maker. In the middle ages paganism drove truth from the altar and living faith from the human heart. The simple religion of prayer and "worship in spirit and in truth," was turned into a gaudy show. Superstition killed living belief, and dead formalism drove out of the sanctuary the simple heart-yearning prayer that seeks and finds, asks and receives.

Joseph Smith, the great modern prophet, discovered the lost meaning of prayer. With a heart that did not stagger at the thought of trusting the invisible God, he cried to the God of heaven for wisdom, and he received what he asked for. By the power of his mighty faith he called to earth the Father of all, and his Son Jesus Christ. Because he trusted implicitly in the words: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God," he was privileged to hear the awful Voice that had stilled the storm and stayed the wave.

The story of that boy's all-conquering faith is the most thrilling incident in modern annals. There is light, life and hope in it. It is the beacon that lights the way across the dark chasm which centuries of ignorance and superstition have placed between God and man. Because that boy asked and received, thousands who have come after him have been able to ask and receive.

We are the legatees of the faith and truth that Prophet bequeathed to the modern world. Many of us have followed his example and have sought and found the soul-satisfying knowledge of God. I have asked and received. Without the slightest hesitancy I can say that I know God answers prayer, as certainly as I know that light is light.

Men come from afar and witness what the Latter-day Saints have accomplished in this intermountain region, and go away deeply impressed with these achievements. Often when these men are approached on the subject of "Mormonism" they say, "I care nothing about your religion, but I am greatly interested in what you people have accomplished." This is a very superficial commentary upon the history of the Latter-day Saints. For, apart from the living faith taught and exemplified by our Prophet, the Latter-day Saints would not have been able to accomplish any more than any other people.

It was living faith in a living, personal God that gave them fortitude to sacrifice all that they might be true to him who was their All in All. It was not mere human ingenuity that selected this place, which is now secluded from the industrial turmoil of the rest of our country, as a resting place for modern Israel. It was true inspiration which first said, "This is the place!" It was not a mere sense of the strength in unity that sent this people out in concert to make roads, build bridges, construct irrigation canals, and erect splendid temples and tabernacles. A deeper spirit was the inspiring cause of all these achievements. "God has spoken again:" This was the all-impelling thought that banded the Saints together as the heart of one man in their great enterprises. All that the Saints have risked and suffered, all that they have ventured and accomplished, all that they have sacrificed for the salvation of mankind, has been suffered, accomplished and sacrificed in the name of and by the power of the faith that Joseph Smith discovered one hundred years ago.

This vital faith puts man in actual contact with God. It is the one thing the world most needs today. Everywhere I find pathetic proof of the lack of this inspiring belief in God. I detect it in the insipid singing in the sectarian churches. I notice it in their hollow prayers. I discover it in their old sermons that speak of a distant God in high sounding theological phrases.

Last Sunday afternoon I was more than usually impressed with the sectarian lack of the power to get in contact with God. I attended a Pentecostal meeting in Winnipeg, Canada. At this meeting I saw an audience of several hundred people, who have discovered the hollowness and coldness of modern religion. These people were honestly but vainly striving, in song and prayer and sermon, to get close to the Father of All. In their hearts they sincerely desired to "touch the hem of his garment." But alas, they could not. They were compelled to look across nineteen silent centuries for a real palpable instance of the manifestation of the power of God. When they tried to look up trustingly, the doubting thought, "God has not done anything during all these centuries," would drive faith from their hearts. And so they "cry aloud, and the only answer that comes is the wail of their echoing cry."

But how different with the Latter-day Saints! They are able to look up with undoubting trust in the God who not only did great things many centuries ago but who has made bare his arm to the nations in the day and time in which we live. In our hearts we can say, "I cannot doubt God, for in our own time he answered the prayer of the boy Joseph Smith. He has sent holy angels to the earth with truth, graces, powers and authorities. He has indeed "proceeded to do a marvelous work and a wonder, among this people."

The world today socially and politically is rocking. It is sitting upon a volcano. God only knows what tomorrow will bring forth. And why is there so much unrest and instability all over the world? Why is every man's hand raised against his neighbor? Why has the world with the two thoughts "money and fun" turned the world into a fool's paradise? The answer to these questions is found in a very short sentence:—The world has lost faith in God. With the loss of faith, it lost the sense of moral obligation.

The great philosopher Emanuel Kant said, "Two things inspire me with awe, the starry heavens and human accountability." This sense of "human responsibility" to God is the only thing upon which enduring civilization can be built. The world more than anything else needs an intensified consciousness of its responsibility to Almighty God. Nothing but the living, vital faith that our Prophet discovered one hundred years ago can bring back to the human race the awful thought, "There is a great final Judge to whom we are responsible for all our thoughts, aspirations and acts." Only this thought will bring peace to the nations.

So let us be thankful, my brothers and sisters, that we are the legatees of the riches of faith and truth that the great Prophet of the latter days received from God. Let us remember that a testimony of these things is the only sure anchor of the soul. Let us remember that outside of this testimony all is uncertainty, all is doubt, all is despair. But with this firmly rooted testimony in our hearts our souls can be calm, for we can endure as seeing the Divine Weaver behind the tangled web of life, making all things come out right for those who do right.

God help us to treasure this testimony, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HEBER C. IVERSON

(President of the Northwestern States Mission)

The thought expressed by President Jensen that the world, today, politically, socially, and religiously, is rocking, I will beg the privilege of stating just a little differently, and emphatically. I believe that it is so rocking because it is not founded upon the rock of revelation, as is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, concerning which foundation the Lord himself said; "the gates of hell cannot prevail."

The time is now here, predicted of old, when all that can be shaken will be shaken, and, truly human institutions are being shaken and will fall.

This morning President Lund called our attention to the fact that the so-called Christian denominations, in convention, have ruled us out of their society, as un-Christian, because we are not believers, say they, in the divinity of Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of the world. If we are not, I would like to know who are! That thought suggested to me two very significant articles I recently read and happened to copy a few excerpts from. These notes, with your permission I will read with such comments as I may be led to make.

An inquiry which seems to test the results of religious education of the last half century in day schools and Sunday schools has been made in England. The Y. M. C. A., desiring to ascertain the attitude of young men of the army toward religion, undertook an exhaustive inquiry among the chaplains who were with the young men at the front. The result of this inquiry appears in a book called The Army and Religion, but an excellent summary of the evidence is given by Dr. Frederick Lynch in The Christian Work, from which we quote.

Questions were asked of them concerning their attitude toward religion, their faith in a Supreme Being, and those things fundamental in religion. To these queries the following responses were given:

"There is a universal belief in God among the young men of England, but it is the product of natural religion. There is little atheism, but there is little evidence that the knowledge of God comes from Christian teaching."

What a fearful indictment of Christian teaching. This knowledge like their conviction of the immortality of the soul, and their instinctive turning to God in the hour of danger, is an organic instinct, and in spite of teachings to the contrary concernig the true character of God. They have deeply rooted in their soul instinct a belief in the true God. In the Church of England prayer book we have these words, "We believe in one living and true God, of infinite goodness, wisdom, and power, without body, parts or passions." In other words, an incomprehensible, immaterial being! Thomas Jefferson expressed himself in a letter to his distinguished friend, John Adams, in this wise, "When we speak of an immaterial existence, we speak of nothing; when we say that God, angels, and the human soul are immaterial, we say there is no God, no angels, no human soul." I cannot reason otherwise. At what age of the Christian church this heresy of immaterialism or veiled atheism crept in, I do not know, but heresy it truly is. Christ taught none of it. True, he said, "God is a spirit!" but he had not yet defined what spirit is, nor hath he said that it is immaterial. And the Fathers of the first four centuries believed it to be material—fine, and etherial, in very deed, but nevertheless material. The Prophet Joseph Smith declared that spirit is matter, that it is pure and elastic, fine and etherial, but it is matter. Hence they found Christianity teaching an incomprehensible, immaterial, impossible God. Their belief in him is not founded upon the teaching of the past half century.

Concerning the equally vital question of belief in the Redeemer of the world, Jesus Christ, this is said:

When it comes to thoughts about Jesus Christ, answers are quite full and explicit. There is universal respect for him, though the heroic side of his character seems largely unknown. There is little knowledge of him as the Son of God, the atoning sacrifice, or as the source of living power. The men seem seldom to think of him until questioned. He is remote from their daily life. Very many letters said his doctrines were womanly and his character as presented in church sentimental. The "living Christ" is merely a name, and means little to the man. Christ is a historical figure, not a present Redeemer. The practical religion of the great mass of men seems to be a vague theism entirely disassociated from Christ.

He has not yet been introduced into their religious teaching effectively, and they are coming to realize that serious fact.

The same question has been discussed by another, and an eminent one, in these words:

Present day attitude of the general public toward the churches was expressed by Father Bernard Vaughan. "I grieve beyond everything," he said, "to have to say how my country-folk in bulk do not accept the divine personality of our Lord, that is to say, they do not give whole-hearted belief in the Apostles' Creed. And Christ they only know as a name always to reverence and sometimes to swear by. Do not for a moment think that I am making this statement without foundation—on the contrary, what is thrust before me more and more every day is that not even the language and terminology of Christianity is understood by the people.

"Read the latest book on the subject, The Army and Religion, An Inquiry and Its Bearing on the Religious Life of the Nation. It is compiled out of 300 memoranda resting on the evidence of many hundred witnesses.

"When you have put that book down you will find that there is hideous reason, lamentable reason, for believing that Christ, to 85 per cent of our beloved countrymen and countrywomen is today only one name among others, like Plato, Sophocles, or Marcus Aurelius.

"To this growing section of the community Christ is not a living force, inspiring their lives and Christianizing their conduct.

"Must I say it," he continued, "that we are living upon the afterglow of Christianity, which before the great religious revolt in the sixteenth century was woven not merely into the religious, but into the legislative, philosophic, social and domestic life of 'Merrie England' for 1,000 years?

"To convert England to Christianity we must start like our Catholic missionaries among the heathen—with the children. Alas, parents to whom Christianity is nothing and its dogma worse than nothing will refuse to have their children respond to the Divine Master's call, 'Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not.'

"Somebody will ask me, Is this neopaganism due to the war? Not a bit of it. The war has been the occasion of revealing it, that is all.

"If you want to know what has de-Christianized the country, I point my finger to the provided school from which Christ has been turned out and the door slammed in his face.

"The thought of it makes me bury my face in my hands and sob with sorrow and shame."

Our conception of Christ, his relationship to us as a mediator between our Father and his children upon the earth, is to be found in the memorable words of Paul the apostle, who, though possessed of great wisdom and learning, above that of mostly any other man of his time, did not devote his time to the preaching of higher ethics or of any other problems, but declared to the Corinthians, "When I came to you, I came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." Why? Because no message the world needed then, nor today, nor in any age of the world, equals in importance that sublime, glorious message which you and I have had vouchsafed unto us through the revelations of the Almighty.

Paul said, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Christianity has recently been declared by eminent divines to be a miserable failure in the world. But the gospel of Jesus Christ "is the power of God unto salvation" and cannot fail.

Our idea concerning that great Character whom our Christian friends say we do not believe in, is expressed in these sentiments emphasized by Paul, in his Epistle to the Hebrews:

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? And again, when he bringeth in the firstbegotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him. But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. And thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands.

If there be any doubt as to the identity of this glorious Character herein described—let this testimony of John the beloved disciple of the Lord set it at rest, wherein he said:

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not. There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe. He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light. That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He was in the world and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. * * * And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth.

What? The helpless babe of Bethlehem's manger, the despised carpenter of Nazareth, the sorrowing man of Gethsemane, the crucified hero of Golgotha, who prayed heaven's forgiveness for his blood-thirsty murderers—he the creator of heaven and earth? Yes, so say the scriptures, and so we believe, and so we testify that we know.

Unto us he has said, "Be ye, therefore, perfect, even as our Father in heaven is perfect. Was he an immaterial being? Was he other than a glorified, celestialized man? To his disciples, after his resurrection, he appeared, and bade them behold him and the prints of the nails in his hands and in his feet, and come and thrust their hands into the wound in his side. "Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bone as ye see me have."

He occupies a glorious position on the right hand of our Father, and has pointed the way and made plain the path, and commanded us to walk therein, unto his companionship and glory—"For to him that overcometh will I give to inherit all things," said he.

Paul added, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God * * * and was made in the likeness of men." We, too, are made in the image of God, children of God. We believe literally in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man—not as a mere pulpit platitude, but as an actual reality; and we know, because he has been seen, as the testimony was borne this morning. Great and glorious is our privilege! "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in his excellent word!" Men living in this dispensation have looked into the face and heard the voice of the Redeemer of the world.

This is our testimony to the world, this is the message of the hour, the only one that will save the world. "Christianity"—so called, "has failed." The gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation. It is the perfect law of liberty. The Prince of Peace is the one who ordained it for the peace of the world; and they may cry, "Peace, peace," but it will not come except through the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of the world, which is being delivered by his servants, who bear his Priesthood, is my testimony to you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The chorus sang, "Boys of the Old Brigade."

ELDER REY L. PRATT

(President of the Mexican Mission)

I rejoice very greatly, my brethren and sisters, in having this privilege of meeting with you here, and I have listened with great appreciation and interest to the testimony of the brethren that have spoken this afternoon. Also, I was very greatly interested and edified by the remarks of President Grant and President Lund in our session in the Tabernacle this morning.

I am thankful to the Lord for these gatherings; for the privilege that we as a people have of coming together and being instructed, and listening to the teachings and the testimonies of men whom we know are inspired by our Father in heaven. I am thankful to the Lord that my lot is cast with the people of this Church; and though I have many, many things to be thankful for, and for which I, day by day, thank my Heavenly Father, I think there is no thing that I so genuinely thank him for as I do for the gospel that has been restored in these days in which we live; for the gospel, in very deed, as has been referred to this afternoon, and as defined by the Apostle Paul, is the power of God unto salvation, unto all who will believe, as, of course, those who believe will obey it.

I am thankful to the Lord for the testimony and the knowledge concerning our Father in heaven that came into the world about one hundred years ago, when the boy prophet, with a keen desire in his heart sought to know which of all the sects of the day was the church that Christ recognized. The greatest revelation that has come to the world, in all the history of it, was given to Joseph Smith, when he discovered that our Father in heaven was in very deed a perfect, tangible being. The Christian world had gone astray, and believed in the kind of God defined in the English prayer book; and other religious peoples worshiped the creations more than the Creator, not knowing who God is. But, through that glorious vision, the truth has been borne in upon the world that God is, in very deed, our Father in heaven, and that we are made in his likeness.

It is a very strange thing, coming at the time when it did, and a very hard question to answer: Why should Joseph Smith, had he been a mere reformer not inspired of God, have conceived of the great things that he revealed to the world? Why was he not like other reformers have been, ever since men have taken it upon themselves to reform the religious thoughts and creeds of the world? Why should Joseph Smith have been singled out to have announced this all important and great truth to the world, if he had not been what we claim that he was, inspired of the Lord, and if he did not receive—as we testify that he did receive—this glorious vision of the Father and of the Son? I am thankful for these things and for the restoration of the Gospel through this mighty prophet that the Lord raised up in these the latter days.

There are a great many things connected with the coming forth of the truth and the life and the prophecies given to Joseph Smith, that to me are wonderful. I challenge you, brethren and sisters, to imagine any young man being able to say what Joseph said that the angel told him concerning himself, under similar circumstances, and see it so literally fulfilled as it has been in his case. When the angel came, in answer to his prayer to our Father, that he might know his standing before him, after some years had intervened after the first vision—when the angel came and taught him, that heavenly messenger quoted ancient Scripture to him and outlined to him the mission that the Lord had called him unto; he told him about the history that through him would be made known unto the world, of the ancient people of this land, and he said to him: “Your name shall be known for good and for evil among all men everywhere.” Now, just keep in mind the fact that he was an obscure boy, away back in a New England town; but O, how literally has been fulfilled the word of the angel, as Joseph said it was told unto him!

At dinner today, I was in conversation with a man who has spent four or five years in South America—in Bolivia, in Peru, in Chile, in Brazil, and if I mistake not, I think he said he was over in Argentine. He says that away down there, there is no place that you can go that the name of Joseph Smith and the fame of the “Mormons” is not known. True it is, that in many places it is known for evil, but even in that, it fulfils the prophecy of the Lord. It is a fact that we have never put forth any very great effort to carry the message of “Mormonism” into South America. One mission was established there, the land was dedicated to the preaching of the gospel, but missionaries have never labored in South America. I know of but very few copies of the Book of Mormon that have been sent into that land. They would have had to be in the Spanish language, to have reached the peoples of most of those countries, and I am pretty well conversant with all that has been done with regard to the distribution of Spanish literature for a number of years, and I know that it has not been sent there; but still, this man, who is by the way, not a member of our Church, testifies that away back in the Indian towns, away back from the centers, away back where the Spanish language is scarcely spoken, but where the native languages of those South American Indians is spoken, the name of Joseph Smith is known.

To me, it is a wonderful thing, and I thank the Lord for the testimony of the divine mission of Joseph Smith that there is in my heart.

I was particularly struck this morning with the testimony of President Grant. He testified that he knew that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that the gospel has been restored in these the last days. He said, there will be some of you who will say that you cannot accept it, that you cannot believe it, but all the disbelief and all the ridicule and all the denial of those who cannot believe cannot take that testimony out of the hearts of thousands of people—from the land of the midnight sun in the Scandinavian countries, to South Africa, and from the north of North America to South America, in this land, among men and women everywhere upon the face of the whole earth (though it is true in sections they are few in number). The testimony of the divinity of the mission of Joseph Smith in the earth as a prophet of the Lord, is being borne daily throughout the world, everywhere; and I have heard men testify until it seemed that their testimony pierced the very center of my soul, here from the stand in the Tabernacle; I have heard them testify in the stakes of Zion, I have heard them testify in the wards of the Church; and I have heard them testify in the mission fields, here in the United States and in Mexico and all over and up and down the land; but the testimonies of the leaders of the Church do not differ in sincerity or in genuineness, from the testimonies of the humble members of the Church everywhere. For, as my heart has been touched here by the testimonies, those unmistakable, spiritual testimonies that carry conviction to the hearts of men, so has my heart been touched by the testimonies of the simple natives of the land where I have been called to labor for so many years.

I recall now having held meetings in their little dwellings, built perhaps of corn stalks and thatched over with banana leaves, and in the night time, when we have gathered together, after these same people had worked during the tropical heat of the day and nearly worn themselves out we have gathered together, and with the light of a mere tallow candle, scarcely enough to see to read by, I have seen them stand up and I have seen their countenances brightened by the same spirit, and heard them bear the same strong testimony that carries conviction to the hearts of men, that I have heard from our brethren here; and I want to bear to you this afternoon, my testimony that I know that this is the Lord's work: I know that it shall go on triumphant, and shall spread and shall be established in all the earth—and ultimately the time will come when all men everywhere will acknowledge that this is the truth. Just as I expect to see the day come, some time, somewhere, when every knee shall bow to Christ, and every tongue confess that he is the Savior of the world, so do I expect to see the time come when every tongue will confess this great truth, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God. Men may not confess it because they want to. All men that will confess it, perhaps, will not repent of their sins; but conditions will be brought about by the calamities that the Lord will send upon the world and his punishments meted out to men, until men cannot deny, but will confess, even though they will not repent, that these things are true.

It is a wonderful thing to know that this is the truth. We are a remarkable people in that respect. I have attended testimony meetings in many churches—only the other day, when I was stopping off a few hours at Trinidad, over in Colorado, I saw a little hall lit up, and went in to the service that was held there, and it was a testimony service, and I listened attentively. I listened anxiously, and I wanted to hear somebody say that they knew that they had the truth, and while many testified, none testified that they knew, and never have I heard anybody outside of the membership of this Church, stand up and say that they know that the gospel that they have embraced is the truth and is the power of God unto salvation.

This Church, brethren and sisters, has been built upon the rock of testimony. Joseph Smith, when he came home from this remarkable vision, brought down upon himself, by a recital of what he had seen, the hatred and the persecution of all the world, it seemed, and he was never free from it from that day until he gave his life, sealed his testimony with his blood; and he tells us in this book, The Pearl of Great Price, in the Writings of Joseph Smith, that he was given to understand that if he would only forsake that testimony or forsake that story and say that he had been deceived, he would end all the persecution that had been heaped upon him, and that he would be received as all other men again; and that his sorrows should not continue in that regard; but, he said, How could I? I knew that I had seen a light and I knew that within the light I had seen two personages, and I knew that I had heard their Voices, and I knew that they had spoken to me, and further than that, I knew that God knew that I knew those things, and who am I that I might withstand God?

My brethren and sisters, his testimony was faithful and true to the end of his life; and the same has been the case in regard to many of the members of this Church, some of them in obscure circumstances, and some perhaps that will never be heard of, but were in their sphere and in their place just as valiant in their testimonies and in their defense of the truth as was the Prophet Joseph Smith. And that is one blessing in this Church, we do not all have to be prophets, in the sense that he was, in the Kingdom of God, but we do all have to have faith, we do all have to repent, we do all have to live right, and we must, each one of us, have the same testimony that he had, or we cannot be saved in the Kingdom of our Father in heaven. Heroism is not confined to those alone who are great in the eyes of men.

to speak of, that happened away down in the land of Mexico, where I have been laboring. In the year 1913, conditions became so bad in Mexico that upon the advice of President Smith, we decided to leave the mission for a time and move out of the country, and with my family and the seven elders that were left with us then, we were making preparations to go. I sent word to the branches round about. We had been preparing them for it for two years. We had every branch, as we thought, that could be organized into a branch, fully organized, and we had told the people that perchance we might be called upon to leave them for a time, but wanted them to be in a condition to take care of themselves; but just in the afternoon of the day upon which we were to leave in the evening, a young man, who only two months before had been baptized a member of the Church with his two sisters and a little later his mother and his wife and a young friend of the family and, I think, one or two more in that particular locality, came into the mission house, and there was sorrow in his face, and as he clasped my hand, he said: "Brother Pratt, is it true that you are going away? Is it true that the missionaries are going to leave us?" I said, "Yes, Brother Monroy, it seems that that is the wisest thing to do." And he said: "Well, I have been around and visited the other conferences and branches some, and I know that they have their branch organizations and their conferences and the Priesthood of the Lord, and they can get along in some sort of way; but what is going to become of us? We have no branch. Who will teach us? Who will guide us? Who will carry us forward in this great work?"

Well, it seemed to me I could not do other than I did. I said, "Dear brother, please sit down in that chair;" and I called the secretary of the mission into the room and said, "Brother Young, we will ordain this good brother an elder and set him apart to preside over the branch in San Marcos, though there are perchance only ten people there members of the Church. And we set him apart as branch president, after having ordained him an elder in the Church; and I said, Brother, you go back up there and gather your little branch of people together, and tell them of this. We have not time to go and tell them about it. And I gave him a letter. And I said, you take care of them as best you can; put your faith and trust in the Lord and he will bless you and magnify you, and you will be an instrument for good in that community.

That night we left, and he took the train back to his home. For two years during the troublous times that followed, I received letters from him, and they are among the things that I treasure most in life, for they are full of faith and they are full of devotion to the Lord, and they are full of love toward his fellow men. He went to work and gathered his people together and began to hold meetings; and from that humble beginning, it was not more than a year until from seventy-five to one hundred people were meeting there regularly, and in the two years that he presided over that little branch, something like sixty people were added to the Church as a direct result of his humble and faithful labors.

But in the events that have swept over Mexico like a scourge, the revolution came to his town, and the opposing factions from the north and south were contending, with the little town of San Marcos between them, the Saints living virtually and literally upon the firing line, and day after day the conflict raged, and the Saints one Sunday held their meetings while the shells from either side were falling over their meeting house, but they continued with their services.

Finally the faction from the north were driven out, and the men from the band of Zapata came in, and someone said, "There is a man over there who has been assisting the people of the other faction, he has been a colonel in the other army. These people from the south are infinitely fanatic. I never saw anything like it. They go to war with an image of the Virgin Mary tied around their necks; and everybody who will not believe as they do, they think they have a perfect right to exterminate. They arrested this dear brother of ours, and they asked him if he had a store of arms, and he said no. It seemed to be a habit of his from the time he was converted, always to carry in his pocket the Bible and the Book of Mormon, and he drew them out and said, "These are my arms, and I have carried, and I carry them to benefit, not to destroy my fellowmen." And they took him and a young man who was in the same house, a member of the Church also, to a big tree and put a noose around their necks and strung them up until they had fainted, and then let them down and revived both of them again and gave them another chance if they would only tell where their arms were and say that they would renounce their strange religion—for among the accusations brought against him was this, that he was teaching a strange religion and strange gods and carrying the people of the community after him.

He said, "I cannot do it, for I know that what I have received is true and I cannot renounce my religion."

His two sisters, on learning what had become of him, went up and asked the general to release him, but they were thrown into prison with him. Instead of sorrowing, he took his Bible and Book of Mormon and among the other prisoners tried to teach the gospel. About eveningtime the good, old, widowed mother sent a little basket of food to the little adobe house where they were confined. And this brother, before they prepared the supper, out in that little humble place, asked the guards to give him some water. He said he wanted to wash himself, his neck was chafed where the rope had been. And he carefully washed himself and combed his hair, and then when they spread the food out, he said to those present, "If you have no objections, we would like to ask the blessings of the Lord upon this food." In a voice that all could hear, he asked the Lord to bless that food, but in a voice that only his sisters could hear, he said, "I will not eat tonight, I am fasting and praying to the Lord."

It was not ten minutes before they said they wanted these two men outside. The girls stopped eating, of course, and the two men were taken out. It was then just dusk, and they were backed up against a great ash tree—I can see it just as plainly as if it were here; for I have seen it and I have heard the mother and the daughters recite the sad experience—and six men were lined up to shoot them, and another said, “Now, as one last chance, we tell you if you will renounce your religion and confess before the Virgin Mary, we will forgive you and we will spare your lives.”

He said, “Gentlemen, I cannot, for I know that what I have taught and what I have accepted is the gospel of Jesus Christ.”

They said, “All right, then prepare yourself, but have you anything to say before you are executed?”

“Yes,” he said, “I will make one last request, that I be permitted to kneel here and pray.” And he knelt there and prayed. He prayed first that the Lord would bless his widowed mother and provide for her, and bless his wife and little child, who would be left a widow and orphan; then he prayed for the little branch, and he said: “Lord bless this little flock that they may not go astray, but that someone will be raised up to lead them.” And then he turned and said: “Lord, forgive these men, for they know not what they do,” and as he arose from the ground, he folded his arms and said: “Gentlemen, I am at your service.”

A moment or two later, the daughters in that little adobe room, and the mother a quarter of a mile further on, heard the sound of the guns that killed their brother and their son.

Brethren and sisters, what was it that took that man smiling and with faith like that to his execution? It was none other than the same testimony that Joseph Smith bore to the world to the very day that he sealed his testimony with his blood. And I would rather be in their class and give up, if the Lord required it at my hands, my life, than to be the owner of all the world and not have that testimony with it.

Brethren and sisters, we are not all privileged to die in that way for the work of the Lord, but it is required of each and every one of us to live each day in fulfilment of the principles of the gospel and to bring our lives into harmony with this great scheme of the gospel, for only as we do so, will it be unto us “the power of God unto salvation.”

The Lord bless you. Amen.

The Chorus sang, “The Palms.”

ELDER JOHN M. KNIGHT

(President of the Ensign Stake of Zion and of the Western States Mission)

There is only a few minutes remaining and I sincerely pray for the inspiration of this occasion, and desire the same good spirit that has accompanied the remarks of the former speakers, for my heart has been touched by their fervent testimonies, and the words of exhortation and counsel they have given.

It was not my good fortune to be in attendance at the morning service in the tabernacle, as I did not arrive until the noon hour. I feel that I missed something, for the opening sessions of our conferences have always been a wonderful inspiration to me. Usually the key note of the conference is sounded by the prophet of the Lord, the doctrines of the Church are expounded to the understanding of the Saints, and where reproof is needed, it is given.

I have listened with much interest to the remarks of my brethren. The conditions they find in their various fields of labor are much the same as prevail in the Western States mission. My heart is filled with joy when I meet the Saints in the various branches of the Church, and also with isolated families far removed from any Church organization, and listen to their fervent testimonies, a band of faithful, self-sacrificing Latter-day Saints into whose lives has come a knowledge that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of the living God, men and women who not only welcome the elders, but pray for their coming.

Elder Pratt's remarks with reference to Trinidad interested me. I recently visited our Church members there, for we have a few honest-hearted people there who have accepted the gospel, and who tread unswervingly the pathway of duty, undeterred by doubts, singleminded, and straight forward. There is rejoicing in their hearts and a feeling of salvation has come into their lives. They, like Job of old, testify, "I know that my Redeemer lives." Christ to them is the very Redeemer of the world, and Joseph Smith is his prophet.

The gospel taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the power of God unto salvation. Joseph Smith came not as did Luther, Calvin, Knox, Wesley and many other reformers, whose lives have influenced so many people in various parts of the world, and whose teachings have done so much to break the shackles that bound the people throughout the dark ages, but he came as a restorer of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and gave unto the world the gospel in its fulness.

The tendency in the world is to humanize religion, eliminating all Divinity out of it. One of the so called "Advanced" churches of New York City, according to Leslie's Weekly, has resolved to abolish all reference to "sect, class, nation, or race," and has a new bond of union to be signed by all its members. To do this it deems it necessary to adopt a new "statement of purpose" from which mention of Christ and Christianity is omitted. Public announcement is made that the "church has dropped Jesus."

We have people in Denver who follow the teachings of the Marlein Bible, written by Rev. Marley, the head of the church, in which men are forbidden to mention God or Jesus in their prayers, and to do so would be considered heresy and sufficient cause for excommunication from the church. Indeed, sample prayers for all occasions and the blessing for food are given without a single reference to our Father in heaven or his Son Jesus Christ. It may interest you to know that their church government is planned after our own, with a president and twelve apostles, six of whom are women. Also a high council of twelve persons, half of whom are women. The leader confesses he is acquainted with the doctrines and organization of the "Mormon" Church. Truly, they have a form of Godliness but deny the power thereof.

How different with our people, the Latter-day Saints, who have implicit faith in God and his Son Jesus Christ. They believe that he really is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him, that through the Holy Ghost they may know him. Paul the apostle writing to the Corinthian Saints, (I Cor. 12) declared, "Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led. Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." Latter-day Saints receive this witness, and many of them would sacrifice their lives, as did the Mexican brother referred to by Elder Pratt, rather than deny the truth that had become a part of their lives. The beauty of it all is, God is no respecter of persons, and all men everywhere are invited to partake freely of these wonderful gifts. In Doc. and Cov. 1:35 it is recorded:

And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respecter of persons, and will that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his Saints, and shall reign in their midst; and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world. Search these commandments for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled. What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself: and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same; for behold, and lo, the Lord is God, and the Spirit beareth record, and the record is true, and the truth abideth forever and ever.

I rejoice in the opportunity that has come into my life to bear witness of these things to the people of the earth, it brings peace and satisfaction to my soul; and I pray that so long as I have power to lift my voice, it may be in defense of this great Latter-day work, known to the world as "Mormonism." It is bound to succeed. It cannot be overcome by the powers of darkness. God has so decreed. We meet with a great deal of opposition from certain quarters, and I am rather glad of it, it not only advertises us, but it puts the missionaries on edge, makes them aggressive, and more determined to deliver their message to the people. The elders of the Western States mission are crying repentance unto the people, and inviting all to come unto Christ. I thank God for them, and for their faith and devotion to this great cause. I pray that the spirit of peace may abide in your hearts, that God will abundantly bless you, with the Holy Spirit that you may have implicit faith in this great Latter-day work, and power given you to live its principles, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

The chorus sang "Do What is right."

Benediction was offered by Elder Joseph S. Barker.

SECOND DAY

Conference continued in the Tabernacle, Monday April 5, at 10 a. m.

Congregation was called to order by President Heber J. Grant, who presided.

The choir and congregation sang, "We thank Thee, O God, for a prophet."

Elder Peter G. Johnston, member of the general auditing committee, offered prayer.

The choir and congregation sang, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord."

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation. Salvation so designated means temporal as well as eternal salvation.

THE GOSPEL COMPREHENDS OUR WHOLE COURSE OF LIVING.

I believe that within the plan of the gospel are laid down all of the laws and principles that underlie our lives, here and hereafter. It sets forth a rule of action for our conduct that leads us to happiness and joy in this life, as well as to exaltation in the life to come. An interpretation of the gospel is desirable, in order that men may know what is held out to them by it and in it. Its fundamental laws and principles comprehend completely our whole course of living.

HEALTH.

The gospel lays down the rules that will bring to us one of the first essentials, that of health. There is contained within that simple and understandable law of the Church, the Word of Wisdom, principles, commandments, exhortations which, if lived up to and obeyed, insure health. That health is desirable goes without saying. I know of no other people who take quite the same view of the human body as do we. We regard the body as something more than an organization of the materials of this earth. The body to us has a religious as well as a temporal significance. The body is the tabernacle wherein is housed our spirit, which is a child of God and which is our greatest possession. We cannot desecrate these bodies that have been given to us without offering affront to him who gave them. They are sacred to us. It is our obligation to preserve them in purity and in wholesomeness. We are taught that we cannot live proper and righteous lives without caring for our bodies in a proper and righteous way. We cannot take into our bodies those things forbidden without desecrating them, without militating against the efficiency of the body, and without bringing upon us the effects which follow the infraction of natural and just laws concerning health. So that if one would have health, he should live the laws of the gospel with reference to health.

WEALTH.

The gospel teaches the fundamental laws of wealth—its acquisition and proper use. It teaches industry, thrift and economy; honesty in business and unselfishness. It points out that all means and substances are gifts from God, committed to the care of men as stewards or trustees, to be used for the benefit and advancement of the people of the world. It tells us the real meaning of proprietorship. It attaches to wealth, as it does to every other material thing, a religious significance and makes plain its proper relation to our lives.

It bids us return a portion of our interest to the Lord for the immediate use of his Church and Kingdom, thereby ever reminding and impressing us with the true source of our riches. If the gospel conception of wealth were prevalent in the world there would be no such estrangement between rich and poor, between so-called capital and labor, as we see today. The perplexing problem of its just distribution would be solved and a large portion of the difficulties of human society would be eliminated.

SOCIAL ORDER.

The gospel of Jesus Christ lays down also the laws which provide for the proper maintenance of our social order. By adherence to its principles man learns, in the first place, his relationship to society; and, in the second place, to act in such manner as to properly discharge his obligations to his fellowman. Every problem that confronts society today has its solution in the application of the simple principles of the gospel to human life and living. The gospel points out that the foundation of society is the home, and the marital relation. We are advised in the gospel what that relationship should be, what it should produce, and how it should stand at the basis of all social order. So far as I know, there are no other people who subscribe to the same doctrines in which we believe, concerning the institution of marriage, the perpetuity of that relationship, and the relationship of children to parents. The application of the principles of the gospel to this relationship means good homes. Good homes mean good communities. Good communities cannot mean anything other than a great, good nation, a good country, a good people.

Not only are we taught that our homes are at the very foundation of our social order and relations, but we are taught in the gospel the proper relationship of man to man. Charity, kindness, benevolence, long-suffering one with another, brotherly help are all principles embraced within the gospel of Jesus Christ and all of them are necessary to build and maintain a society that shall be fit for people to live in, and to be advanced in. We are given the institutions of the Church, in part, at least, to sustain the proper social intercourse among the people. There are provided within the Church agencies and facilities, which meet every requirement of social life. Our wards, to my thinking, constitute the most advantageous social units that have ever been devised or suggested in the history of society. There are presented within the organizations of the wards opportunities for every person to receive legitimate training in society, proper social intercourse and the cultivation of all the desirable traits of character that go to make up good men and good women.

GOVERNMENT.

Not only does the gospel provide the laws, the rules and the regulations that govern health, wealth, and society, but the principles of the gospel lie at the very foundation of just government.

The teaching of reverence, of obedience, of respect for law, order and authority is indispensable to the maintenance of proper and just government. Men who have not been taught to respect authority, whether that authority be superimposed upon them, or from whatever source it comes, will not respect the authority that they themselves set up. I believe firmly that men who believe in God, men who believe in his power to rule, to lay down laws for their guidance and direction, are trained by virtue of that belief to be the proper subjects of government. I believe that such training is indispensable to good citizenship. Obedience is not only the first law of heaven, but obedience is the fundamental requirement of all good government, and until men can come to realize that they must yield obedience to the law and the authority which has been established, there can never be any proper legitimate and adequate government.

HAPPINESS.

Not only does the gospel lay down the laws and rules which provide for health and wealth for the maintenance of society, for government, but it lays down the foundation for that which is indispensable in human life, real, genuine happiness. There can be no true happiness and no true joy, in my judgment, without righteousness. When I say happiness and joy, I do not mean the superficial pleasure that comes to one in the gratification of personal appetite and desire. I refer to that inner feeling of satisfaction, contentment, love and genuine joy, that come to the man with a clear conscience, a life devoid of offense, with love for God and his fellowmen in his heart. That supreme happiness and joy, so far as our experience goes, can be obtained only in one way. That is by willingly-given service in the cause of our Father in Heaven, for the benefit of his children. The gospel provides the ways and means in which that service can be most efficiently done. The organizations of the Church are established in such manner that service may be rendered by everyone within its membership to the ultimate benefit of every other member. It is a mutual plan whereby each may help every other and the common good may be promoted.

UNDERSTANDING THE ALL-COMPREHENDING NATURE OF THE GOSPEL, WHAT IS OUR DUTY?

So that, in brief, the gosel fulfils every requirement of a human life. It satisfies every need. It is so comprehensive that it embraces all the good that we desire to be brought into our lives and it helps us to work out our salvation here and hereafter. What is our duty? Our duty, in my judgment, is to so interpret this great gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ that men and women everywhere shall know what it means, that they shall know its great significance in the development of their lives and in their salvation. It is our first duty to so interpret it for our children and for our people at home that they will see it and understand it; for I cannot but think that if they can be brought to realize what it means in their lives, the security that it gives them against the incursion of evil and danger, the happiness and joy that it insures to them by obedience to its teachings and commandments, they will not fail to lay hold of it. Our second duty is to present it to the world in like manner. I cannot bring myself to think that we discharge our full obligation when we merely issue the challenge to the world and set forth that here is the everlasting gospel, the authority of God, the power to save, without explaining, persuading and inviting the men and the women of the world to join in this great life-saving plan. I believe it to be our obligation to present these great truths in such manner, both to ourselves at home and our fellow men in the world, that their real significance shall be felt, that men shall be acquainted with their great need, and that they shall know that in no other way than by compliance with the laws, the rules and regulations of the gospel can they achieve the great purpose of life and be brought back into the presence of God from whom they came. Our Church is a great institution. Favorable attention to many of our principles has come from various parts of the world. Many there are who have come to look upon us as a great people. Let me say to you, my brethren and sisters, that we shall not discharge the full obligation that our Father has given to us unless we bear out in our lives the reputation for good that we enjoy and vitalize in our living the eternal principles of truth revealed to us through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

OUR MESSAGE TO THE WORLD.

Therefore we say to all the world, if you want health, live the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ; if you want wealth, if you want that which is necessary to sustain life and to secure the necessary comforts of life, obey the laws of the gospel, pay tithing to the Lord. If you would solve the great problems of society, apply the gospel of Jesus Christ. If you would understand government, if you would create and train citizens who will make a great government, live the gospel of Jesus Christ, for a good citizen in the Church of God is a good citizen in any good government on the face of the earth. If you want happiness, if you want that great joy that comes into the hearts of those who know the truth, if you want contentment, peace of mind, opportunity for service, live the gospel of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Master.

God help us, my brethren and sisters, to appreciate what this great gift, the gospel, means to us. God help us to be worthy of the honorable names we bear: Latter-day Saints in the Church of Christ, I humbly ask, in his name. Amen.

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

The meetings of our conference have been notable, as have been the meetings of earlier conferences. It is indeed an impressive fact that our people come up from the stakes and in from the missions at conference time in such large numbers, and assemble to receive instruction, admonition, advice, encouragement and such good gifts as the Lord holds in store for them. I have sometimes heard men try to describe great gatherings to which people have come for some definite purpose, and when all other comparisons seemed to be inadequate, they have said the movement was almost like the "Mormons" coming to conference. No matter what the weather may be, or the seasonal conditions, a very great number of the Latter-day Saints are willing to lay aside their material affairs to gather here in the appointed place, at the time selected and announced, for the conferences of the Church. In a measure this is comparable to the assembling of the tribes in ancient Israel at the time of the Passover, though we come not as distinct tribes but as members of one body, all upon one footing, everyone representing a unit in the great Church of Jesus Christ.

THE CHURCH A UNIQUE ORGANIZATION. NOT SECTARIAN.

In this respect we are unique, and in many other respects is the Church unique. How could it be otherwise when the conditions of its organization and the occurrences immediately preceding are considered? The Church of Jesus Christ stands, in a particular sense, alone. Not even a hostile commentator or an unfavorable critic has ever yet ventured to put forth the assertion that this Church has any relationship of origin and development with any other church or denomination on the face of the earth. We are not regarded as an offshoot of any mother church. * Churches generally treat us for what we are, a body of religionists standing alone in the world.

That does not mean that we shall refuse to lend our ready cooperation with other religionists or religious bodies in any movement for the general good, in any civic or patriotic duty; but it does mean that, so far as the essential characteristics of our organization are concerned, this Church has no counterpart amongst the sects and denominations of the day.

TOLERATION DOES NOT IMPLY ACCEPTANCE.

Toleration is a specified characteristic of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and we have crystallized that principle into a terse expression embodied in our Articles of Faith. We affirm that we do not merely beg and ask, but that "We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege; let them worship, how, where, or what they may." But while our toleration is thus practically boundless, for we respect as sacred the religious convictions of men, we do not carry it to the absurd extreme of saying that therefore we are under obligation to adopt what others believe. I am willing to tolerate my brother's belief, because it is his, not necessarily because I think it is true. He is welcome to it; I may have no use for it; but it is his and he may have it. I shall not ridicule it, and I shall not denounce him, provided, of course, his belief is not opposed to law and order; but I should be very glad to sit down with him and in a kind, friendly, neighborly and brotherly way, try to show him something better, if I know that my religion is true and his is not.

CENTENNIAL OF A GLORIOUS MANIFESTATION.

Practically a full century ago, in the year of which this is the glorious centennial, there occurred an epoch-making event in the history of the world. Reference was made to this yesterday. I venture to call your attention to the actual record. You know the story, I know; but it is well sometimes that we be reminded of what we know. You know the testimony of the young man Joseph Smith, to the effect that he was greatly wrought up in his mind as to which among the many contending sects of the day was in reality the Church of Christ, for he had common sense enough to know that they could not all be right, for they were opposed to one another. There was not only opposition but hatred among them, and one sect sometimes directed the batteries of its assault toward another particular sect, and in the year 1820 there was much confusion and much dissension. The young man afterward wrote:

"During this time of great excitement, my mind was called up to serious reflection and great uneasiness; but though my feelings were deep and often poignant, still I kept myself aloof from all these parties, though I attended their several meetings as often as occasion would permit." In his study and thought he turned to the Scriptures and was particularly impressed by this wonderful precept and the marvelous promise associated therewith: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." (James 1:5.) Joseph felt that he lacked wisdom. He was in search of it, and he asked of God. He went into the woods in the early spring of 1820 to pray; he knelt down and poured out the desires of his heart to God.

THE ETERNAL FATHER AND JESUS CHRIST APPEARED IN BODILY PRESENCE.

"I had scarcely done so," he afterward wrote, "when immediately

I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such an astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction." But though the powers of evil were thus trying to stop his utterance and to crush his effort, he called all the more fervently upon his God, and he avowed that there appeared a pillar of light, as he says, "Exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me. It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me I saw two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, pointing to the other—This is my beloved Son, hear Him!"

THE CHURCHES OF THE DAY HAD GONE ASTRAY.

The Celestial Personage thus indicated answered the question the youthful seer had specified in his prayer, namely, which of the sects or denominations of the day he should join, and, as he averred, "I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong; and the Personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt; that 'they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrines the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof.'"

We have been severely criticized because of the declaration that the sects and denominations of that day were wrong. Remember, please, the declaration was not of Joseph. He had not before known that to be the case. Those words were the words of One greater than he, greater than you, greater than all of us here assembled, the words of the Son of God. Wherein were those churches wrong? Had they not much within them that was good? I venture to affirm that they had. I doubt not that there were amongst them men of God, who were trying to live according to the best light they had received; but as churches they were wrong because they were making false pretensions. They claimed to possess the power of the holy Priesthood, and they essayed to administer the ordinances thereof, all in compliance with what they understood to be the rule of the form of godliness. We can create many a variation of the form of godliness. We can make it intricate and enticing; but no men or body of men can gather together or work independently and originate the holy Priesthood upon the earth. To do so would be a greater miracle than for one to originate life in dead matter. There is a chasm between inanimate and organic matter, between the living and the dead, and man cannot bridge it. He may take living things, plants and animals, and rear and nurture and tend them, and by selective breeding he may produce new varieties, but the man never lived who, with all his science, and all his facilities of laboratory and other research, brought into existence one microscopical living cell, except, indirectly, through the operation of the laws of life, which are not of man.

This Church, therefore, from its beginning, has been unique, for the organization of the Church was forecasted in this declaration that at the time of Joseph Smith's first vision there was no Church of Jesus Christ upon the earth; and I do not see why people should take issue with us for making that statement. A man of one political party professes to believe that the other political party is wrong; and he has a right to believe it, and if he can demonstrate that fact to his own satisfaction he has the right to promulgate his belief; but he should do it with regard to the rights of the other party and the members thereof. We are not assailing churches; we are not attacking sects; we have no war with any of the numerous denominations on the face of the earth. We are sending out our missionaries, we are using the columns of the press, not to attack Catholicism or Protestantism, or any form of religion, but to preach in a positive and constructive way the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ as that gospel has been restored to the earth in this dispensation, in strict accordance with the predictions of ancient prophets.

THE CURRENT MOVEMENT FOR CHURCH UNION.

We are aware that at the present time there is in progress a great world movement having for its object the federation of denominations and sects professing belief in Christianity. It is known as the Inter-Church World Movement. Already we find in the daily press many contributions explaining the purpose of the movement. Already the advertising pages of the great magazines are being used. Already plans have been made for a great assembly to take place, most probably though not certainly, in London, appointed for the coming summer; and sects and denominations are called together for the purpose of forming some kind of a merger or combination.

It is a very important question to ask: Just where does the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints stand in relation to that matter? I answer, it stands aloof and alone.

Intimations have been given out that this Church is trying to get in; that it is trying to curry favor with the sects in order that it may have a place in the great combination that has been planned. Why, to think such a thing would be sacrilege on our part. We have not derived our authority to administer in the ordinances of the gospel from any of them, nor from any common source. We are no offshoot of the Church of Rome. We are no outgrowth of any of the Protestant denominations. We constitute a Church that has been organized and named by the Lord Jesus Christ. So far as these combinations go we wish the participants well. They have been foolishly, as they profess and declare, spending vast sums of money for the erection of meetinghouses, chapels, churches that they could not use; and they say they can save money by what they are proposing to do, though they are trying to raise a great sum by a world-wide drive in order to bring about the saving.

THIS CHURCH CANNOT BE A PARTY TO IT.

If they can do anything better for the common good by joining together, let them join. Those churches were formed by men, and men have the right to do with them as they please; we shall not interfere with them. But this Church was not formed on man's initiative, it was not called into being because of some brilliant leader who stepped forward with a new plan; and therefore we cannot, we have not the power nor the authority, to make any kind of affiliation with any other church; and let me say with equal earnestness, no other denomination, no church, no sect can ever affiliate as such with this, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. There have been overtures made by some religious bodies to find out the terms under which they probably could come in with us; and the answer has been: Come in as every member of this Church has come in—through the door; and note that the door is just wide enough to admit you, one at a time, the door of baptism, that ye may receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands.

Students of human affairs, theologians and other thinking men have expressed their amazement at the vitality of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and they say we have some secret for our unprecedented development. Now let me tell you what that secret is. I take you all into confidence. But instead of saying to you, don't tell anybody else, I invite you to tell the world. This is the secret. Every member of this Church stands upon his own feet, upon his own testimony, upon his own conviction that this is the Church of Jesus Christ. He can not receive that testimony from any other man. No president, no apostle, no patriarch, no bishop, no officer in the Church has any testimonies to sell, nor any assurances of the divinity of this work to give as a personal possession to anybody else. There are some riches you cannot share. Now, in a great building such as this Tabernacle, one part depends upon the other parts. Knock out one of those columns and that part of the gallery would be endangered. Remove several of them and a section of the balcony would collapse. But suppose that every part of the building rested upon its own foundation. Then the destruction of one part would not affect the others. Now, that is the secret. Latter-day Saints are individually answerable to their God, for individually they receive that great gift of God, the testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I pray that we may be individually true to it. Oh, my brethren, my sisters, this is the day of which the prophets have spoken, this is the day of trial and of test notwithstanding the many favorable conditions in which we rejoice. Beware of those who would try to lead you away from the foundation of your own testimony. Beware of those who would set up factions for themselves, for all such will follow the course of those that have gone before and come to grief. Stand ye in holy places and be not moved. I ask it for us all, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

One theme has stood out very prominently, and properly so, in the remarks of most of the speakers who have addressed this conference. That has been the subject of the great vision given to the Prophet Joseph Smith. The previous speaker stated that this is the day of which the ancient prophets spoke. With this I fully agree.

A SCRIPTURE PASSAGE APPLIED TO JOSEPH THE PROPHET.

There is a passage of scripture recorded in the seventh chapter of St. Luke that I shall apply to my remarks this morning. The occasion referred to in this scripture was one following the manifestation of great power on the part of the Son of God when he raised the widow's son from the dead. St. Luke wrote of the event as follows:

And there came a fear on all: and they glorified God, saying, That a great prophet is risen up among us; and, That God hath visited his people.

And this rumor of him went forth through all Judea, and throughout all the region round about.

And the disciples of John shewed him of all these things.

And John calling unto him two of his disciples sent them to Jesus, saying, Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?

With all sincerity and in humility I shall apply this scripture to the Prophet of the nineteenth century and dispensation of the fulness of times. There is nothing sacrilegious or improper in this, for I fully believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and is a prophet of God, who received divine approval from the Lord Jesus Christ. And his fame has gone forth throughout all the land, and many people have said, "A prophet is risen up among us, and God hath visited his people."

JOSEPH SMITH, THE MESSENGER TO PREPARE THE WAY FOR THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

But the point I wish to make is here: We are living, as all admit, in the latter days, when many people are looking for the coming of the Savior of the world in the clouds of glory. Of necessity, before that day shall come, there must be one sent into the world clothed with authority from on high, and commissioned to establish anew in the earth the fulness of the everlasting gospel as it was in former days. For Christ cannot come to establish the reign of peace until some such messenger appear with authority to prepare the way before him. Therefore, paraphrasing the nineteenth verse, I will apply it as follows: "Art thou, Joseph Smith, he who should come? or look we for another?"

We read in the third chapter of the prophecy of Malachi, where it is written the Lord will send his messenger, and he shall prepare the way before him, "and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in." This does not refer to the former coming when the Lord was born into this world, for we read further, "But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like a fuller's soap." Every indication is that this refers to his second coming.

The Lord, in the former dispensation, sent a messenger to prepare the way before him, and in this dispensation it was just as necessary that a messenger be sent to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord and the establishment of the reign of peace. If Joseph Smith was not that man, then we must look for another. Now, I say to you, the issue is clear, the line is sharply drawn and there is no occasion for misunderstanding. Either Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and all that he claimed to be, or he was the greatest impostor this world has ever seen. There is no middle ground. You cannot say he was deceived, that he was mistaken, that he believed that he was called of God and thought that he had seen a vision of the Father and the Son but he was in error. He was all he claimed to be, or else he was a base deceiver. To be consistent, either the one view or the other must be taken, in regard to his mission. I repeat, there is no middle ground. Certain writers have attempted to explain the mission of Joseph Smith in that manner, that he was honestly deceived, but the issue is one that is sharp and clear. There is no possibility of his being deceived, and on this issue we are ready to make our stand. I maintain that Joseph Smith was all that he claimed to be. His statements are too positive and his claims too great to admit of deception on his part. No impostor could have accomplished so great and wonderful a work. Had he been such, he would have been detected and exposed and the plan would have failed and come to naught. In the plan of salvation as it was made known through Joseph Smith to the world, there are no flaws. Each part fits perfectly and makes the whole complete. Attacks have been made from the beginning to the present, and yet every one has failed. The world has been unable to place a finger upon anything that is inconsistent, or out of harmony in the revelations to Joseph Smith, with that which has been revealed before, or predicted by the prophets and the Lord himself.

Oh, it is an astonishing thing to me, a remarkable thing, that there could be a doubt in the mind of any man who has made a study of this situation. I cannot comprehend how he could fail to understand the truth, and be impressed with the fact that Joseph Smith was sent into the world to restore that which was lost, the fulness of the everlasting gospel. Now, I say again, if he is not the man who was to come, then we must look for another, for that man must come, if he has not come, to prepare the way before the Lord. The time is growing short, the signs of the times point to that, and there is much that must be done or the words of the prophets shall not be fulfilled. But he was the man, and as the Savior, on this occasion to which I have made reference, sent those messengers back to John filled with information because of the mighty works which he performed, so the message delivered by Joseph Smith and his works testify of him to all the world that he was called of God. There is no gainsaying it.

Is it not rather a remarkable thing that in every revelation given to Joseph Smith he has been found absolutely in harmony with the scriptures? The Lord, as I have stated, declared through one of his prophets that before his second coming a messenger should be sent to prepare the way and make it straight. You may apply this to John if you will, and it is true. John, the messenger who came to prepare the way before the Lord in the former dispensation, also came in this dispensation as a messenger to Joseph Smith, so it applies, if you wish to apply it so, to John who came as a messenger to prepare the way before the Lord. But I go further and maintain that Joseph Smith was the messenger whom the Lord sent to prepare the way before him. He came and under direction of holy messengers laid the foundation for the kingdom of God and of this marvelous work and a wonder that the world might be prepared for the coming of the Lord.

JOSEPH SMITH FULFILLS THE PREDICTION OF THE PROPHETS AND THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE FORERUNNER OF CHRIST.

Speaking of the marvelous work. Is it not rather remarkable also that Joseph Smith fulfils the prediction made by Isaiah, as recorded in the twenty-ninth chapter of his book, as follows:

For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered.

And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed;

And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned.

Wherefore, the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear towards me is taught by the precept of men:

These are almost the exact words spoken by the Savior to Joseph Smith:

Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.

This portrays the condition of the world just one hundred years ago when this prophecy was fulfilled. Now, to continue; if Joseph Smith did not introduce that marvelous work and wonder, some one else must come to do it before the Lord will come. He fulfilled the first part of this quotation which refers to words taken from the record of the Book of Mormon, as all who have read Church history know. If this marvelous work was not established by the Lord, through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, then some one must come to do it. This prophecy, as you discover by reading the whole chapter, was to be fulfilled in the latter times. The world is not looking for any one to come to establish that work. No one claims to have done it, other than Joseph Smith. He fills the bill.

Again, the gospel was to be restored as it was in primitive times, before the coming of the Lord. All will admit, whether they believe in the mission of Joseph Smith or not, that at least there has been a departure from the teachings and the organization which existed in the days of the Savior's ministry and the ministry of the Apostles. That must be, and is, conceded. You cannot find that organization anywhere in the world, and you cannot find those doctrines anywhere except as they have been given through the agency of Joseph Smith. This gospel was to be declared, so John the Revelator has written in the fourteenth chapter and sixth verse of Revelation, by an angel who was to fly through the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, calling on them to repent for the hour of judgment is come. Nobody else, except Joseph Smith, ever claimed that an angel did fly and did appear to him with this message, and he was commissioned to send it forth to all the world.

Joseph Smith declared that he, with Oliver Cowdery, his companion, received the keys of the gathering of Israel. No one else ever claimed to have had them revealed to him. If Joseph Smith did not receive them, then some one must be empowered with this authority before the coming of the Lord. For Israel is to be gathered, and it must be by authority given to some one. Israel is being gathered, which indicates that Joseph Smith must have held those keys. Malachi has said that the Lord would send Elijah before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. The Prophet Joseph Smith said he (Elijah) came to him and Oliver Cowdery with the keys of that power. If he did not, and they have told a falsehood, then Elijah must come before the great day of the Lord, or the earth will be smitten with a curse. No one, save Joseph Smith, has claimed that these keys have been revealed. No one else knew what was meant by this passage of scripture. The hearts of the children are turned to their fathers, as Malachi predicted would be the case, after the coming of Elijah. This indicates that Elijah has come and it must have been to Joseph Smith.

So I might go on with many other predictions in the scriptures. You may search from the beginning to the end, all the revelations given to Joseph Smith in the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price, which contain a message to the world from the Lord, and you will find that in every instance they are in harmony and agree with the revelations of other times. You will discover that in all things Joseph Smith fills the bill, he fits into the niche which was to be occupied by the messenger who was to come to prepare the way before the coming of Jesus Christ. No one else has claimed to be that man. Why, then, should we not heed his mission? I say to you, I believe with all my heart, I know it to be true. Two themes stand out uppermost always in my mind. That Jesus Christ is the Son of God, who was crucified for the sins of the world, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet called and appointed to usher in the dispensation of the fulness of times. That is my message to the world, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTHONY W. IVINS

My brethren and sisters, I earnestly desire an interest in your faith and prayers during the few moments that I stand before you this morning, for I feel that I need it.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF THE LAST GOSPEL DISPENSATION.

All during the proceedings of this conference, as I have listened to the remarks of my brethren who have preceded me, I have been thinking of the one outstanding incident of interest to the Church, which has been so often referred to: that one hundred years, approximately, have elapsed since the ushering in of this the greatest, the most important gospel dispensation that the world has ever known. Prophets of old looked forward to it, prayed that they might see it, and participate in its activities. The Apostle Paul said: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings, * * * having made known to us the mystery of his will * * * that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."

There have been other dispensations in which the gospel has been brought to earth, all of which have been of great importance to the people: that of the meridian of time, when the Redeemer ministered in person, being, without doubt, of greater fundamental worth than any which came before or will follow after, for the redemption of the human family depended upon the atonement which he made, by which we are redeemed from the fall and made heirs with him to the kingdom of his Father. But the great work which he commenced, the glorious triumph of right over wrong, of light over darkness, the fulfilment of the words of all of the ancient prophets, the consummation of the purposes of the Lord, and the redemption of his covenant people, is left for the dispensation in which we live. Proper conclusions can only be drawn by comparison. If there were no tall people, there would be none short. If there were no short people, there would be none tall. If there were no clouds, as there are today, we would not appreciate the sunshine; and if there were no sunshine we would be happy, I suppose, with the clouds.

THE DISPENSATION OF THE MERIDIAN OF TIME, AND THE FULNESS OF TIME COMPARED.

So, as we contemplate the events of the past century, we naturally compare our experiences, our accomplishments, our joys and sorrows, our successes and failures, with those that others had before us. While

Christ's ministry did not begin until a considerable time had elapsed after his birth, the ushering in of the dispensation of the meridian of time may be said to date from that eventful night when shepherds who watched their flocks upon the hills of Judea were overshadowed by the glory of the Lord, and a multitude of heavenly hosts sang, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to men," as the Christ was born into the world.

So, in the day in which we live, while the Church had not yet been organized, the ushering in of this gospel dispensation dates from the occasion to which Brother Talmage and others have made reference, when the Father and Son appeared to Joseph Smith in the early spring of 1820. While there was some development in the primitive church subsequent to the crucifixion of the Redeemer, before a century had passed, Jerusalem was besieged and taken by the Roman armies, under Vespasian and his son Titus; the great temple, in the construction of which Herod had employed eighteen thousand men, for a period of nine years, was destroyed, the Jews were made captive and scattered to the four winds of heaven. To what extent the members of the Church who were at Jerusalem at this time suffered, we do not know, but we are told that, remembering the admonition of the Redeemer, and taking advantage of the temporary withdrawal of the Roman armies, they had been led by Simeon, bishop of Jerusalem, to the little mountain town of Pella, where for a time they were safe.

In the meantime the gospel had been taken by the apostles to other nations than the Jews, and at Corinth, Ephesus, Rome, and other places, more fruitful fields were found than at Jerusalem. At Rome many converts were made to the Christian faith, and as usual, with the spread of truth, the powers of darkness arrayed their hosts against the Church, and its members suffered persecution, the like of which the present dispensation has never known.

Under Nero, who appears to have been a very fiend incarnate, who had murdered his own mother; who burned Rome that he might witness a great conflagration, and then charged the Christians with the offense, the emissaries of Lucifer, the enemy of all that is good, and particularly the enemy of the Redeemer, were given full license to wreak vengeance upon these hapless and innocent people, whose doctrines of peace, good will and righteousness, endangered the dominion of their master upon the earth. The Christians were accused of being rebellious, of holding disorderly meetings, of murdering their own children, of being cannibals. If earthquake, famine or pestilence came, the Christians were held responsible. It was popular to denounce and bear false witness against any suspected of affiliation with the Church, and when brought before tribunals for trial, if they denied that they were Christians, they were condemned because of their obstinacy. If they admitted that they were members of the Church, they were sent away for execution. Their condition, I am reminded, was not unlike that of one suspected of witchcraft among the early Puritans of New England. We are told that the suspected persons were thrown into the water. If they did not sink and drown it was evidence of guilt, and they were burned. If they did sink and were drowned, it was proof that they were guilty.

To satisfy his own morbid and savage nature, and please the rabble, Nero ordered Christians thrown into the great amphitheatre at the Coliseum of Rome to be torn by savage dogs, killed and devoured by hungry lions, or tossed upon the horns of vicious bulls. He caused Christians to be smeared with pitch and tar and burned as torches with which to illuminate the city at night. Notwithstanding these atrocities, my brethren and sisters, the truth rapidly spread. The maid whispered it to her mistress. The toiler, as he labored in the field, told the wonderful story of the Christ to his fellow workmen, and bore witness of its truth. The soldier whispered it to his companion in arms. The shepherds, as they tended their flocks, told of those other shepherds upon the hills of Judea, and thus, each convert doing the work of a missionary, very many people were added to the Church.

There was at Rome, at the time to which I refer, a great series of underground passages or chambers, abandoned quarries from which stone, for the construction of the city, had been taken. Had you been there at the time to which I refer, and desired Christian worship, you would have gone at a late hour of the night, after the city had ceased from its revelry and debauchery, possibly with some friend, more likely alone, cautiously toward these abandoned quarries. Silently you would have slipped into one of the dark passages, and felt your way forward until a glimmer of light appeared in the distance. A man would salute you as "Brother," and demand the sign of identification by which he might determine your right to be there. You would hear the sound of distant voices engaged in singing or prayer, and would soon emerge into one of those large underground chambers dimly lighted, and find yourself in the presence of a large congregation. All classes of people would be represented there. Beneath the outer garment you would recognize the uniform of an officer of the royal legions of Rome, the rich attire of the patrician, the poorly clad plebeian. Here they met as brothers and sisters, uniting their voices in hymns of praise and prayer, to God for strength to endure the persecution of their ignorant and blinded enemies.

Peter or Paul, if they had chanced to be present, would doubtless have exhorted the assembly devotedly to continue in the faith, bearing witness to them that death in the service of the Master assured more glorious entrance into his Kingdom. Bread would have been broken, blessed, and partaken of; wine blessed and drank, and then you would have stolen quietly back to your home, not knowing whether, before the setting of tomorrow's sun, you, too, would be thrown to the lions. Such was Christian worship during the latter part of the first century after Christ.

THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH AND THE CHURCH OF OUR DAY HAVE HAD ANALOGOUS EXPERIENCES.

So, by comparison, my brethren and sisters, the experiences of the primitive Church and the Church in the dispensation in which we live are analogous. Jesus was baptized by John the Baptist when thirty years of age, and was condemned and crucified three years later. Joseph Smith was baptized under direction of this same John, when twenty-four years old, and was martyred fifteen years later, in the thirty-ninth year of his age. Each lived but a short time after his ministry began. Both died for the establishment of the same truths. Each met death violently at the hands of his enemies, but under entirely different conditions. Jesus was formally arraigned, tried and condemned by a legal tribunal, although not entirely in legal form. Joseph Smith was killed by a mob, without pretense of legal formality.

Before a century had elapsed after the birth of Christ, all of the apostles whom he chose, with the single exception of John, were violently put to death by their enemies. During the century which has just passed, the Church has experienced no such conditions as these. In both dispensations the Church was unpopular, and its members bitterly persecuted; in our day, thank the Lord, not with the same wicked, relentless spirit which was manifest toward the primitive Church.

THE CONDITION OF THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH ON THIS CONTINENT.

The condition of the Church and its members during the first one hundred years after its establishment upon this continent, by the Redeemer, was in direct contrast to that of the Church in the old world.

Permit me briefly to read:

And it came to pass that the thirty and fourth year passed away, and also the thirty and fifth, and behold the disciples of Jesus had formed a church of Christ in all the lands round about. And as many as did come unto them, and did truly repent of their sins, were baptized in the name of Jesus; and they did also receive the Holy Ghost.

And it came to pass in the thirty and sixth year, the people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another;

And they had all things common among them, therefore they were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift.

And it came to pass that there was no contention among all the people, in all the land, but there were mighty miracles wrought among the disciples of Jesus.

And it came to pass that the seventy and first year passed away, and also the seventy and second year; yea, and in fine, till the seventy and ninth year had passed away; yea, even an hundred years had passed away, and the disciples of Jesus, whom he had chosen, had all gone to the paradise of God, save it were the three who should tarry; and there were other disciples ordained in their stead; and also many of that generation which had passed away.

And it came to pass that there was no contention in the land, because of the love of God which did dwell in the hearts of the people.

And there were no envyings, nor strifes, nor tumults, nor whoredoms, nor lyings, nor murders, nor any manner of lasciviousness; and surely there could not be a happier people among all the people who had been created by the hand of God.

OUR ACCOMPLISHMENTS COMPARED WITH THOSE OF THE NEPHITES.

We have not succeeded, during the past century, in accomplishing that which was accomplished by the Nephites, notwithstanding the great results which have come from our efforts. The people have not yet all been converted to the Lord. We have not reached that condition, which I sincerely believe that we must some time reach, when we are united in temporal things, as were the Nephites. We have not reached a condition where there is no envy, nor strife, nor malice, nor whoredoms, nor any manner of lasciviousness among the people. We have not reached a condition that we are in one the children of Christ, as the Lord would have us to be.

It is true, my brethren and sisters, that the conditions under which we have labored are entirely different to those which existed among the Nephites. The Church was established among them by the Redeemer in person, and the power of the Father was manifest in his life and works, as he ministered among them, as it never has been, and never will be manifested through any other person. In the dispensation in which we live the Church was established by Christ through his chosen agent, and it is true that the signs have followed the believer in a remarkable degree, but never with the overwhelming, convincing proof which characterized the ministry of the Son of God. They were a people of one race, speaking one language, with the same ideals, the same traditions, occupying a single country.

Our efforts have been among the people of many different nations and countries, people with different languages, with different traditions, with different ideals, many of whom, after their conversion, have left their native lands, all that the ordinary man holds dear, and have come to a strange country, to identify themselves with a strange people, to be surrounded by a new environment, which was entirely contrary to that which they had been accustomed to.

So I feel, my brethren and sisters, that as we review the events of the past century, we have very much to be grateful for, that we may justly take pride in what we have, with the help of the Lord, accomplished, because all that has been done has been through the Lord and by the help which he has given us.

WE MAY LOOK, WITH CONFIDENCE AND FAITH, TO THE FUTURE.

It appears to me that we may look forward with absolute confidence and faith in the future, knowing, because of the experiences of the past, that the Lord is on our side, and that with his help the development of the Church will continue; that in this dispensation in which we live he will consummate his purposes; his covenant people will be gathered; Christ will come to reign personally upon the earth; all of the purposes of the Lord will be consummated, and his kingdom be established upon the earth as it is in heaven. May the Lord give us faith and strength to continue the efforts of the past century, until these glorious purposes shall be accomplished, is my earnest prayer, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

After a number of announcements had been given out, the choir and congregation sang, "High on the mountain top."

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

Elder Soren Rasmussen, President of the Jordan Stake of Zion, pronounced the benediction.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The conference was called to order at 2 o'clock by President Heber J. Grant, who presided.

The choir and congregation sang, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah."

Prayer was offered by Elder H. H. Blood, President of the North Davis stake of Zion.

Choir and congregation sang, "Redeemer of Israel, our only delight."

ELDER DAVID O. McKAY

"Even so, I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world to be a light unto the world and to be a standard for my people, and for the Gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me."

AN ENSIGN TO THE NATIONS.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was scarcely one year old when that declaration was made through inspiration by the Prophet Joseph. He himself was but twenty-six years of age. It is a marvelous declaration, great in its pretension, comprehensive in its scope: "Mine everlasting covenant" (the gospel), is sent into the world "to be a light unto the world, to be a standard for my people and for the Gentiles to seek to it."

On Bedloe Island, at the entrance of New York harbor, there stands the Statue of Liberty, a light to the nations. What it has meant to thousands and hundreds of thousands of the down-trodden of Europe has been most graphically expressed by Israel Zangwill in that impressive production, The Melting Pot. I shall read a few words. David the emigrant, the little Russian Jew, is speaking:

All my life America was waiting, beckoning, shining, the place where God would wipe away tears from off all faces. To think that the same great torch of Liberty which threw its light across all the seas and lands into my little garret in Russia is shining also for all those other weeping millions of Europe, shining wherever men hunger and are oppressed, shining over the starving villages of Italy and Ireland, over the swarming, starving cities of Poland and Galicia, over the ruined farms of Romania, over the Shambles of Russia. When I look at our Statue of Liberty, I just seem to hear the voice of America crying: "come unto me all ye who are weary and heavy-laden, and I will give you rest, rest."

What that Statue of Liberty symbolizes to the oppressed and down-trodden of Europe, the gospel of Jesus Christ is to the world. "Mormonism," so-called, has reared an ensign to the nations and, with words as comprehensive as those I have read in the revelation, invites the world to peace, to rest, to contentment.

TO WHOM DOES THE ENSIGN NOW WAVE?

High on the mountain top
A banner is unfurled;
Ye nations, now look up;
It waves to all the world;
In Deseret's sweet, peaceful land—
On Zion's mount behold it stand!

Then hail to Deseret!
A refuge for the good,
And safety for the great,
If they but understood
That God with plagues will 'shake the world
Till all its thrones shall down be hurled.

And to whom does that Ensign now wave? To what sort of world does the beacon-light of the everlasting gospel extend its invitation? A new world, or rather a world struggling to make itself new. The terrible war that has just passed was but the birth-pangs—and now the world is ready to be reborn. "We stand at a creative moment in human history," says Sherwood Eddy. "Never before has the whole world had the chance to make all things new, old customs and contentions, old rules and ruts, old traditions and enslavements have been broken forever. We are living in the birth-pangs of a world struggling to be reborn, and the issues of our time will reach into eternity."

I believe that mankind today is earnestly seeking after the truth. I believe, notwithstanding some of the terrible conditions that prevail across the sea, and even here in our own United States, that the efforts men are putting forth are but the results of yearning souls desiring to know the truth. The truth is the child that is to be born, and I believe that most of these men are honest in their desires to claim it as their own.

MANY HONEST SEEKING FOR TRUTH BUT CANNOT FIND IT.

Leading thinkers and statesmen are calling upon mankind everywhere to get back to the religious ideals, and yet when men come back to the churches they find that when they ask for bread they are given only a stone. Doctor Joseph Post Newton makes this startling declaration, regarding the ineffectiveness of the churches to reach these struggling souls: "Twenty per cent of the pastors, who were with us before the war, have resigned to enter other occupations. Of the one hundred and ten million people in the United States, not more than forty-four million attend services in any religious denomination." And the editor of the World Outlook thinks this: "A very liberal estimate. There are today," continues Dr. Newton, "three million fewer children attending Sunday school in the United States than before the war." And then the editor of the paper quoted makes this significant remark:

If anything is evident it is that Protestantism is going to pieces faster than the tale can be told or the figures be compiled. The great majority of people, and of intelligent people, have lost all confidence in existing churches and have washed their hands of them for good. If religion is to be saved a revolution in thought and methods and organization must take place, no less complete than that of the Protestant reformation. The times are ripe for a second Martin Luther to do to Protestantism today what the first Luther did to Catholicism yesterday.

WHERE THE TRUTH MAY BE FOUND.

On the face of that condition, we have this declaration, made ninety years ago, that "the Everlasting Covenant, the gospel, is to be a light to the world and is to be a standard for my people and for the Gentiles to seek to it." If this is truly the light for which the world is seeking, it is well to realize that never before has there been such a responsibility upon you men, upon you women, who assume to declare that already in the world is the truth for which the world is struggling. What you claim must be substantiated by facts. The tree must be judged by its fruit, and mankind today are ready to test the fruit and act accordingly. The responsibility of showing to the world that the gospel of Jesus Christ will solve its problems rests upon the men who make the claim, who believe that the declaration made by the Prophet Joseph is true. We heard this morning from my brother, Stephen L. Richards, that the Church is so constituted that every human need may be supplied. I believe in his statement. I believe, too, that every world problem may be solved by obedience to the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

AN EMINENT STATESMAN'S SUGGESTION.

An eminent statesman of our own nation, one who has won national and international eminence, not only as a great leader in the political world, but as a speaker and writer on religious topics, gave to the world, in February, some of his views regarding the solution of the difficulties which the churches now meet in answering the needs of humanity. That eminent statesman is here today. I intended to quote him. I am sure that I should not hesitate now to say in his presence what I was going to say in his absence. In an excellent article entitled: "In the World, of the World, and for the World," Col. William Jennings Bryan, in the World-Outlook, of February, in giving suggestions on how the churches can make the world a better place to live in, proposes first a change of attitude toward amusements. He writes:

The tendency has been to prohibit amusements which are hurtful rather than to encourage those which are healthful and wholesome. Amusements are necessary; and if those which uplift are not introduced, harmful pastime will be resorted to. This explains why so many young people are drawn away from the Church just at the age when they ought to be drawn into it—they are influenced by the worldly minded with whom they find amusement during their leisure hours. * * * My suggestion, therefore, is that an effort should be made to set up a Christian standard for Christian communities and to create an environment that will be helpful to the Church and the spiritual things for which the Church stands.

HELPFUL ENVIRONMENT IN THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

The "Mormon" Church has always encouraged legitimate amusements; in this respect, at least, it has set a worthy example to the world. That "helpful environment" mentioned by Mr. Bryan has been in the Church of Jesus Christ ever since its organization. Away back in the days of Nauvoo we find the drama introduced by the Prophet Joseph. We find acting in that drama men who later became prominent leaders in the Church. Among them was the man who succeeded the Prophet Joseph, Brigham Young. He, imbued with the necessity of influencing the people in their amusements and of using their recreation as a means of instilling virtue, integrity, and honesty, brought to these valleys that spirit. Why, even on the plains, after a day's march, the wagons were drawn up in a circle, a man with the violin would take his place by the campfire and there on the prairie the sturdy Pioneers would join hands in a dance, opening it by prayer, and participate in amusement that fostered the spirit of the gospel. Two years had not passed after their entrance into the "Valley" before they built the "bowery," and there presented, undoubtedly, the first drama that was ever given in the West. Later they built the Social Hall. Perhaps, there are those in the audience today who, after listening to the opening prayer, joined hands in the cotillion, dancing in a spirit best understood by the remarks of President Brigham Young, who once said, in substance: "The atmosphere of the dance should be such that if any elder be called from the party to go to administer to a sick person, he could leave with the same spirit that he would go from his elders' quorum meeting." All over this land, today, in the excellent community centers established by those early pioneers, you will find the amusements characteristic of the spirit of the community, fathers, mothers, boys and girls, mingling together in the dance, in the drama, and in other social functions, the modifying and uplifting influence of the Church permeating all gatherings. And here, I add that the Latter-day Saints Church was the first Church in the world, I am informed, to give approval to the Boy Scout movement. So, the world, in order to get into their churches the spirit of proper amusements which our eminent visitor suggests, and which I accept with all my heart, need only to accept the ideals of the Latter-day Saints.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE—HELPING THE POOR.

To quote further from Mr. Bryan:

Another matter which, to my mind, needs attention is provision for the needy of the Church. Is there any reason why a member of the church should be compelled to pay cut-throat pawnshop rates, for short loans, or loans made on chattel-mortgage security? It seems to me that there is imperative need for a church corporation financed by church members which will make loans to other members at a rate sufficient only to cover actual risk, and the risk ought to be very small in such cases.

We have in the Church of Christ a condition which has been operated ever since its organization, which will supply the needs of every worthy person who happens to be financially unfortunate. It is a simple little thing, but in its power, in its comprehensive benefit it smacks of the divinity with which this Church is impregnated. I refer to the Fast offering that every Latter-day Saint is asked to contribute on the first Sunday of each month. It is suggested that all shall fast once a month. The requirement of the Church is that all members shall observe the first Sunday of every month as Fast day. Back of that, however, is this, that after abstaining from eating, from the evening meal on Saturday to the evening meal on Sunday, the value of those two meals shall be given to the bishop for the purpose of alleviating the needs of those who require substantial assistance. Now, at first thought, that does not amount to much, and yet I find that when the principle is applied to the largest stake in the Church, this is the result: That stake last year found it necessary to expend $6,256.09 for the relief of the poor. If the members of that stake had placed a value upon each meal only at 10c per capita the bishops would have had at their disposal, $21,190, sufficient to meet not only all the demands of their own stake, but the needs of the poor in other stakes in which the fast offerings might have been insufficient. It applies to the smallest stake just the same. In the smallest stake in the Church, with a population of 1,070, they expended, last year approximately, only $100 for the need of the poor. It is a rural community in which there are practically no poor. Had they placed upon each meal the value I have named, the bishops in that stake would have had at their command fifteen times more than the actual amount needed to supply their needs. Such application may be multiplied by eighty, the number of stakes in the Church. You may multiply it by eight hundred or more, the number of wards in the Church and you may extend the plan over all the world and the application of that simple principle will supply the wants of every needy person. It is God's way. You say people don't like charity? Why, it should not be administered as charity; but as a co-operative plan of mutual service adopted for the benefit of all.

So we might go on with other propositions on applied Christianity named in the article from which I have quoted, and we should find that the solution of the great world problems is here in the Church of Christ. Ample provision is made not only for the needs of individuals, but for the nation and groups of nations.

"MORMONISM"—THE APPLICATION OF GOD'S PLAN TO SOLVE WORLD PROBLEMS.

I realize that it is a great claim. I grant you that we may seem to be arrogating to ourselves superior wisdom, but we are not. It is simply the application of God's plan to the world problems. I said you who hold the Priesthood have greater responsibility today, now that you live in this creative moment in the world's history, than ever the Church has had before. I repeat it. If we make the claim to hold the truth it is obligatory upon every Latter-day Saint so to live, that when the world comes, in answer to the call, to test the fruit of the tree, it will find it wholesome and good.

O may we be able to say truthfully, to the world, in the words of Thomas Nixon Carver:

Come, our way of life is best, because it works best. Our people are efficient, prosperous and happy because they help one another in the productive life. We waste none of our substance in vice, luxury or ostentation. We do not dissipate our energy in brawling, gambling, or unwholesome habits. We conserve our resources of body and mind and devote them to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God, which is not a mystical but a real kingdom. It is a body of people dominated by ideals of productivity, which is mutual service. We do not strive for the things which satisfy but for the moment and then leave a bad taste, we strive for the things which build us up, and enable us and our children to flourish and to conquer. We strive to make ourselves worthy to receive the world by fitting ourselves to use the world more productively than others. We believe that obedience to God means obedience to the laws of nature which are but the manifestations of his will and we try by painstaking study to acquire the most complete and exact knowledge of that will in order that we may conform ourselves to it. * * * We offer you hard work, frugal fare, severe discipline, but a share in the conquest of the world for the religion of the productive life.

The Lord help us to be able to prove to the world that we possess just what these great thinkers desire, just what the world today is longing for, and when they see it, may they know, as you know, as I know, that the everlasting gospel is a light to the world. May it ever be upon the hill a light to the nations, a savior to them, and solution of all the world problems, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEY

THE TRUE AND LIVING GOD.

Joseph Smith's first great service to humanity was in bringing back the lost knowledge of the true and living God. What do we mean by that? Who and what is the true and living God? He is the God of the Bible, the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the God of Adam, of Enoch, of Noah, of the Patriarchs and Prophets and Apostles of old. He is the God described by Moses in the first chapter of Genesis, thus: "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him, male and female created he them." This is equivalent to saying that God is in the form of man, and that we have a Mother as well as a Father in heaven, in whose image or likeness we are, male and female.

ANCIENT IDOLS.

The world had need of this instruction, for they were worshipping all sorts of deities at that time. They had forgotten the God of their fathers, the God of Adam and of Abraham, and were bowing down to idols. In the days of Moses, fifteen centuries before Christ, there were three great centers of religious thought and philosophy. One was among the Phoenicians or Canaanites. They worshiped the sun and the moon, ascribing to them the powers of creation—worshiped them with licentious rites suggestive of creation. This was the worship of Baal and Ashtoreth, against which the children of Israel were especially warned. Down in Egypt they adored beasts and reptiles, such as the crocodile, the bull, the goat, and the beetle. The gods were supposed to be enshrined in such bodies, and if a goat died, it was buried with costliest ceremonies, amidst the mourning of a nation. Away off among the Hindus the seasons were deified—spring, summer, autumn, winter. These were thought to be the divine sources of life. The passions of the human heart—love, hate, fear, anger, revenge, and so forth—were also revered as deities. Then came Moses, a man who had seen the true and living God, had conversed with him face to face, and had received from him the Decalogue or Ten Commandments unto Israel. The first of those commandments reads: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Is it any wonder that this commandment was given, and given first, under such conditions?

THE FATHER'S "EXPRESS IMAGE."

The world of Joseph Smith's time did not worship the sun and moon, nor the beasts, nor the seasons, nor the passions. Nevertheless, they had turned away from the true God; they ignored or misinterpreted what Moses had taught, that man is in the image of God, and therefore, inferentially, logically, that God is in the image of man. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, whom the Scriptures declare to be "the express image" of his Father's person, came down from heaven and walked as a man upon the earth, plainly showing what kind of a being God is. Moreover, when Philip, his disciple, said to him: "Lord, show us the Father," Jesus replied: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." But this teaching was lost upon the modern Christian world.

THE CHRISTIAN DEITY.

What kind of a God was Christendom worshipping when Joseph Smith and "Mormonism" came forth? Let Christian theology tell. Therein it was written, and it stands to this day, that God is a being without body, parts, or passions. The Church of England Articles of Religion so declare. The Presbyterian Confession of Faith so affirms. And this was the popular concept of Deity throughout the Christian world at the opening of the Nineteenth Century. In line with that tenet and teaching, the English poet Pope, who figured in the Eighteenth Century, represents God as a spirit or "soul" that Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,

Glow in the stars and blossoms in the trees,
Lives through all life, extends through all extent,
Spreads undivided, operates unspent.

A very admirable description of what might be termed a spiritual emanation from God, that universally diffused essence that proceeds forth from the Divine Presence, and is the power that enlightens in greater or less degree every man that cometh into the world. It is indeed the light of the sun, moon and stars; the light also of the human understanding; in it we live, move, and have our being, for it is the principle of life throughout creation. But that is not the God who made man in his own image. That is not the Father, represented by the Son, in whom "dwelt the fulness of the Godhead bodily." It is not even the personage of the Holy Ghost.

DIVINITY AND ITS EMANATION.

There are Three that bear rule in the heavens, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, three distinct personalities, but the Father and the Son, according to Joseph Smith, are personages of tabernacle, having bodies "as tangible as man's," while the Holy Ghost "is a personage of spirit." From this Eternal Godhead proceeds a spiritual power or essence, omnipresent and immanent in all things; and this is what the poet was describing when he portrayed God as a "soul" that "warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze, glows in the stars and blossoms in the trees," etc. This is what the Christian sects were worshiping—not Divinity, but an emanation from Divinity. They had turned from the truth "unto fables," as did the ancients; and it devolved upon Joseph Smith to shatter the false doctrine of a bodiless, passionless Deity, and bring back the precious knowledge that had been lost.

JOSEPH'S VISION.

We are all familiar with the story—how a boy of fourteen years went into the forest and prayed; how he wrestled with Satan, and was delivered; how he saw a light above his head brighter than the noonday sun, and in the midst of it two glorious beings in the form of man, One of whom, pointing to the Other, said: This is my beloved Son, hear him." From that hour, there was one person, at least, upon this planet who knew what kind of a being God is. It was a virtual reassertion of the first commandment in the Decalogue, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

WHAT CONSTITUTES IDOLATRY?

To worship anything that God has made, is to practice idolatry. It matters not what it is. If we turn from the Creator to the creature; if we forget the Giver and adore the gift; if we forsake God and worship an emanation from God, we are idolaters, just as much as if we worshiped the sun and moon, or bowed down to goats and crocodiles. The man who loves money and makes it his main object—makes it an end instead of a means—is an idol-worshiper. Wealth is a blessing from God, and so is the gift to acquire it; and if men, when they become rich, use their riches in the way God designed, he approves of them and blesses them more abundantly. But the man who adores his possessions, and forgets that they were given for a good, a wise, an unselfish and an altruistic purpose, is an idolater, akin to those ancient peoples, who in their spiritual blindness worshiped things that God had made and given, instead of the Maker and Giver.

THE FINAL DISPENSATION.

Joseph Smith's next great service to the race was in opening this gospel dispensation—the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. What does that mean? To dispense is to distribute or deal out in portions, as when the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is dispensed to a religious congregation. In a larger sense, it signifies the opening of the heavens and the sending forth of the gospel and the powers of the Priesthood, as a boon and blessing to mankind. The term "dispensation" also defines the period during which these saving and exalting principles, thus sent forth, continue operative in pristine power and purity. There have been many dispensations of the gospel, though men know little concerning them. The gospel of Christ is more than "the power of God unto salvation;" it is the power of God unto exaltation, and was instituted as such before this earth rolled into existence, before Adam fell, and consequently before man had need of redemption and salvation. It is the way of eternal progress, the path to perfection, and has been upon earth in a series of dispensations reaching like a mighty chain from the days of Adam down to the present time. The great difference between this dispensation and all others is, that this is the last and the greatest, virtually all dispensations rolled into one. God has decreed to bring together all things that are Christ's, both on earth and in heaven, and the first part of the divine program is the gathering of scattered Israel and the building up of Zion, preparatory to the coming of the King of kings, the ushering in of the Millennial Reign, the sanctifying of the earth, and its eventual glorification, when it will be converted into a celestial sphere, an abode of the righteous forever.

NOT AN ACCIDENT.

It was no accident, no chance happening—Joseph Smith's going into the grove that spring morning, one hundred years ago. It was an event predestined, heaven-inspired. I once thought that any good boy who prayed in faith could see just what Joseph saw. But I have put away that childish notion. I have learned that all boys are not Joseph Smiths. God hears and answers the prayers of the humblest of his children; but he answers them as seemeth him best, and not always in the same way. He gives according to the capacity of the one who receives.

PROPHET AND SEER.

It was no ordinary man that went into the woods that morning to pray. It was a Prophet, a Seer. Joseph Smith was not made a prophet by the people who held up their hands for him on the sixth of April, 1830, when this Church was organized. He was already a prophet, chosen, as Abraham had been, before he was born; ordained, like Jeremiah, before he was formed in the flesh. The people merely "sustained" him in that position, manifesting by the uplifted hand that they were willing to follow him as their leader, and to accept of his ministrations in that capacity. He was already a prophet, already a seer; God had made him such in advance. But all men are not Joseph Smiths. He was a man like unto Moses. He was the rarest human being that has walked this earth in the past two thousand years. And why did he go into the grove that morning and pray for wisdom and light? It was because the time had come. The Hour had struck, and The Man was there—the man whom God had provided.

THE WORLD'S SATURDAY NIGHT.

We are living in the Saturday night of the world's history. Earth has labored six days, and will rest upon the seventh, her period of sanctification. This is the significance of "Mormonism," of Joseph Smith, and of the work that he inaugurated—the lifting of the Ensign for Israel's gathering upon this the land of Joseph, the land of Zion, to build the New Jerusalem, and prepare the way for the coming of the Lord in his glory. Earth has labored six days but they are not days of twenty-four hours each. Joseph taught that there is a great planet named Kolob, nearest the Celestial Throne, and that it revolves once in a thousand years. That is a day with God. It was such a day that Adam was warned of when told: "The day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die; for Adam, after eating of the forbidden fruit, lived to the age of nine hundred and thirty years. It was such a day that Peter had in mind when he wrote: "A day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." According to our Prophet's teachings, God gave to this planet, Mother Earth, seven thousand years as the period of "its temporal existence;" and four thousand years, or four of those great days, had passed before Christ was crucified, while nearly two thousand years, or two more days, have gone by since. Consequently, we stand at the present moment in the Saturday Evening of Time, near the close of the sixth day, at the week's end of human history. Morning will break upon the Millennium, the thousand years of peace, the Sabbath of the World.

HOUSE-CLEANING IN PROGRESS.

Marvel not, therefore, that all things are in commotion. War, famine, pestilence, earthquake, tempest and tidal wave—these are among the predicted signs of the Savior's second coming. Earth must be freed from oppression and cleansed from all iniquity. It is God's House, and he is coming to live in it, and to make of it a glorified mansion. House-cleaning is in progress, and Saturday's work must be done and out of the way before the Lord of the Sabbath appears.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn, "Do what is right, let the consequence follow."

ELDER CHARLES W. NIBLEY

(Presiding Bishop of the Church)

I need not tell you, my brethren and sisters, that this is something of a surprise to me to be called on this afternoon. However, I learned in the early days of my experience in this Church that obedience is the first law of the gospel and I know that we should always try to comply with the requirements of our brethren who preside over us.

A WONDERFUL ATTENDANCE OF MEN.

It has been a great pleasure to me to sit in this conference during its different sessions and listen to the remarks that have been made by the brethren, and to see this great audience day after day. Yesterday the building was even more crowded than it is today, yet so far as I can see every seat is taken. This is an inspiration of itself. I don't know where you will go anywhere in the world to find a religious congregation such as this. In most religious gatherings we find the women predominating, but here I see extending clean back two-thirds of the way a great body of men, sturdy, strong, hard-fisted, hard-working, intelligent, well clad, good men. And also a large number of the most splendid women in all the world. It is marvelous. It is an evidence that you are in earnest, that you believe what we have heard, and that which we do hear is in very deed the gospel of Jesus Christ.

THE CENTENNIAL OF A GREAT EVENT.

We have heard over and over again the story of the boy prophet, which has been the general theme of this conference, since it is the centennial of that event: that great event which occurred, as Elder Whitney has just told us, because the great clock of time had struck the hour when the gospel was to be restored. The prophet was there, the fore-ordained prophet; the place was prepared, everything was in readiness for the greatest spiritual manifestation that the world has seen; the greatest event indeed that has transpired in the world since the days of the Savior of mankind, that is, since he lived in the flesh. Of course, other manifestations followed in due time, giving instruction, line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, until there grew under the guidance of the young prophet this most wonderful organization named by the Lord, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

WHAT ARE THE FRUITS OF "MORMONISM?"

Now, one of the two things we can say must be true. That vision, that manifestation, the beginning of this great work, the very inception of it, the first word that we ever heard of it is right there. Now that word was true or it was false. It must be one or the other. We accept that fully and finally. Was it true? How shall we measure it? How shall we prove it? The Savior of the world said a tree is known by its fruit. Men do not gather grapes of thorns, nor figs of thistles. We know that doctrine to be true. Now what are the fruits that this tree called "Mormonism" has produced? In the ninety years that have passed since the Church was organized or in the one hundred years since that great spiritual manifestation, what are the fruits of this tree? Well, let me call your attention to two or three little items that are more material than spiritual. The Savior himself stated to those who could not believe his doctrine that they might at least believe the works, for they were patent, they were self-evident. Any person might believe them because there they were. So we say, if you cannot believe our doctrine you must believe the works for there they are manifest. Now was it a good work? Has it been a good work to preach the gospel to the poor of the world? For we can say with one of the apostles of old, "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called." No, they turn from it, the sacrifice is too much for them. But not so with all of the poor of the world. Some have believed. They have answered the call. The Savior's call was, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." There never was rest for the body, but rather hard work, labor, industry. Now has that been a good work to gather these people from every nation under the sun and bring them to this goodly land, to teach them industry, sobriety, honesty and to colonize them in the way that has been done? Was it a good work to teach them the cooperative spirit that has been manifested throughout the building of our colonies in every part of this intermountain country; in the fencing of fields, in the digging of irrigation ditches, in the building of canyon roads and bridges? Is all that good or bad? If it is bad, then the tree has brought forth evil fruit and we should denounce it: if it is good, then the works speak for themselves and we should accept it.

THE MISSIONARY SYSTEM OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

"Mormonism" has sent out, and continues to send out, its young men and young women by the hundreds and thousands, making the sacrifice of their time and their means, paying their own way in the world, going to preach the gospel. They believe with all their hearts that here in this Church rests divine authority which was delivered to the Prophet Joseph Smith under the administration of John the Baptist who conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the Aaronic Priesthood; and also the administration of Peter, James, and John under whose hands Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery received the authority of the holy Apostleship. Not the authority of man, but divine authority. These young men who go out as missionaries, go into the world and deliver the message in their own simple way; many of them not very well learned and many of them educated. And they gather up those who will listen and obey. They would be glad to have the great and the mighty listen to their message but as a rule they will not. The sacrifice seems to be too great. "Oh, to be called a 'Mormon,'" they say; "we could never stand to be connected with that despised people." My own mother was an outcast from her family because she joined this Church, and her people were not wealthy people, far from it, but even in their poverty those of her people who would not receive this message would have nothing whatever to do with her, because, forsooth, she had joined this discredited, unpopular religion which was denounced as a fraud, a delusion and a snare.

These elders have gone forth in that way, without purse or scrip, so to speak. It is true, they cannot become public charges on the communities and so they have taken their own means; because there are no salaries. They have not asked, "What is the salary or what are you going to pay me?" Not at all, never once. They receive that call and that authority under the hands of the priesthood, the servants of the living God who hold that Priesthood today; the same Priesthood which was committed by Peter, James and John to the Prophet Joseph Smith is held here today by President Heber J. Grant and his brethren. The same authority, divine authority, is conferred upon these missionaries and they go forth and gather up these people and they inspire in their hearts faith in God, repentance of sin, baptism for the remission of sins and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And they also teach them virtue, honesty, industry, and that they must love one another, love the Lord with all their heart and their neighbor as themselves. These people come from afar and produce what we see. Is that missionary work a bad work? If it is, then "Mormonism" is bad. But who shall say that that is not the best, the very best work that any man could possibly do, to bring the poor of the earth here and plant them in this land and make them independent? Is it desired that they shall work for and enrich the Church? No. But they shall enrich themselves so that they shall own their own homes. Is it a bad thing for people to own their own homes? You know the cry of home building that we hear now on every hand. Well, the Latter-day Saint communities own their own homes in larger number than any like number of people in all the world. Is that evil? Is that bad? If it is, then "Mormonism" is bad.

THE RESULTS OF THE "MORMON" COLONIZATION POLICY.

Wherever our Elders have gone, from Canada on the north to Mexico on the south, in their colonization schemes that has always been the result: orderly communities containing meetinghouses, schoolhouses, amusement halls. These you will see on every hand. If that one hundred years had been spent by the "Mormon" people in Mexico and the people of Mexico at the end of the one hundred years were as degraded and wretched and superstitious and in so many ways undesirable as we see them today, then you might know that "Mormonism" could not be from God. But not so, the very reverse has been true with the Latter-day Saints. Not only so, but our social life, our amusements that you have heard about this afternoon from Elder McKay, our education and our progress in every way show that the fruit has been good. President Grant read here yesterday a statement of the different expenditures that have been made from the tithings of the people during the year 1919, showing that over $2,300,000 had gone back to the Latter-day Saint communities for their numberless activities; among these expenditures was an item of $687,000 for church schools. Now remember we pay taxes for the district schools, for the high schools, for the agricultural college, for the University, taxes galore these days, no end of taxes, but in addition to that we have paid out $687,000 from the tithing of our people for the one item of education of the children of the Latter-day Saints; and, indeed, the children of others who choose to come to our schools, for we welcome them all. Is that bad? If it is, "Mormonism" is bad.

We have built meetinghouses and churches all over the land. These stand as evidences of our work. I remember when I was a boy only twenty years of age, over there in the old Social Hall, in 1869, I met with some brethren who were called by President Brigham Young to go out on missions and he said to us in these words, "I do not want you to tell the people that we have a rich country and that they can get free land, free this and free the other; do not entice them by the promise of wealth and riches. I want you to promise them hard work and persecution." That was what President Brigham Young instructed us in those early days to promise the people among whom we labored as missionaries.

A VITALITY IN "MORMONISM" NOT FOUND ELSEWHERE.

On the announcement of the Prophet Joseph Smith that he had received a vision, if, instead of reviling and denouncing and persecuting him, the people of the world had risen as with one acclaim and shouted "Hosanna," and had been thankful for that vision, I would have been, I think, in serious doubt myself as to its truth. Why? Because the people of the world never before received a message from the Lord in any such spirit. The Master himself had to say to them: "Which of the prophets have not your fathers stoned and persecuted?" That is the way the message from the Lord has been received now and always. So if the people today should rise up and say, These "Mormon" people are just what they claim to be, it would be very different indeed from what we have reason to expect from the history of the past. We do not receive that kind of plaudit. But on the contrary as a rule we are reviled and scorned. However, I will say that this truth, this gospel truth, is making its way in the world and thinking people here and there, men whose opinions are worth having, the judgment of one of whom, as Hamlet says, must in our opinion outweigh a whole theatre of others, such men begin to think and realize that there is a force, a potency, a power and a virility in "Mormonism," a life-giving spirit that we do not find anywhere else.

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS ARE MULTIPLYING AND REPLENISHING THE EARTH.

In these days when the nations of the earth, France in particular, and indeed all the nations are encouraging the rearing of large families of children—a principle which this Church has taught and preached and practiced from the beginning, and even now, when plural marriage is prohibited by law, and has been for about thirty years, yet the practice and the preaching and the doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is that we shall multiply and replenish the earth and make the desert blossom as the rose. That has been our practice and our teaching. Is that bad? Will any man rise up and say that that is bad teaching and that this tree has brought forth bad fruit? No, he will not. That is, any sensible man will not. It is good. It is what the world is going to call for.

ENTERTAINMENT AND ORGAN RECITALS FREE.

Right here on this block we see 300,000 people a year, tourists, coming and going every year. There is something a little different right here. It is only a small thing but it is worth noting. I have traveled and many of you have traveled, for you are the most traveled community, you Latter-day Saint elders and sisters, of any community in all the world, and you have learned by travel as well as by study, as this book of Doctrine and Covenants, which contains the revelation of the Lord through the Prophet Joseph Smith, tells us to seek knowledge by study and by faith and to seek learning from all good books. You have been over the world and I have, and I have never gone into any cathedral or scarcely any place of note, especially in the Old World, but what there has been somebody around to hold out his hand and ask for money, or a place would be pointed out to you, where you could go and put your money, or in some way or other your money would be extracted from you. Here on this block the 300,000 or more tourists who come and go receive our entertainment and free organ recitals and not a cent is taken from them in any shape or form. Freely we have received and freely we give. Our employees here would not dare to receive one cent in remuneration for their work from the tourists who come here. Now is that bad, think you? The tourists do not think so. They think it is pretty good.

HONESTY AND LOYALTY OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

As to loyalty to country, so far as it applies to the "Mormon" people, we challenge comparison. We have been taught from our infancy that this is a favored nation. Right here in these revelations to the Prophet Joseph Smith you can read in one of them these words, that the Lord raised up wise men for the very purpose of framing the constitution of this great country, so we have the word of the Lord which we accept implicitly that this nation was brought into existence by the Divine Power and not altogether by the power of man. It is the best government in all the world, the freest, and with all its imperfections, of which there are many, it is the very best, the best that the Lord could get the people to accept. He could not have given the people anything better because they probably would not have accepted it. St. Paul tells us that the gospel of Jesus Christ is a perfect law of liberty. And this same gospel that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints believe in is in advance of the law of the land. It is supplementing it. It does not act in contradiction to it; not at all, but is upholding it, fostering it, and going a little further in the way of perfect liberty. Let me relate one little incident. I remember being up in Bear Lake county, Idaho, a good many years ago. A brother in the Church owed a debt to a man who was not a member of the Church. The late President William Budge, whom most of you knew, was then alive and presiding there. This brother could not pay his obligation for some time after it became due and the note was outlawed according to the law of the land. It was the best law that man has been able to devise, and according to that law of the land this brother was free from that debt. No law of the land could touch him. But there was a higher law that could supplement the law of the land and reach him, and that was the Church law, which says, "Pay your honest debts; if you do not you shall not have fellowship with us." Is that bad doctrine? That is the kind of fruit that this tree is producing. You think it is bad? I think it is mighty good. So this brother was brought up by President William Budge. The debt was proved. He had to admit that he owed the obligation, but it had been outlawed and he thought nothing more of it. However, he was compelled, so far as the rule of the Church could compel him, to pay the debt. Of course, the Church could not take his property from him, but it could say and did say, "You shall have no fellowship with us unless you pay that honest debt. We do not care if it were outlawed a hundred times. It is an honest debt and you must pay it." And he did pay it. That is what I mean when I say there is a higher and better law.

Now, believing as we do, that this government is an inspiration from the Almighty, ought we not to be more loyal to it than those who do not so believe? The Church itself in this respect has done what no other Church that I know anything about has been able to do, for the Church by the vote of its general conference of all the people, authorized the purchase of one million dollars in government bonds to assist the government in its time of stress and when it needed the help. Do you think that was a bad thing for the Church to do? Could it be charged with disloyalty in doing that? Show me any other church that has done as well. The law of the Church insists that I shall love my neighbor and that I shall not hate him. But the law of the land will allow me to go on hating my neighbor with intense and bitter hatred if I choose to do so.

THE CHURCH IS THOUGHTFUL OF THE POOR.

The law of the land does not ask me to fast on the first Sunday in the month but the Church asks me to fast and to give the equivalent of the two meals to the poor. My doctor tells me that I am better if I do fast; that the food thus consumed would be wasted on my system and that I am really benefited by the fasting. So I have not lost anything; I have actually been benefited physically and I give, say only twenty cents once a month, figuring that meals would not cost over ten cents each. I give the twenty cents for the benefit of the poor. That simple law if it were practiced by the one hundred ten million people in the United States would mean twenty-two million dollars a month or two hundred sixty-four million dollars a year, which if wisely used would be more than sufficient to provide for the poor abundantly, and leave means to spare. Now I call this doctrine of fasting and giving to the poor, a mighty good, sound doctrine. Surely no man could say there is anything bad about it.

THE SPIRIT THAT IMPELS TO SACRIFICE AND WORK.

There is one other thing, greater than all; greater than all I have mentioned; greater than our industry, our colonization and all the splendid works that people can see, and it is that which they cannot see nor can they comprehend, the spirit that impels us to these works. That is a different thing. The wind bloweth where it listeth. We cannot hear the sound thereof; you do not know whence it cometh or whither it goeth. So with everyone who is born of this Spirit. You received of that Spirit when you believed what the elders said, that God had spoken, that these revelations had come to Joseph Smith and that they were true. You believed it and you obeyed it according to these commandments. Is there anything wrong about faith, about repentance, about baptism, about the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost? Who will say that that is bad? With the compliance of that law and faith has come what we call a testimony, a sure knowledge of God, or, as the Scriptures of olden times said, you shall grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, and if you abide in the truth the truth will make you free. Now, no sane man will say that that is bad doctrine. Do you think it is? That spirit is what upholds "Mormonism" and sustains it. The knowledge in the hearts and souls of its members that God has spoken; that Jesus is indeed the Christ, the son of the living God; that Joseph Smith did see the vision one hundred years ago. If he did not, if it was all a lie, would the fruits that I have mentioned be apparent? Why, the logic of the case is irrefutable. It cannot be gainsaid. It must stand. It is true. There can be no mistake. It is of God and this spirit has gripped the heart and soul of you, true believers, so that you know of the doctrines, as the Savior said, "Whether they be of God or whether I speak of myself." And in consequence of that knowledge you have been willing to make great sacrifices. That is what this spirit has brought greater than all else that I have mentioned, the spirit of sacrifice in the heart.

May we learn to keep that first and greatest commandment of God, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and might and mind and strength." The Lord says to us, "Son, give me thine heart." That rich young man mentioned in the Scriptures could not do it. He was an acceptable, good worshiper, very good. He was an acceptable man and a very good citizen. When he asked the Savior, "Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" the answer was, "Keep the commandments." Well, but which commandments? The Savior repeated a number of the Ten Commandments to him, and that young man, a good citizen, clean, virtuous, good man, could say, "All these I have kept from my youth up." Now you would say that was a first-class young man. He was truly an acceptable citizen. Nobody could ask any more. But was he willing to sacrifice and give his heart to God? No. As a matter of fact, he had not kept the first great commandment which I have repeated to you, but the Savior could look right through him, and to put him to the test told him to sell all that he had and give it to the poor and then "come follow me." The sacrifice was too great for the young man; he could not give his heart to God and could not make the sacrifice.

THE TREE OF "MORMONISM" HAS BORNE GOOD FRUIT, NOT BAD.

You have made sacrifices, our parents have made sacrifices for these truths. We have lived in poverty—I myself in the direst poverty here in the early days in northern Utah. As a young lad I lived in a dugout with a quilt for a door, not even a window, not even a board floor, just dirt for a floor; lived without sufficient nourishing food; sometimes I did not have enough to eat, but the spirit that was in my father and in my mother was to stay by this truth, to be loyal to this people and to this Church. They could say: "Whither they go I will go; where they stay I will stay, their people shall be my people and their God my God." That was the sacrifice they were willing to make, and they did make it. Shall I now, shall our people after us, now when they have made these great sacrifices, not give our hearts to God? If we are asked to go on a mission shall we not go? If it is to be a teacher on the block or to teach in the Sunday School or any work however simple, shall we not answer with our whole heart, "Tell me what you wish me to do; show me my work and I will try to do it." For the work is good, the work is true, the work has produced results that no other institution or organization in all the world can produce. This spirit has taught us honor, virtue, integrity, and loyalty to country and all that is good and that makes for righteousness. This spirit of sacrifice has been planted in our hearts by the power of the Holy Ghost. By that we live, by that we magnify this work, by that power we stand by these brethren and uphold the Priesthood of the Son of God. As to the principles of virtue and honor, no church in all the world sets such a high standard for its adherents, for there is no double standard of morality taught in the revelations of the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith. The man indeed is more the criminal than the woman. That is what is taught, that is what we try to practice. Now is that bad or is it good? If it is bad, then the Prophet Joseph Smith may have been a deceiver. If it is all good, and we know it is good, all of it good and righteous; then it must follow as the night the day that the Prophet Joseph Smith did see the visions one hundred years ago. These are the fruits of "Mormonism." The young man, Joseph Smith, was not a falsifier. This tree which was planted one hundred years ago has borne good fruit and not evil. Then there can be no mistake; his testimony must be true, it cannot be gainsaid. As I said, the logic of the case is irrefutable. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang: "Now let us rejoice," and the conference adjourned until Tuesday morning at 10 a. m.

Prayer was offered by Elder John W. Hart of the Rigby stake of Zion.

THIRD DAY

Conference continued in the tabernacle, Tuesday morning, April 6. President Heber J. Grant called the meeting to order at 10 o'clock.

The choir and congregation sang, "O ye mountains high," by President Charles W. Penrose, the hymn being read by President Grant before being sung. (See L. D. S. Hymn Book, p. 376.)

Elder Mark Austin, President of the Fremont stake of Zion, offered the opening prayer.

Choir and congregation sang, "Come, come, ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear."

ELDER GEO. F. RICHARDS

Ninety years ago today the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized in Fayette, Seneca county, New York, with six members, and today we celebrate in conference the anniversary of that glorious event.

OUR ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION IMPRESSIVE AND GLORIOUS.

One hundred years ago, possibly today, that other great event transpired when God the Eternal Father and his Son, Jesus Christ, condescended to appear unto the boy Joseph Smith, not yet fifteen years of age, whom the Lord had raised up to represent him in the ushering in of the gospel dispensation of the fulness of times. In our conference we have been celebrating also this glorious event, and taking, in connection with our conference sessions, the presentation last evening, by Brother Evan Stephens and the choir, of that beautiful cantata, "The Vision," with the words so appropriate, the story so beautifully told and set to music and sung with such inspiration, I feel that the celebration has been most fitting, impressive, and glorious.

I was pleased to hear expressions from some distinguished visitors we had with us yesterday that they were profoundly impressed by our services. I feel sure, that all those who have attended this conference, being honest in their hearts, and desiring the uplift of humanity, have been similarly impressed, and I have felt, during this conference, as no doubt you have also, that it only requires time for this, our religion, to make its way. "Mormonism" is in the ascendency. I rejoice with all my heart to be identified with this work which I know is true. I know that there is in it the power of God unto salvation in this life and in the life to come. And though we have been in a minority, and are still, so far as members are concerned, the time will come when the truths which we represent, which we are trying to live, and which we have preached to the world for nearly a hundred years, will triumph and prevail over error.

SIGNIFICANCE OF JOSEPH'S GREAT VISION.

The importance of the Great Vision referred to, justifies, I think, directing my remarks particularly thereto, notwithstanding nearly all of the speakers in the conference have spoken upon that subject. I would call attention by reading again a verse from the sayings of Joseph himself, telling his own story, so that we may be refreshed in our minds. In regard to what the Son told Joseph, he says: "I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong; and the personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt; that 'they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrines the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof.'"

I know not, my brethren and sisters, how offensive this statement is to the sectarian world, but we accept it as the words of God and not of men, and we think that they are defensible. For instance, the saying that Joseph was to join with none of them, for they were all wrong, that means to us that there had been a departure from the truth, and from the Church that was instituted in the days of the Savior. Now then, let us reason upon this for a moment. I might call your attention, in connection with this matter, to a saying of the Lord through his servant Isaiah, in regard to his knowledge of things which are to be, recorded in the 46th chapter of Isaiah: "I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times all things that are not yet done." The Prophet Amos says: "Surely the Lord God doeth nothing but he revealeth his secrets to his servants, the prophets." Whether or not we might call the apostasy a secret, it certainly was known to the Lord in advance and we might reason thus: If there was to be a universal apostasy from the Church, then the Lord would reveal that important fact to his servants, the prophets.

Joseph Smith, a boy fourteen years of age, however, had not studied this proposition out in this way, to reach the deductions that we have reached, but by a study of the scriptures, we do find that the Lord, through his prophets, did predict the apostate conditions which were to be. And reasoning a little further we conclude that if there had been a universal apostasy such a thing would be of record. So we consult the histories by men who have written upon ecclesiastical subjects, and we find the apostasy given in minute detail, step by step, until it had become universal. "The earth had become defiled under the inhabitants thereof," for they had transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, and broken the everlasting covenant. Men would wander from sea to sea, and from the north even unto the south, seeking the words of the Lord and could not find them. So far, therefore, as this declaration is concerned, there is sufficient evidence before us to prove that the statement is true that they were all wrong.

Now in regard to that other statement: All their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that seems a serious arraignment of churches, and their creeds. Let us consider that a moment. What constitutes or may constitute an abomination in the sight of God? It does seem to me that the belief in and advocacy of that which is not true and the making of it a part of religious creeds must be abominable in the sight of him who is the God of truth. If the Savior had not told Joseph this great fact, the evidence of it was before him, and he would no doubt have discovered it in later years as his judgment developed, for he knew that in the creeds everywhere it was taught that God is a personage having no body, no parts, nor passions. Joseph now saw before him the Father, not such as was represented by the creeds, but an immortal, glorified being, and with him his Son. Of this there could be no mistake, for the one, introducing the other to Joseph, said: "This is my beloved Son, hear him." There Joseph saw the Father and the Son, the Son indeed in the very likeness and image of his father.

An examination of the creeds will reveal other principles there set forth which are man-made and are in conflict with the truth of heaven as it has been revealed and is recorded in the scriptures of the Holy Bible, as well as in the other standard works of this Church. It was a necessary thing that Joseph, whom the Lord had raised up to be his mouthpiece for the ushering in of this great gospel dispensation, preparing the way for the great and glorious coming of our Lord, should have a perfect knowledge of the Father and of the Son, that he might be able to stand and to be secure in his position and to accomplish his work which the Lord had for him to do, and a wonderful work it has been.

When our first parents were shut out from the Garden of Eden, they were told to worship the Lord their God all the days of their lives, and as they prayed, we are told that the voice of the Lord came from toward the Garden of Eden, for they were shut out from his presence, and the Apostle Paul declares to the Corinthians that we are required to live by faith and not by sight, but, notwithstanding this fact, the Lord has left abundant evidences of his existence, of his power, and of his love. We have the argument of the Apostle Paul upon this point, which I consider is very forceful. He says: "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse."

THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF JOSEPH AN EVIDENCE OF THE DIVINITY OF HIS CALLING.

As the things which God has done are evidences of his existence, power, and love, so the things that were accomplished by Joseph Smith are an evidence of the divinity of his calling and that he was supported and sustained by his Father in heaven. Not only did he have a visitation from the Father and the Son, but the Father also spoke to him by the mouth of the angel Moroni, who delivered to Joseph the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, which book contains a fulness of the gospel as delivered by Christ, our Savior himself to the ancient inhabitants of this American continent, and this in fulfilment of the predictions that there should be a restoration of the gospel by an angel, which thing could not have been, had there not first been a falling away.

The organizing of the Church, ninety years ago today, was the beginning of the establishment of the Church and Kingdom of God that was to be set up, according to the predictions of the prophets, never to be thrown down nor given to another people. It is to fill the whole world. The perfection and efficiency of the Church organization prove that Joseph was divinely inspired. By the mouth of John the Baptist the keys of the Aaronic Priesthood were conferred upon Joseph and Oliver which enabled them to baptize, a power and authority that was not known and that did not exist in the sectarian churches.

The keys of the Melchizedek Priesthood also were conferred by Peter, James and John, enabling the Prophet, with those who should assist him, to accomplish all the work pertaining to this great latter-day dispensation.

Moses committed unto him the keys of the gathering of scattered Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north. Zion is being gathered in fulfilment of the predictions of the prophets under this spirit of gathering that came through Moses.

Elias conferred the keys of the Abrahamic dispensation in which he lived, and Elijah the keys of the turning of the hearts of the fathers to the children and the children to the fathers, lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse. That spirit, too, is abroad in the world. Temples are built, and the work is being accomplished for the dead as well as for the living, and all these things, with the thousands of other great accomplishments under the direction and organization of the Prophet Joseph, prove him to be a true prophet of God.

In view of the importance of this, the dispensation of the fulness of times, it is only reasonable to believe that our Father would reserve one of the greatest of those noble spirits who were faithful in their previous state of existence, to come forth and lead the people of this dispensation as his mouthpiece and prophet. This we believe was done, and that Joseph Smith was one of the greatest prophets that ever lived, and that his life's work was one of the greatest that ever a prophet accomplished.

There is another evidence which is more convincing to me, even than all these, and that is the witness of the Spirit of God that comes through the Holy Ghost, bearing testimony to my soul. I am convinced in every fiber of my being that Joseph Smith was indeed a divinely inspired prophet of God, and that his story of the vision is true, and I bear this testimony to you today in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A duet, "Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning," was sung by J. R. Boshard and Florence Meldrum.

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

The opening remarks of the President at this conference were very inspiring and gave promise of a rich outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord upon the people. It has been so—a time of peace, a time of instruction, of thanksgiving and praise and of pure joy.

ETERNAL AND TEMPORAL VALUES.

I would like to say a few words this morning, my brethren and sisters, upon the subject of investments, and I will take for my text the saying of a noted writer to this effect: "Always distinguish between what is of eternal value, and of what is a mere temporal ease." This is a significant remark. It is worthy of the profoundest consideration. There are many things with which we come in contact, many things of importance, but there are some things that are more important than others.

This is the land of Zion in which we dwell. It is a blessed land, it is a fruitful land. The soil readily responds to the industry of the farmer, and by his toil means come into his possession. The wages of the laboring man today are very good. He gets a splendid reward for his efforts and thereby means come into his hands. It is true, that we are confronted with high cost of living, but notwithstanding this, with many of our people, perhaps hundreds and hundreds of them, there is a surplus, and, I believe, as remarked by Brother Stephen L. Richards, that with this surplus there comes the responsibility of trusteeship. The means that come into our hands are a direct blessing from the Lord and he expects us to expend them wisely and well and to be very careful in our management of affairs. I think that the Lord particularly expects us as a people to avoid debt. A man who is weighed down by a burden of debt might just as well be in prison, because it is to him a constant worry and anxiety.

One of the first considerations that devolves upon us is to get out of debt. The Latter-day Saints should heed this counsel, for it is counsel that comes to us from time to time from the leaders of the Church.

The mercantile world, the oil business, the mining fields, offer opportunity for investment of our surplus; but, brethren and sisters, the very greatest wisdom and judgment should be exercised in the matter of investment. And when it comes to mining stocks it needs only to be said that this is a very risky business, and so the Latter-day Saints should be wise and prudent and not rush hastily into enterprises that spring up on every side. There is danger in it. Sometimes offerings come to us from a distance, some great undertaking that reads well on paper, the prospectus of which is very fine. It is inspiring, it is enticing. Wonderful things, it is announced, will be accomplished if we will only put our money into it, and yet possibly we do not know a mortal thing about the people who are connected with the enterprise. Who is the president? Oh, well, we don't know. We have never seen him. Who are the directors in the company? Oh, well, we don't know, but just look at the prospectus, see what it says. Isn't that sufficient? No, I say it is not. It is not sufficient at all. People ought not to go into those things without knowing something of the character of the people who are behind them. Now this is true also of enterprises abroad in the world that come to us. It is true, likewise, of enterprises at home, even right here in Zion. When investments are offered they should be subjected to the greatest scrutiny and careful investigation. We want to know, should know who is behind them. What is the character of the man who stands at the head? What is the character of the men who make up the board of directors, and who administer the affairs of the company? Are they safe men, are they strong men, reliable people of the community? Well, if they are, then the risk is not so great, of course, and so, I think that it would be much safer for the Latter-day Saints generally to invest their means at home in enterprises that have originated among us, in enterprises that have been and are successful in which the stock is paying good returns. It is the results that we want. And that reminds me of a story.

One man said to another: "What is Professor Jones doing now?"

"Oh, well, he is trying to decipher a Babylonian tablet."

"Are there any results?"

"Yes, his wife is down with nervous prostration, and he has sent his children to relatives."

Very definite results. And so, when we come to invest our means, we want results, we want good results. A successful man from a worldly standpoint is a man who makes good investments. An unsuccessful man is a man who makes unsuccessful investments and the results are poor and bring trouble and anxiety to him. Now, these things are very important. We have to deal with them. We must accumulate means for we have certain obligations that rest upon us, the support of our families, the education of our children, the maintenance of our homes. The man who will not provide for his family, the Apostle said, is worse than an infidel, and so these obligations devolve upon us.

AN INVESTMENT OF ETERNAL VALUE.

But the thing that I have been emphasizing might be regarded as something pertaining to a mere temporal ease. Let us pause for a moment, let us reflect upon some investments that have an eternal value. What think you of tithing as an investment? "Why, Brother Clawson," says someone in surprise, "you don't pretend to say that the paying of tithing into the Church is an investment. When a man puts his money into the hands of the Lord's bishop, or into the bishop's storehouse, and he doesn't get any apparent dividend from it, why, you don't call that an investment?"

Yes, that is an investment of an eternal nature.

"Oh, I think you are mistaken, Brother Clawson, about that. You know tithing pertains to temporal things and is a temporal law and there is nothing eternal connected with it."

Oh, yes, I think there is a spiritual value connected with tithing and it is made very apparent, in the revelation upon that subject. The question arises, what is tithing for? We speak of it, we emphasize it in our conferences, we urge the people to remember the law and to honor it. Now what is it for? We are not left in the dark regarding this matter. The Lord has made it clear. He gave the law. No man is responsible for it. The prophet of the Church, the president, is not responsible for this word from the Lord. "Tithing is for the building of mine house," says the Lord, "and for the laying of the foundation of Zion and for the priesthood and for the debts of the presidency of my Church." That is what it is for, and that has an eternal significance and fixed value, and I look upon it as a splendid investment. Is it not a privilege, is it not an opportunity to assist in the laying of the foundation of Zion? That is what we have been doing for ninety years. Nearly a hundred years we have been laying the foundation of Zion. Is it laid yet, is it fully laid, thoroughly laid? I would not say it. I do not know, I think it will require all of a hundred years and more to lay the foundation, because upon it we are building the Church and Kingdom of God, which is never to be thrown down, and the work will never be given to other people. That is the kind of a foundation we must lay. You have had a hand in it, I have had part in it; that is, if we have observed this law and other duties and obligations. Oh, it is a blessed thing. I think it will pay a good dividend.

"And for the building of mine house"—here on this block is one house of the Lord and other temples are being erected in which great spiritual blessings will come to the Latter-day Saints, largely through the paying of their tithing and obligations.

Now, I will tell you, we could not build a house of God without means and yet, when it is accomplished, the building itself is of least importance, all the means that went into it is of the least importance. It is the ordinances of the house that are of eternal value. And then again the law of tithing speaks of the Priesthood: There is an investment for you of real worth, of most vital significance, the authority and power of the Priesthood. Could any man make a better investment than to secure the Priesthood? "Yes, but Brother Clawson, can he buy this blessing?" No, no, he can not. "Well, how can he invest if he has no money to put into it?" You can't get in that way. It is an investment that comes in a different form entirely. Well, what is required? Only faithfulness, a faithful life, devotion to the cause of God, obedience to his word, honoring his servants, and doing your duty, and that will entitle you to have a share in this great investment that is open to all the men of the Church from the least to the greatest.

"And the debts of the Presidency of my Church." I do not take that to mean that the tithing is to be used for the personal obligations and debts of the leading men of the Church or the Presidency. You notice how this reads: "Of the debts of the Presidency of my Church." It means the obligations entered into for the Church by the Presidency.

THE WORD OF WISDOM AS AN ETERNAL INVESTMENT.

What think you, brethren and sisters, of the Word of Wisdom as an investment? "Surely it is not an investment, is it?" Oh, yes; one of the brethren at this conference has emphasized the Word of Wisdom by saying that it might be regarded as the law of health, the great law of health. Well, is not that an investment worthy of our consideration? If we can go into anything, brethren and sisters, that will bring good health, that is the very best kind of a dividend there is. And what could we do? I submit to you, what could this people do, how much could they accomplish of this mighty work without good health? Well, now, as a people we are healthy. There may be exceptions to the rule, but we are entitled to the special blessings of the Lord in this respect if we observe his great law. "Yes," but someone says, "you are emphasizing, my brother, investments of an eternal character. The Word of Wisdom, remember, is a temporal law and does not have anything particularly to do with eternal things." Well, I think, my brother, that you are slightly mistaken in that view. I grant you that the Word of Wisdom has a temporal side to it. It pertains largely to temporal things, to our physical health, the condition of our bodies and so on. But there is also a spiritual side to the Word of Wisdom which possibly is more important than the temporal, for the Lord said that all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings of the Word of Wisdom, walking in obedience to the commandments, "shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones." There is the temporal blessing and it is important and vital.

"And shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures." And there is the spiritual side to the Word of Wisdom. And these great treasures of knowledge will help us in this world and will follow us into the world to come and are of an eternal nature. We also have the promise that the destroying angel shall pass us by and not slay us. That does not mean, that no one among the Saints shall die and pass away. We are under the great edict of life, that is, sooner or later, we must lay down our bodies and pass into the spirit world, and the change will come to all of us; but the promise is made, nevertheless, and the Lord will have respect for his people. He will bless them and he will preserve them and carry them along until they shall have fulfilled the measure of their creation and accomplished their work, if they will observe to keep and do these sayings and render obedience to his law.

MARRIAGE AN ETERNAL INVESTMENT.

What think you, brethren and sisters, of marriage as an investment? One of the most important steps that a man or woman can take in the world. There are two kinds of marriage. One is rather a poor investment, that is, it is not as good as the other. There is marriage for time; there is marriage for time and all eternity. Here is the choice of two investments to every young man and to every young woman in the Church. Which will you have? That which is of eternal value or the thing that is of mere temporal ease? So I repeat, always distinguish between what is of eternal value and what is of a mere temporal ease."

The Lord bless us and help us to make the proper choice and to do the right thing; always to give ear to the voice of counsel, and walk in the way of life, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES H. HART

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

The strong testimonies given by the brethren during this conference, of the great vision, and developments connected therewith, and the unexpressed testimonies represented by those in attendance here,—are partly due to the gracious wisdom and foresight of our heavenly Father in carefully providing direct evidences sufficient to satisfy reasonable minds of the truths of these important events. There is no exact standard of the amount of evidence which should be sufficient to convince each reasonable mind.

HOW EVIDENCE IS MEASURED.

You cannot measure evidence or testimony by the ounce or by the pound, nor even by the number of witnesses, although the number may be of importance. I am persuaded that the Lord does not place a premium upon undue credulity. While he leaves a wise margin for faith, hope and confiding belief, he also provides proper evidence. We are told in the scriptures that, "The simple believeth every word, but the prudent man looketh well to his going." This is a good proverb for the brethren to bear in mind when some oily-tongued agent comes to them with a beautifully lithographed certificate of stock in some "wild-cat" corporation, concerning which Brother Clawson has just told us. If they are in the frame of mind to believe every word and are not like the prudent man who "looketh well to his going," they will have time afterwards to repent of their over-confidence.

In the coming forth of "Mormonism," the Lord provided ample testimony,—a goodly number of witnesses. As I said before, the number does not count for everything, because there is a more delicate test for reaching the truth than in the mere weight of numbers, although some importance is properly placed upon the number of witnesses. It was foreordained that there should be three special witnesses, besides Joseph, to the coming of the Book of Mormon. In the Constitution of the United States, two witnesses are necessary to convict for treason, and there must be two witnesses to the same overt act. Under the law of Moses, two or three witnesses were required to establish guilt punishable by death. (17 Deut. 6.) This rule was later perverted by the Jews, as the Talmud informs us that a witness though truthful might be punished if he were unfortunate enough not to have another witness to corroborate his story.

I think the American frame of mind is somewhat illustrated in an event which occurred some years ago, wherein one of the large dailies of New York represented that it had performed a certain experiment in order to prove the incompetency of the editors of the magazines of the day, and asserted that the paper had sent out copies of good stories from Kipling, without disclosing the authorship, and that those stories had been rejected by magazines of supposed good judgment and literary skill. The statement went unchallenged for some time, until Mr. Edward Bok, editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, came forward and said: "We would like proof of that; we would like to be shown."

In connection with the coming forth of "Mormonism," for a long while the burden rested upon the testimony of Joseph alone, and it was a tremendous weight that he carried, and how relieved he felt when there were others who were to share the responsibility with him! Yet I take it that his uncorroborated statements, so far as having other witnesses to support him, would carry conviction to the earnest seeker of truth. What are jurors instructed to do when they are considering the weight to be attached to testimony which will result, perhaps, in the conviction for a high crime or misdemeanor? They are charged that they may consider the demeanor of the witness, his means of information, the opportunities which he has had for knowing the truth of which he testifies; the interest, if any, which he has in the case, his intelligence, or lack of intelligence; and from all the circumstances appearing upon the trial, determine what credence should be given to his testimony, and to give weight accordingly; that in case of a conflict in evidence they may believe one witness as against many, and that they are to search for the truth, believing that which carries conviction to them.

THE TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET.

We have before us the printed record. We do not have the advantage of hearing the oral word. Perhaps only a few present ever heard the oral testimony of those concerned. But we can read the printed word; and that is the means which the great courts of our land have, because our supreme courts are courts of appellate jurisdiction, and most of the cases considered by them come to them by appeal, and they do not see nor hear the witnesses but they read the printed record, and determine from that, the weight that should be attached to the testimony. You may read the testimony of Joseph, and the testimony of Oliver, and with no other testimony supporting it, it will carry conviction to your soul.

To illustrate what I mean, my brethren and sisters, may I read a few words from the testimony of Joseph. He is comparing his responsibility and knowledge with that of Paul of old, and he goes on to say:

So it was with me, I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two personages, and they did in reality speak to me, and though I was hated and persecuted for saying I had seen a vision, yet it was true; and while they were persecuting me, reviling me, and speaking all manner of evil against me falsely for so saying, I was led to say in think to make me deny what I have actually seen? For I had seen a vision, and who am I that I can withstand God, or why does the world think to make me deny what I have actually seen? For I had seen a vision; I knew it, and I knew that God knew it, and I could not deny it; neither dared I do it, at least, I knew that by so doing I would offend God, and come under condemnation. (Pearl of Great Price.)

There is printed here as a note to the Pearl of Great Price, a letter from Oliver Cowdery, that rings with that same spirit of sincerity. It should carry conviction to the heart, it seems to me, of all who read it in sincerity, and with a desire to know the truth.

IMPROBABILITY OF SUPERNATURAL EVENTS.

Some will say: "What of the improbability of these supernatural events which were testified to by Joseph, and particularly by the three witnesses?" Well, the fact that an occurrence is improbable does not interfere with its being established. In fact, it is proverbial that "the unexpected happens." It is one of the established rules of evidence that the improbable may be established where the testimony is sufficient. The term improbable simply means what appears unreasonable to the individual to whom the testimony is given, in the light of his knowledge and experience. As an illustration, a scriptural illustration of what I mean by establishing the improbable,—when Jacob was informed that Joseph was alive and was a ruler in Egypt, we are told in the scriptures that "Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not;" but, of course, sufficient testimony was brought to prove what seemed to Jacob at first to be an improbability. So, if some of these matters seem to be improbable, it does not, under the rules of evidence, prevent the establishment of them. Besides, the improbable is based on man's experience, but the things which are impossible with man are possible with God.

I think Brother Joseph Fielding Smith reached the correct conclusion that there is no middle ground between accepting Joseph as a sincere prophet of the Lord, or a conscious deceiver: for you cannot conceive of Joseph being deceived in the experiences of which he testifies; that he could be baptized under the direction of a heavenly being, have other heavenly personages appear to him, laying their hands upon his head and conferring the holy Priesthood upon him, and he be deceived in all that,—deceived in a messenger appearing and showing the records and the precious relics contained in the stone box to which he was directed. It is out of the question to believe that he could be deceived, or that the three witnesses or the eight witnesses could be, in what they testify to. I grant that one man, or perhaps several, may sometimes be deceived in the sense of sight. You brethren and sisters perhaps have seen the phenomenon of the mirage of the desert. You have looked across a body of water and seen horses and cows that looked like poplar trees, or a train coming at a distance, which in the particular refraction of the light appeared many times as tall as it really was. But to suppose that these men could be deceived in what they said would be to assume the improbable, I was going to say the impossible, that a large group of men would be deceived, not only in the sense of sight, but in the sense of hearing, and in the physical sense of touch as well; because all these senses were appealed to.

FUTILITY OF ACCOUNTING FOR "MORMONISM" ON THE GROUND OF WILFUL IMPOSTURE.

Then if you take the other alternative and try to account for "Mormonism" on the ground of wilful imposture, there are many difficulties that you encounter. Did you ever consider just what would be involved in looking at the case from that viewpoint? A great jurist, says:

Where several persons conspire to commit perjury, there must be concert, they must first be persons so depraved that they are willing to join in the commission of high crime and so lost to all sense of shame as to be willing to confess their infamy one to another; they must likewise agree not only upon the main body of their story, but upon its details and upon the order in which they occurred, and if, while they are undergoing the ordeal of cross-examination, defects in their story are exposed, they will not dare to change it, for if they do, they will run the risk of being contradicted by their associates, and if they adhere to it, they know they will incur the hazard of detection together with all of its dangerous consequences.

And in connection with the number of witnesses testifying, if the Prophet Joseph had been an impostor, he would have appreciated the danger of having more people in league with him. Increasing the number of witnesses would tend to increase the probability of his being exposed.

Another authority on evidence, the author of a great text book, reminds us of this:

Increasing the number of false witnesses increases the probability of detection in a very high proportion: for it multiplies the number of points upon which their statements may be compared with each other and also the number of points where their testimony comes in contact with the truth, and therefore multiplies the danger of inconsistency and variance in the same proportion.

Again, the burden of proof is on the party who alleges fraud. It is never presumed, because fraud is a crime. Men are presumed to do right. One of the strongest and most far reaching presumptions of evidence is the presumption of innocence,—the presumption of right acting. It is easier for a person to tell the truth than to tell a falsehood, because in telling the truth it is an act of memory, simply recalling the actual experience; while falsehood involves invention, skill in invention, to make the story appear plausible.

Who could read Joseph's utterances throughout his life, who could read, for instance, that little diary, yet unprinted so far as I know, written in his own handwriting, at the time he took his mission to Canada, disclosing the prayerful nature of his heart day by day, and say that such a person could possibly be a deceiver? Or who could imagine one offering the highest test of fidelity that mortal man can give, going cheerfully and knowingly to his death, as a Socrates or as a Christ, and so offering his life for his testimony, sealing his testimony with his life's precious blood, and not be sincere? Every act, every utterance of the Prophet, is in accordance with this rightful position as the great prophet of latter days, and every word of it is directly inconsistent with any assumption that he was not sincere, that he was not what he professed to be.

For some years it was a matter of regret, serious regret upon my part as a boy, to think that some of the witnesses were weak enough to side-step from the straight and narrow path. But I think that even in that, there was a providence of the Lord in strengthening this case, because it is out of all question, in considering the attitude of Joseph toward those witnesses, both the three and the eight, and in considering their attitude, to suppose that any such a thing as a conspiracy was involved. The case in support of the restoration of the gospel is very greatly strengthened by the witnesses, being disciplined and yet remaining true to their testimonies.

May the Lord bless us and help us to realize in every deed, day by day, not only while we are in this presence or in the congregations of the Saints, but every day, and all the time, that these great facts are indeed truths, and that a great responsibility rests upon each one of us to act in accordance with these convictions, and in accordance with the responsibility placed upon us to bear this testimony to the world. May the Lord bless us, and help us to perform that high mission to the world, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

We have with us this morning Patriarch Harrison Sperry, who came here in 1847, in my father's company, and we will be very pleased indeed to hear from him. He has more hair on his head, and less gray hair, than I have, although I think he is about eighty-nine years of age. He will tell us when he gets up here.

PATRIARCH HARRISON SPERRY

(Of the Granite Stake of Zion)

Brother Heber tells me that there are ten or twelve minutes for me to speak. Yes, I came here in the company of Brother Heber's father, in 1847; and I think that I could almost preach a sermon that I heard him preach over seventy-two years ago. I have been in the Church a long time. I was baptized about seventy-nine years ago. I have seen the Prophet Joseph Smith. I heard him talk. He was one of the most noble men that ever lived upon the face of this earth. I think he brought more knowledge to the human family than any prophet who ever lived upon the face of the earth. He brought more knowledge in regard to the living and the dead than all of the prophets that ever lived, even Moses himself, who talked with God, and so did that Prophet Joseph. He talked with the angel Moroni nine or ten times. Moroni told him some of the most wonderful truths that were ever told upon the face of the earth. When Joseph received the principles in regard to baptism for the dead, he entered the Mississippi river and commenced to baptize all that had come to him. The Lord cautioned him, and said: "Joseph, this must be done in the temple of the Lord, and a record must be kept." Then Joseph went to work and rushed the temple in Nauvoo with all of his might. I have been around that temple many a time, and what a noble edifice it was that was built there in Nauvoo. There is a long story that I could tell, but there isn't time. I have been here in these valleys now for almost seventy-three years. Brigham Young—I have been acquainted with him; President John Taylor,—I was well acquainted with him; Brother Woodruff,—I was well acquainted with him; our farms joined together; and Brother Snow, that noble man of God, well acquainted with him; Joseph F. Smith—well acquainted with him. When his mother had a little farm down here upon the country road. I went there and helped them to harvest their little grain. Joseph F. was a little boy then, about nine or ten years old. I ate dinner with him and his noble mother, and Joseph told me:

"Brother Sperry, I was born away up there in Missouri during that great trouble, and my mother laid me down upon a bed and spread some quilts over me, and when they came to me, Brother Sperry, my face was almost as black as your coat; I was almost dead."

Oh, Joseph, the Lord works in mysterious ways, doesn't he? Oh, surely, surely.

There was poor Mary with that little child when twelve thousand people were driven out of Missouri. Oh, that noble woman! I ate dinner with her away down here, a noble woman; and when Joseph was called to go to the Islands, just a boy, just a little boy, only fifteen years old, I said:

"Oh, Joseph, you are going away over there across that mighty ocean, to a people that you don't know anything about."

"Yes," said he, "and President Young gave me $10 in all."

When he returned he said: "I went over there and I paid my own way; came back again, and then they sent me to England."

"Why, Joseph, I can't keep track of you. You are here, and there and everywhere."

God bless you, my people. God bless you noble ones, you brethren and sisters, and those who preside over the various quorums, and over the various missions of our land. May the peace of heaven rest upon you. I have been here in Utah a long time. I have been in the bishopric here for forty-six years, labored and toiled with all of my might, and yet I feel sometimes I am just about forty years old; but only eighty-eight years. I have had a wonderful experience in the earth. I am giving patriarchal blessings almost all the time. I don't know, I can't remember how many, but over a thousand, probably twelve hundred that I have given; and yet giving blessings all the time; but I want to do all that I possibly can. I wish I had the voice of the trumpet of the Almighty. I want to sound it to the nations of the earth: This is God's work! This is God's work! The great work of our Lord is going forth amongst the nations of the earth. It is wonderful, it is wonderful to me. When we look abroad and see what the Father has done for his Saints who came to this land, and when we look abroad and see where the gospel has gone all over the land everywhere, and see the blessings of our Father upon us—the beautiful homes, our children far and near by the thousands, oh, God's work is with us. Brethren and sisters, be faithful and true. Work, work on, for this is God's work; and may the peace of heaven rest upon you, Heber. I think that is all. God bless you. Amen.

Choir and congregation sang "Praise God from Whom all blessings flow."

The conference was adjourned until 2 o'clock.

Prayer by Elder Alma Merrill.

CLOSING SESSION

The conference was called to order at 2 o'clock by President Heber J. Grant, who presided.

The choir and congregation sang "Come, let us anew our journey pursue."

Prayer was offered by Elder Lars Oveson, President of the Emery stake of Zion.

Hester Davis Stevens sang a sacred solo, "One Hundred Years."

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

I have been impressed, my brethren and sisters, during this conference, in the same manner that a good brother was impressed that I heard make a report in one of the stakes of Zion a few years ago. He had just returned from Salt Lake City, where he had been in attendance at the general conference. He was one of the presidency of the stake where he resided, and while talking in one of the meetings of the stake conference he made a statement to this effect: his family had inquired of him on his return from Salt Lake City how he had enjoyed the general conference, and his answer was: "It was the best conference I ever attended in my life." And then he said: "The family smiled, and the children said: 'Why, father, we have heard you make that statement after every conference as long as we can remember.'" He informed the congregation that he had been attending general conference regularly for fifty-two years. I was very greatly impressed with his statement that after being in attendance at the general conferences of the Church on more than one hundred occasions he could return home and in truth say the last one attended "was the best conference I ever attended." A similar feeling of satisfaction has been in my soul during this conference. From the opening remarks that were made by President Heber J. Grant, when he presented in so strong and inspired a manner the feelings of his soul in regard to the great work that God has established, I felt the Spirit of the Lord was present directing him and that an enjoyable time would be had in the conference meetings. As I have listened to the brethren who have occupied this position and who have borne testimony concerning the truth of the gospel, that feeling has increased in my soul.

I praise God today, with my brethren, for the wonderful work that has been revealed by the Lord our God. I feel in my whole being that it has been established among men for the salvation of the human family. It seems marvelous to me, my brethren and sisters, that I should enjoy the privilege that I enjoy here today of speaking in this great conference which is commemorative of the prophet's first vision one hundred years ago. I praise the Lord for the privilege of bearing testimony concerning the work of God this day.

I have been thinking, while sitting on the stand looking at this great congregation, of the coming of my parents from abroad, about sixty-three years ago. The message of the gospel was sounded in the ears of my parents in a far-off land, and they yielded obedience to the teachings of the servants of God a little more than sixty-five years ago. About sixty-three years ago they entered this valley in the same distressed condition that a great many other people entered the valley after they had passed through a very trying experience in crossing the plains. They landed here worn out by the long journey and in comparative poverty, and afterwards passed through the experiences common to those early pioneers who came into this inter-mountain region a long time ago, when there was little of an inviting appearance to be seen in this great desert valley. I thank God today that the principles of "Mormonism" had taken a firm hold of the affections of my father and mother, and that to those principles they remained true through their lives, and that to their family they faithfully taught the truth of the everlasting gospel, and bore unswerving record by word of mouth, and by example, that the work of God had indeed been restored to the inhabitants of the earth. To them I am indebted for the great privilege I this day enjoy. I believe in this restoration and in the necessity for the opening of the heavens, that the promises of holy prophets of old might be fulfilled, as has been declared by practically all of the speakers who have given instructions during this conference.

I have here a little item that I will read that has impressed me upon various occasions. It was not written by one of our people; it was written by a convert, in fact, a priest of the Catholic Church. I feel sure it will be quite appropriate to read these words in this congregation. While visiting a great cathedral in Europe, I picked up a pamphlet many years ago at the time I was doing missionary service in the European mission. The booklet was entitled: "Why I am a Roman Catholic." The title impressed me. I thought I would like to know from a Roman Catholic point of view why an individual should be connected with the Roman Catholic Church. I had discovered from my own experiences, as no doubt many of you have, that when men who were out of the "Mormon" faith attempted to expound "Mormonism" they oftentimes presented malicious, and also grotesque ideas in regard to the "Mormon" faith. I have never in my life, so far as I remember, read from the pen of any non-"Mormon" writer a correct representation of the faith and doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. As I read the views of this priest in relation to his reasons for being a Roman Catholic, I was very greatly impressed with the following words:

And again when Luther, Calvin, Henry the Eighth, and their followers, were starting in their mad career, either the true religion was then in the world or it was not. If it was, they committed grievous crimes in making new religions to oppose it. If it was not, they were powerless to create it. It takes a Christ, not a Luther, to create a Christianity. On either supposition, therefore, Protestantism is not the true religion of Jesus Christ.

I think that is a true representation. If the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ was had among men in the period spoken of as the Reformation, then the men that were referred to as reformers were guilty of grievous sin in attempting to establish new religions. This statement is in harmony with the word of God. It is the teaching of the holy Scriptures, as we can read in the epistle of the Apostle Paul when he wrote to the Galatians, I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: "which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ." The apostle then bore record in the most positive and solemn manner that if they received any other religion, or if either men or angels taught any other religion or doctrine than the religion that had been expounded to the people by the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, then they were to be accursed. So that whenever men, in any dispensation, attempt to introduce new religions, that differ from the gospel of the Redeemer, they are not doing the things that God, our Father in heaven, would have them do. I think we can all accept the teachings of the priest as presented in the words that I have read in your hearing. If the true gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ did not exist among men in the sixteenth century, it is a solemn truth that Martin Luther had no power to bring back the lost gospel and his fellow reformers were just as powerless. We have great respect for Martin Luther, and other good men among the reformers. I would not leave any wrong impression upon any mind. We believe that those reformers accomplished a splendid work in paving the way for that religious liberty that has come to so many of the children of men. But if the divine authority, the power to administer in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ had been lost from among men, it is a truth that Martin Luther, no matter how good his motives might have been, or how good the desires of his associates, they were powerless to restore the authority and the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Savior being the author of true religion was the only source of authority. If the plan of salvation was taken away from the earth, there was only one way by which it could be given to men again; and that is clearly set forth in the words I have read to you. The Redeemer holding all power was the only being who could bring back to earth the lost gospel, which ever has been the power of God unto salvation.

I rejoice with all my soul that at the opening of this dispensation the story of "Mormonism" is just as it is. Joseph Smith in the strong desire that was upon him to know the right path sought the Lord our God in humble prayer, that he might be directed aright; and inasmuch as there was no man upon the earth exercising the authority of our Father in heaven, the story of the boy is in every way logical, when he declares that God himself made his appearance, with our Redeemer, the Lord Jesus Christ, and gave him the instructions that have been referred to in the discourses that have been delivered during this conference. There is no other way by which the authority that had indeed been lost from among the children of men could be restored. Holy beings, who held this divine authority, and who had been ordained to the Priesthood as mortal men, had been given the power to speak and act and minister in the name of the Redeemer of the world. These very men were sent again to earth and gave to Joseph Smith every key of authority they possessed. Let the world think what it may, and say what it will, that authority, in the manner portrayed in the words of Joseph Smith, was restored by the Lord our God, and in the restoration of authority the promises of the holy prophets have been fulfilled; and the great work of the living God that was not only spoken of by our Father in heaven in the revelations given to the Prophet Joseph Smith, but that was spoken of by the ancient prophets as "a marvelous work and a wonder" has indeed been established in this dispensation, and is the dispensation of the fulness of times. This work has been understood and comprehended more or less, by the prophets in all dispensations. It has now been revealed according to the promise of the Lord God of heaven for the last time. It has been established by his wisdom and by his will, with the promise that it shall endure forever and forever, and so it shall be, as the Lord God Almighty lives.

May our Father in heaven help us who are privileged today to assist in the establishment of that marvelous work, to be faithful, and steadfast, and determined, that we may bring to pass the purpose of God, and work out our own salvation, I humbly pray, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

ELDER HYRUM G. SMITH

My brethren and sisters, in one respect I have not enjoyed this conference very much, because I have sat here with fear and trembling throughout every session of the conference. In other respects, I praise the Lord for his Spirit that has been with my brethren who have addressed this conference, for I testify that their words have been directed by the Spirit of God for the strengthening of the faith of the Latter-day Saints and for the advancement of God's work upon the earth.

I have in my heart a desire that all the faithful in Israel today shall be blessed of the Lord. I have in my heart a blessing for the Saints of God who have come to this conference and have so faithfully remained in such goodly number, even to this last session, and I pray God to bless you, sustain you, strengthen your faith, provide for your necessities and help you, as my brethren and sisters in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, to carry out his purposes in the earth, to fulfil the wonderful work and mission which have been themes of this conference.

I also desire to remind my brethren and sisters that the eyes of the world are upon us, upon you and upon this work, that we have been called upon to perform. Therefore, we should be as near to what we profess to be as it is possible for us to be. And although the adversary made an attempt to thwart the purposes of the Lord when Joseph Smith went into the woods to pray, he was overcome and his plan was set aside by the powers of the Father and of the Son, who came in glory and dispelled the agents of darkness and the very evil one himself. That evil influence still exists in the world, that battle between light and darkness is still going on. The adversary has not given up the fight. He is still sniping here and there and carrying on other plans to thwart the purposes of the Lord. In a revelation to the prophet, we are given counsel, advice and instruction which, if we obey, will help us to triumph in this battle for the truth and for the right.

I read from section fifty-nine: "And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors; and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High. Nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days and at all times."

Also, in section sixty-eight, further counsel and advice are given upon this same subject. The Lord has given a word to the parents who have children, directing how to care for them and to teach them: "For this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands, and they shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord * * * And a commandment I give unto them, that he that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people."

So, let me admonish you, my brethren and sisters, to observe the counsels given in these revelations, for they are the words of the Lord unto us today regarding this principle which will give us power and favor with our heavenly Father, in battling with the powers of darkness, that we may triumph and secure the blessings prepared for the sons and daughters of God.

Now, you may say, we do pray, we are a praying people, and that is true. The Latter-day Saints are a prayerful people, but we are admonished to pray not only for ourselves, but to pray always—and to pray for our enemies, also to teach our children to pray and to pray in season thereof,—pray night and morning, every day, in public and in secret. I am grateful that we have men and women who have been blessed with the spirit of prayer, whose hearts are filled with the desire to keep the counsels of the Lord. They are the leaders in Israel, and I admonish you, my brethren and sisters, to follow their counsels, because the Lord has always had leaders in Israel and he always will have as long as this work shall remain in the earth.

I am grateful for the testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ that I have been blessed with, for I feel in every fiber of my being that the testimony of Joseph Smith is true. I have never doubted from my earliest boyhood days that the story told by the Prophet Joseph is the absolute truth. I have always honored my birthright as far as I have been able to and think myself very fortunate indeed to be numbered among those whom the Lord has honored with responsibility in his work, and for the testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ that has come to me, not alone through teachings but through diligent study and humble prayer. And never have I doubted the teachings of the leaders in Israel, nor my parents, concerning the life and mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. I pray God to bless his memory and the work of the Lord which he has been the instrument in accomplishing and establishing upon the earth.

I admonish my brethren and sisters to be more prayerful in the future than they have been in the past, and to be more diligent in teaching their children to pray, that we may triumph in the end over the powers of darkness, and be permitted to join in this glorious work with our Prophet on the other side and with all other prophets of God. I acknowledge the hand of the Lord in his blessings unto me, and although a weak and humble instrument in his hands, I have observed many sacred testimonies which have come to the Latter-day Saints through the words that have come to me as a servant officiating by virtue of the Holy Priesthood and by that authority, I bless the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and all the faithful members thereof, especially you, brethren and sisters, who have been given responsibility and leadership. My heart goes out to you in blessings from the Lord, because I say to you in his name that he is pleased with those who are true and faithful, with those who can stand up, as the brethren have in this conference, in the different sessions thereof, and testify in boldness and in wisdom pertaining to the growth and truth of this work. God is at the helm. This is his work and not ours, although we are his agents, authorized with power and with authority to carry it on. These are instruments for our guidance, and a principle of power with us and our children, my brethren and sisters, is prayer. May you take it home and cultivate it and practice it to the glory and honor of God and his work in the earth, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The work of God is in very deed a marvelous work and a wonder. It began before the foundations of this earth were laid and that great and marvelous work is still in progress. It has to do with the salvation of our Father's children—all that ever have lived, in all the ages that are past and gone, and it has to do with all that now live and all of those yet unborn who shall yet come forth and have an existence upon this earth, or upon any other earth or planet; all of which have been made or created by the Almighty for the express purpose of providing habitations for his children. "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform." We live in the midst of those marvelous things and every student of history cannot review that which has transpired in connection with this world, without feeling in his whole being that God is moving in his majesty in bringing about his glorious purposes. He who created the heavens and the earth in the beginning, as we read in Holy Writ, did not regard that work as the goal of his labors. That was merely a preliminary toward the accomplishment of his great and glorious work, that marvelous work and a wonder. We read in The Pearl of Great Price what his great and glorious work is: "This is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." We heard from President Penrose that we were all the begotten children of God before we tabernacled in these bodies of flesh and bone, and ever since the coming of our first parents, Adam and Eve, in the Garden of Eden, this work of the Lord has been developing here upon the earth. Let no one think that the teeming millions that now inhabit the earth, even the wicked and ungodly, those who, through their sins, are bringing down upon themselves such terrible woe and suffering; let no one think that their lives are all in vain, or that they have no part in the work of the Almighty, for they shall all be saved eventually in the consummation of God's great work. Only those who are the sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father has revealed him, who sin against light and knowledge, shall be deprived of every degree of glory and salvation, but all the rest, even those that do wickedly,—and the world is full of them—now living upon this earth, after they have paid the penalty, even to the utmost farthing, for all the evil they have done, shall eventually be saved in the telestial, or the lesser, degree of glory, concerning which we read that it is so great that it surpasseth all understanding. And, therefore I say, their lives are not in vain, notwithstanding their wickedness. They have received their bodies of flesh and bone they have been schooled in this world of sorrow and sin; they shall be cast down and pay the penalty; but when that is done they shall be redeemed and receive a glory prepared for them, which, notwithstanding they may never come where God and his Christ dwell, yet nevertheless is so great that it surpasseth all understanding. The opportunities for an exaltation in the presence of God, have been given by our Father in his mercy and goodness and offered to all those that would yield obedience to his gospel, and how grateful we ought to be for that. If the wicked are to receive such glory what then will be the glory of the faithful?

We have been listening to the narration of a most wonderful event—the appearance of the Father and the Son to the boy prophet, Joseph Smith. Indeed, it is wonderful, and so have the events that have transpired in other dispensations of God's providence been wonderful. Think of the wonderful ministry of our Redeemer. One great American statesman when asked: "How can you believe in the divinity of Christ and in the miracles he wrought?" answered, "I find it much more difficult not to believe in them."

I believe in the vision that was given to the prophet, Joseph Smith. I have always believed it all my life. I find it more difficult not to believe it. The evidences are so complete that not one shadow of a doubt remains with me as to the truth of that great and glorious event. Let no one confuse in their minds the two words "credulity" and "faith." They do not resemble each other. Credulity is a weakness; faith is strength. Credulity is founded frequently upon false testimony, but faith is unfailing. Faith is listening to the whisperings of God unto our souls, and he that resists faith is fighting against God, and without faith it is impossible to please him, but with faith we can accept the truth, for the Lord manifests it by his unfailling and unerring Spirit that bears witness of the truth.

"There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding." The Lord did not leave us alone or in darkness when he placed us here on earth. He opened a channel of communication that we might receive the truth direct from him. Faith then is the gift of God—the assurance which we receive from him of all that is true; it is listening to the still small voice of God. Then through our faith, which is the natural impulse, he has placed in every human heart, God is striving to bring us back into his presence, and will continue so to strive until we shut him out by refusing to hearken to his voice, and, giving a more willing ear to the voice of the adversary of our souls, we fall into the ways of wickedness and sin. Both God and his arch enemy are striving with each and everyone of us. Let us have faith in God and hearken unto him and reject the counsel of the adversary. What will faith avail us? Absolutely nothing unless it is united with the works of obedience to his divine will.

Before me is a vast congregation of men and women, who believe in the divinity of the call that came to the prophet, Joseph Smith;—the inspiration of the Almighty has given to their souls an understanding of the truth of this marvelous work in which we are now engaged. Their very presence here is a manifestation of that faith. I find still further evidences of that faith in the sacrifices that our people have made and are making, in carrying the gospel message to the world in the free giving of their time and means; in their devoted and unselfish labors both at home and abroad; in the payment of their tithes and offerings; in the building of temples and the performance of holy ordinances therein for the living and the dead, and in the erection of houses of worship and school buildings for the education and development and enlightenment of the people both young and old.

Here then is a manifestation of a living faith in God; in the glorious vision which he gave to Joseph and in the marvelous work which he has inaugurated through the instrumentality of this Latter-day Prophet, whom he raised up to usher in this great and glorious dispensation of his providence—the dispensation of the fulness of times. The way to exaltation in the presence of God, then, is through faith, combined with the works of obedience to his divine will. He desires that we shall live by faith. The time will come when all shall know him, even from the greatest to the least—when every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ. Some will be converted by outward evidences. The Savior said to Thomas, who would not believe without seeing the print of the nails and the wound in his side,—“Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed.” Some are blinded by their prejudices and by the sophistries and false philosophies of men; and men and women who have been thus deceived, not through any fault of the Lord, but because they failed to hearken to the voice of the ever-striving Spirit of God, or, in other words because they had not faith, which means simply they were not living in communication with the Lord, which is the privilege of every child of God, and not to thus live and hearken to the whisperings of his voice is resisting his efforts to bring us back to him. Then let us live by faith and couple that faith with the works of obedience; have faith in God and put your trust in him. Have faith in his servants and hearken to their counsel.

With all my soul I believe in the restoration of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ through the instrumentality of the prophet, Joseph Smith. I know that it is the power of God unto salvation and if we live in accordance with its teachings we shall receive God's greatest gift unto his children—Eternal Life in his presence, which is the greatest glory and promise, and is made only to those who are valiant for the truth, who live by faith and reject not the counsels of God; a glory which the wicked and ungodly shall not attain; a glory far superior to the terrestrial glory, which shall come to the many honorable men and women of the earth, who have been blinded by their prejudices and sophistries and vain philosophies of men; a glory that is to be enjoyed exclusively by those who live by faith, who hearken to the voice of God and render obedience to his divine will, even the celestial glory, the highest of all. All the Father hath he giveth unto such.

May we all attain unto this glory, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SEYMOUR B. YOUNG

(Senior President of the Council of Seventy)

My brethren and sisters, I have been impressed during this conference with the weight of testimony that has been given by those who have addressed us in regard to the divine mission of the Savior of the World and also of the mission, the sacred mission, of the prophet Joseph Smith.

In his autobiography we read: "As we were translating from the plates, we came across the sentence in relation to baptism for the remission of sins, and so impressed were we with this sacred principle we immediately repaired to a secret place and prayed unto the Lord concerning the administration of baptism for the remission of sins."

And when searching the record of the Book of Mormon I felt impressed to seek for the evidence that is there produced, in regard to the ordinance of baptism. In the eleventh chapter of 3rd Nephi I found the full direction and explanation of this beautiful subject. The few Nephites who were gathered around the temple were conversing together in regard to the changes of nature that had been produced by the upheavals of the earth during the crucifixion of our Savior. And then, as they were conversing and comparing the events that had recently transpired, impressed as they were that the time of his crucifixion had passed, that the time of his rest in the tomb had passed, and that he had been resurrected, they all at once heard a voice, and at first they did not understand what was said. And a second time they heard the voice, and then the third time they looked up into heaven from whence the voice proceeded and they saw a man descending from on high, clothed in a pure white robe. And the Savior came and stood in their midst, and he called upon Nephi, so the record says, and Nephi stood before him and the Savior gave him the commission to baptize in his name, to immerse in the waters of baptism and so impressed was Nephi with this great power and with the condescension of the Savior to him that he fell down before the Lord and kissed his feet. Others were also appointed to minister in this scared ordinance, so the record proclaims. You are well aware, my brethren and sisters, of the history.

In answer to the prayer made by the Prophet Joseph, at this time, came John the Baptist, the forerunner of the Christ, the great prophet that had the privilege of ministering baptism to our Lord; and he conferred upon Joseph and Oliver, the Aaronic Priesthood, which gave them the power to teach and minister in the principles of the gospel, and to baptize for the remission of sins.

In the first chapter of 3rd Nephi we have a very direct account of the evidence of the birth of the Savior. The Lamanite prophet, Samuel, predicted that the time would come when there would be a witness of the birth of the Savior manifested upon this land, manifested to the Nephites and to the Lamanites; and it is recorded that those who were members of the Church were in the minority to that degree that their enemies proclaimed to them that if the sign that was predicted by Samuel, the Lamanite prophet, was not immediately fulfilled that all those who believed in this prediction should be put to death. Nephi went out into a secret place and pleaded with the Lord to know if this sign would be given of the coming of the Savior, that at his birth there should be a day and a night and another day without any darkness between the two days. As Nephi was praying to the Lord with all his heart, bowed in sorrow because of the distress and the destruction that was threatened to come upon his people, the Lord whispered to him: "Lift up your head and rejoice; be of good cheer, for this very night shall the sign be given, and tomorrow come I into the world." So the history continues, that very night the sun went down as usual, but no darkness followed, and when the sun arose again in the morning there had been no darkness upon the face of the land. Then the believers and the faithful Church members knew that Christ was born. Then the enemies that had threatened their destruction knew that they were thwarted in their designs and they became frightened and were inspired with the feeling of fear and the desire to make peace with those who had been faithful. Many of them repented of their sins and were added to the Church, so says the record.

In the Mutual Improvement Association of the Church they have adopted a slogan for this year. That slogan is: "We stand for spiritual growth through attendance at sacrament meetings," and the members endeavor to induce others to do so with all the ability that they possess. In the eighteenth chapter of 3rd Nephi, this same glorious record that I have alluded to before, we find that the Savior visited the Church and instructed the people how to officiate in the sacred ordinances of ministering the Lord's Supper. It is recorded that he said to his disciples: "Bring bread and wine." And while they were gone for the bread and the wine he called to the people and bade them to sit down in groups upon the earth, and when the bread and the wine came he took the bread, blessed and brake, and gave to his disciples and said to them: Eat of this in memory of me, and inasmuch as ye shall do this and remember me and the offering that I have made, you shall have my spirit always to be with you. And when they had partaken he commanded them to give to the multitude. And then he took the wine and blessed it and when the disciples had partaken he commanded them to give to the multitude, and he said: "As often as ye shall do this in memory of my blood which was shed for you, you shall have my spirit to be with you."

My brethren and sisters, I am glad that I am present at this splendid conference. I have listened to some of the greatest testimonies during the sessions that have been held. I have listened to inspired men who have spoken as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost, in testimony of the divinity of this great work, in testimony of that great man who, as a little boy, went before the Lord in humble prayer and asked that he might know which was the true Church, for he was impressed with the desire to be a member of that Church, and you know the answer that came to him. It has been rehearsed here during this conference, and you know the condescension of our Father and of his Son Jesus Christ, when they appeared to the boy and gave him the necessary information, and answer to his question. The same spirit inspired the Prophet Joseph when he wanted to know of his standing before the Lord, three years after his first vision, and again he prayed to the Father that he might know and the Lord sent his messenger again. The Nephite prophet this time came and visited and gave him a high commission. Then, at the time that he wanted to know in regard to the principle of baptism for the remission of sins for the third time he went before the Lord. He went to that unfailing source of intelligence and inspiration, and he did not appeal in vain, and the Lord, according to the record, sent his messenger to give him the desired answer and information.

And when he was in prison in Liberty jail, Clay county, Missouri, he again sought the Lord in fervent prayer, beseeching him with all the anguish and sorrow of his soul:

"Oh God! where art thou? And where is the pavilion that covereth thy hiding place?"

"Oh Lord God Almighty, Maker of the heaven and earth, * * * stretch forth thy hand; * * * let thy hiding place no longer be covered; let thine ear be inclined; let thine heart be softened * * * toward us."

"Remember thy suffering Saints, O our God! and thy servants will rejoice in thy name forever."

"My son, peace be unto thy soul; thine adversity and thine afflictions shall be but a small moment."

"And then, if thou endure it well, God shall exalt thee on high. * * *

"Cursed are all those that shall lift up the heel against mine anointed, saith the Lord, * * * they are the servants of sin, and are the children of disobedience themselves." * * *

"Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly, then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God, and the doctrine of the Priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dew from heaven."

"The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy sceptre an unchanging sceptre of righteousness and truth, and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means, it shall flow unto thee forever and ever."

I testify to you that Joseph Smith was and is a Prophet of God, that Jesus Christ is the Savior of the World, that his Church is on the earth today and that this people are led by a prophet of God, I give you this testimony with all my heart and soul, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRIGHAM H. ROBERTS

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

(Owing to the unavoidable absence of Elder Roberts from the Conference on Monday and Tuesday, he was not given an opportunity to speak; hence, on request of President Heber J. Grant, this address, given at another meeting, during the Conference, is here presented):

I wish to say, my brethren, that I appreciate, beyond any power of mine to express it, the opportunity afforded me to say just a word to you at the invitation of President Grant. You may be assured that my absence through two days from the General Conference was unavoidable.

THE MORMON BATTALION MONUMENT.

There is one matter that I think I ought to mention here—and I do so with very great pleasure—and that is, you will remember that at a similar meeting to this, six months ago, I was granted the privilege of presenting the matter of making a drive to raise the funds for the Mormon Battalion Monument. The State had appropriated $100,000 provided the commission raise $100,000 from other sources. With the consent of President Grant, I presented the matter six months ago. You doubtless remember the very fine spirit in which that subject was received by you, and what a very hearty response it met with. Well, I now have to say to you that in December the State Commission made the necessary organization throughout the counties of Utah, and throughout the stakes of Zion, outside of the counties of Utah, but we have been conducting this campaign for funds under very discouraging circumstances. We began right in the midst of the holiday season, and shortly after in very many of the communities the "flu" broke out and hindered our work. In addition to that, it seemed to me that never before were the people called upon to meet so many demands made upon their generosity, as at that time. "Drives," four and five deep, followed upon ours but notwithstanding all these disadvantages, through the very excellent response from the stakes of Zion, I can say to you that the amount that is now in the banks, and that which has been reported to us, as being in hand, but not yet sent up to our treasurer,—the account being kept open in the hope that further additions will be made,—satisfied us that we now have contributed, of this $100,000, from seventy to seventy-five thousand dollars; and I have not a doubt but that we shall be able to make such appeal to those who have not yet responded—as we think, to the fulness of their generosity—that will easily make up the remainder of that sum, and that it will be deposited with the State treasurer in time to make available the State's appropriation for the monument.

I thought it was only fitting to make this report to you since you took so splendid a part, and responded to the appeal with such spontaneity, that you ought to know the progress we have made. We are now so near to the top of the hill, that I am very sure we shall reach the summit of it splendidly, and, in due time, we shall be able to commemorate one of the greatest historical events connected with our pioneer history, and establish a monument of it for all future generations.

TESTIMONY.

Now, in relation to my joining the rest of the brethren in testimony concerning God's great latter-day work, mentioned by President Grant. Here, if anywhere, I feel entirely at home; and I experience the thrill that comes from a consciousness of being, with you, one of the sons of God. With all my heart and soul I thank God, the eternal Father, that he has given to me a sure testimony of his existence, his being, and the kind of being he is. For to me he stands revealed through Jesus Christ, our Lord; the Christ, resurrected and immortal, is the exact image and likeness of the Father's person; that as the Son is, so also is the Father; and that united with them and bearing witness to the children of men of their existence, is that personage of the Holy Ghost, a personage of spirit, with whom we may have fellowship, into whose fellowship we have been inducted by the holy ordinance of confirmation, the laying on of hands, by which we have access unto him and the light and intelligence and power and glory that emanate from him; and from the Father, and from the Son, and from the Holy Ghost. Thereby proceeds forth from these, to fill the immensity of space, the Spirit of the living God, in whom we may live and move and have our being. As we live and move and have our being on a summer day in the glorious sunshine, so in the everywhere presence of God about us, our souls may be in touch and in harmony, in union and fellowship with the Holy Trinity, through fellowship with the Holy Ghost.

I rejoice in those great and fundamental truths, and I thank God that he has given me a knowledge of these great doctrines, and the truth of the whole gospel of Jesus Christ, including a knowledge of the truth of the blessed atonement, by which the mercy of God is introduced into the economy of God with reference to the human race, making forgiveness of sin possible, and man's fellowship with God a reality through the ordinances of the gospel. I know that these things are true, for God has given me the witness of them. Looking back over my life, I may say to you, though I may at times and in part have wandered from God, that is, I may have displeased him by the manifestation of my human weakness and imperfections, yet God in his mercy has never left me; and I can speak of and rejoice in the fellowship of God today, and in the clearness of the knowledge of God and of these great doctrines of the gospel, I have referred to, with all my soul. I know that God lives; that Jesus is the Christ; that the gospel is true; that his Church is established, no more to be destroyed; that the elements of preservation and continuity are in it, and will continue, and it will enlarge; it will grow stronger; its foundations are laid broad and deep, and it will remain in the earth to function for God in the work of salvation for the children of men, its glory increasing, its power enlarging, until it shall deliver such a message to this world for God, that it will lead to the redemption of the human race. In these things, my brethren, I rejoice with you, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

University of Utah, April 6, 1920

President Heber J. Grant, Salt Lake City.

My dear President Grant:—I have been called this morning to attend an important meeting of the Board of the State Industrial School at Ogden. I am compelled, therefore, to ask to be excused from the sessions of the conference today. I regret this very much, for I was anxious to attend the meetings, particularly on this sixth day of April.

The general theme of this conference has been a spiritual uplift to me. As the days and years add to my little knowledge of life, the beauty of the gospel of Jesus Christ grows. The vision of God the Father and the Son Jesus Christ to the boy Joseph Smith in the spring of 1820 is the one event that has ushered in a new period of the world's history. Ancient days were then left behind, and modern days began. It was the most natural thing in the world for God to reveal himself to a child whose mind was pure and who had not learned the theories of philosophy of that day. I look upon Joseph Smith as the greatest prophet of all history, for his was the work of the greatest age of man's development since the fall of Adam.

May we all go forward with the testimony ringing in our hearts that Jesus Christ is the Redeemer of the world; that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God; that the Priesthood of God has been restored; that the Book of Mormon is a record of the fathers of the American Indian preserved to us for this age by the power of God; and that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has been established by the divine power of the Lord.

May we turn to the glorious doctrines of the resurrection, and give our hearts to God, that he may give us life everlasting. May we each day have God's holy blessing, to perform the duties of the hour. As we stand before the ever-increasing responsibilities of life, may God make us humble before them. May we all seek in our hearts and minds the Divine Guidance, that we may learn the path of larger service and wider usefulness. May we serve the Master by serving his children.

I trust, President Grant, that the day may be happy for you and for all assembled in divine worship. My heart is ever with you in the work of the Lord.

Sincerely your brother,

LEVI EDGAR YOUNG.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

Announced that there were 20 minutes of time left and that he desired to hear from four brethren of the authorities who had not yet spoken at the conference:

ELDER DAVID A. SMITH

(Of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church)

I thought while our Patriarch was talking that he had one advantage over me, in that this was not the first time he has been called upon to face such a congregation. Sunday, President Penrose stated that he approached the task of speaking with grave concern. I tried to imagine what my feelings would be if I should be called upon to occupy this position. I can now assure you that my imagination paints a very poor picture.

I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, in the opportunity I have had of attending this conference and of hearing the testimonies that have been borne to us, and I bear witness to you, this day, that I approve of all that has been said, that in my heart it finds a lodging place. It is not difficult for me to know in my soul that Joseph Smith did, in very deed, see the Father and the Son. It is not difficult for me to understand that he did, under the hands of Peter, James and John, receive the holy Priesthood. You might say, How do you know? I find an answer to that when I am called upon to act under the authority of the Priesthood which has been conferred upon me, and I lay my hands upon the heads of the sick and bless them by that authority, commanding disease to depart and health to be restored, and I see the blessing almost instantly fulfilled. I then know whence that power comes, for I have no right in and of myself to cast out disease. When I exercise the right which has come to me through the Priesthood to act for God, who acknowledges that right, it is not difficult for me to understand these things.

Some time ago we had a brother come from the islands, away down in the South Sea. I had the pleasure of taking him through the hospital. I started at the boiler room. He was very much interested in the mechanical workings of the institution. I showed him the placing of coal in the fire box, the turning of the water into the boiler, the creating of steam through contact with the heat and water. I explained to him how the steam, going through a dynamo, produced electricity, which was carried into the building on wires. He could not understand how that could be, so I tried to explain further. I showed him as we approached the operating room the cotter iron, how it became red hot when the electricity was turned on. I showed him the electric light; the operation of the elevator, and many other things for which electricity is being used. We finally ended with the ice machine. I drew my hand along one of the pipes and scraped off some snow. As I put it into his hand, he looked at me and said, "Take me away quick, you are driving me crazy." He quit; he was unwilling to investigate further. Had he studied diligently and faithfully he could have known for himself how these things were done.

I know, my brethren and sisters, that this is the work of the Lord. I know that the men who have been chosen as leaders in Israel are men of God, that they have authority to act for him, here on earth, and that they do so act under his guidance and his direction. I bear testimony to you that I have faith in this work. I have faith in the gospel, and I know that just so far as I am faithful and diligent, exerting myself to keep him commandments, I will be given strength and ability to overcome evil.

May God bless us, my brethren and sisters. May we be faithful in this work, is my prayer and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN WELLS

(Of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church)

My brethren and sisters, I thank the Lord that he has given me a testimony and a knowledge of the truth of the gospel. During this conference my heart has been thrilled with the testimonies that have been borne by my brethren. The story of the first vision of the Prophet, of the visit of the Father and the Son to him, never tires me. I love to hear it, I love to muse about it. To me it is as sweet as the story of the birth of Jesus Christ. When my brethren testify to these great truths, my soul is filled with gladness because the Lord has given me a testimony like unto those that I have listened to. When we listen to those who testify to the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith and the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ, no matter how humble their walks of life may be, if we are attuned to the same spirit, our souls are full of gladness because of their testimonies. This is the reason that when we leave conference we always say that this has been the best conference we have ever had.

I thank my heavenly Father that I belong to a Church that has placed upon me the duty of working out my own salvation; where I can labor in the cause of the Master; where I can be one of the ministry, serving him and assisting to bring about his purposes on the earth.

I am glad to say to you that the Lord has given me an assurance beyond doubt that this great latter day work is his work. He gave me a testimony of the divinity of the Book of Mormon before I became a member of the Church. I remember in my younger days, reading that passage on the last page but one, of that wonderful record which the Lord has given to us, known as the Book of Mormon. In this passage he told his servant that those who would read it in faith with prayerful hearts if they would ask the Lord if it was true, it should be manifested unto them. I need no arguments, nor philosophy, nor opinions to convince me of the truth of the Book of Mormon. The bringing forth of this book was one of the great works of the boy prophet, Joseph Smith, which was brought forth to the world before he was twenty-four years of age. It has stood the test of critics, historians, and our opponents for all these years. It was translated not by any power of Joseph Smith; he didn't claim that, but rather through the power and inspiration of the Lord, and I hope my brethren and sisters will return to the habit of reading the word of God because this book, the Book of Mormon, contains the fulness of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

May the Lord bless us that we may go home with renewed faith, may our tithes and offerings to the Lord increase. If we want to see temples dotting this land of Zion, this choice land above all other lands, let us remember that it can be done by the payment of our tithes and offerings. If we want beautiful houses of worship, let us pay our tithes and offerings. If we want to be content in this land that it shall be a land of Zion unto us, let us pay our tithes and offerings. The Lord has said to his servant, the Prophet Joseph Smith, that, "If my people observe not this law to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you it shall not be a land of Zion unto you." Zion to a Latter-day Saint means peace and contentment.

May we go home with a spirit of the work of God in our hearts, and with a desire to do better in the future to bring about his mighty purposes in the earth, I ask it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

(President of the Central States Mission)

I feel, my brethren and sisters, that I have never attended a conference where more men have borne testimony to the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith and the work of the Lord than at this conference. I appreciate the privilege that the Lord has granted me in being present at this time. I know that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ and that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of God. I know that those mighty men who followed him—Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith, have been, and that Heber J. Grant is now divinely appointed to lead Israel in these the last days and that the power of the Lord has rested upon them as leaders in Israel; that God our eternal Father will never forsake his people; that he will continue to be with those men and women who honor him and keep his commandments. If they serve him, he will give everyone an individual testimony that they may know that he does live, that he is present among the children of men wherever his Priesthood can be found. I positively know that the Lord revealed his Priesthood in these the last days. I know that the words he spoke unto the bishop of this Church, Bishop Partridge, when he was called to the ministry, are true:

Thus saith the Lord God, the Mighty One of Israel, Behold, I say unto you, my servant Edward, that you are blessed, and your sins are forgiven you, and you are called to preach my gospel as with the voice of a trump;

And I will lay my hand upon you by the hand of my servant Sidney Rigdon, and you shall receive my Spirit, the Holy Ghost, even the comforter, which shall teach you the peaceable things of the kingdom (Doc. and Cov. 36:1, 2).

He laid his hands upon Bishop Partridge by the hands of his servant Sidney Rigdon, and that is the order in this Church; when men are appointed and called and chosen to act in the name of God, whether they be serving as the elder who travels abroad or the high priest at home, Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, calls and ordains them by his own personal supervision, as he has organized his Church here in the earth. I pray God to bless each and every one that we may have the power and spirit and desire to serve him and that we may pray in our homes, and pray individually, that we may know, ourselves, that God lives, and that he rules and reigns in the heavens above and in the earth beneath. I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER WINSLOW FARR SMITH

(President of the Northwestern States Mission)

In the 15th Chapter of I Samuel we read: "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." It is in pursuit of my calling as a minister of the gospel, as a missionary in the Church of Jesus Christ, that I stand here in obedience to the call that has come, to bear my testimony.

To me there is nothing in life comparable with the feeling, the faith, the knowledge that the gospel of Jesus Christ is true. To feel and know without a doubt that one hundred years ago this spring

God in his mercy to his children opened the heavens and permitted the great truth of his personality and the truths of his gospel, his plan of salvation, to be made known to the children of men, is a real blessing. To me the joy of working and preaching that gospel in the world is beyond anything earth offers. The joy, the satisfaction, the great pleasure of being a missionary, a bearer of his word to the peoples of the world, to know the responsibility of working with the young men and the young women of Zion in preaching this great gospel message is a rare privilege.

I say, my brethren and sisters, to obey is better than sacrifice. It is the obeying of the call, not the sacrifice that is made, that makes these men and these women mighty. When God gives a command, that command has a purpose. I read in the holy scriptures that, "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered, and, being made perfect, he became the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the biggest thing in the world today. A testimony of that gospel is the most precious possession that a human soul can have. To stand up and bear that testimony is the greatest privilege that comes to any Latter-day Saint. Unto you, my brethren and sisters, unto every member of this Church and especially to those who have been specifically designated to be missionaries is the great responsibility of declaring to the world that God has spoken from the heavens in these the last days. There is nothing under heaven to compare with it. What is wealth, what is position, what is influence, if in gaining these things you jeopardize your place with God? I say, unto you, my brethren and sisters, is this responsibility given.

The command has come to you. You must obey, there is no other way under heaven whereby you can be saved. There is no other name under heaven whereby you may obtain salvation. Knowing this to be a fact, and being spurred on by the testimonies that have been borne during this conference, dare you stand back, dare you let the adversary conquer you, dare you let pass any opportunity to declare that God has spoken from the heavens in these the last days? I declare to you as a servant of the Lord, as a missionary in his great cause, that nothing that you will ever possess will give you the satisfaction of retaining, by righteous living, by obedience to his law, by obedience and respect to the Priesthood, that testimony which has been given you, and which has been greatly strengthened during this conference. God bless you. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

The Government of the United States is endeavoring to the very best of its ability to encourage the people to be thrifty and to save. It is trying to overcome the wave of extravagance that at present seems to be sweeping over the country, notwithstanding the high cost of living.

IN THE INTEREST OF ECONOMY, NO LARGE PARTY WILL BE TAKEN TO THE SACRED GROVE.

We desire to announce that the Church authorities are in full accord with this campaign of the Government in favor of thrift. In view of the present conditions and of the marvelous and wonderful rendition of the "Vision" last night in this building, the cantata by Professor Evan Stephens, it has been deemed wise—in view of the immense amount that it would cost to carry a large number of people, probably a thousand, judging from the many applications that have come to us—not to take a large party to the Sacred Grove. We feel it would be an expense that ought to be avoided; and therefore only a small company, if any company at all, will visit that sacred spot.

We had here last night the most magnificent audience that has ever been in this building for any entertainment of any kind or description. The receipts were larger, although the admission was only 50c, than when we have had the world-renowned artists of the country here, charging $2 and $3 admission. Hundreds, yes more than a thousand, I am sure, were turned away last evening.

THE "VISION," BY STEPHENS, TO BE REPEATED IN JUNE.

We expect to repeat "The Vision" again during the June conference, and to make that occasion as memorable as this conference. We believe that more good will come from this conference and from the June conference than by having an excursion to the Sacred Grove.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I want to indorse with all my heart the very wonderful testimonies that have been borne here. I want to say that there has been a response in my heart to these marvelous testimonies. I want to pay my tribute of respect to the splendid audience that was here last night and to the wonderful rendition of the "Vision" by the choir. I desire to thank Professor Stephens and each and every one of those who took part in that very remarkable rendition, and to pray God to bless them and inspire them, that when it is repeated the same wonderful spirit may be with them. I am grateful for the splendid speech that was made here last night upon the "Vision," brief, but to the point, by Elder Melvin J. Ballard. I pray that the spirit and inspiration of the living God may accompany each and every one of the Latter-day Saints to their homes. It is the spirit that giveth life. I rejoined in listening to the testimony of our Patriarch whose great grandfather was the father of the Prophet Joseph Smith and of the Patriarch Hyrum Smith, who lost their lives as a testimony for the divinity of this work.

My heart was filled when I thought of the missionary labors time and time again of John Henry Smith, as I listened to the wonderful five-minute testimony of his son. They say that "Mormonism" is dying out in the second and the third generations; but "Mormonism" is progressing and growing day by day, year by year. This is no mushroom growth but it is the growth of the sturdy oak. We have in very deed the truth. God lives; Jesus is the Christ, Joseph Smith was a prophet of God and he is a prophet of God. He stands at the head of this dispensation. He did see God, he did receive a message from the Redeemer of the world. We have the truth. May God help us to live it, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

We will now sing the hymn, "O My Father." The great majority of this audience I am afraid are not acquainted with the old English tune, by which tune Aunt Eliza R. Snow said she loved to hear her hymn sung, better than any other. The choir will lead us in singing the hymn by that tune.

I was once asked by Professor John J. McClellan, "Why did you learn 'O My Father' by the old tune instead of the Moody and Sankey tune?" I said: "Because it is all wool and a yard wide and the other is shoddy." He said: "Had you been a musician, you could not have made a better criticism."

The choir and congregation sang, "O my Father," to the old tune.

Conference was adjourned for six months.

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Bryant S. Hinckley of the Liberty Stake of Zion.

Professor Anthony C. Lund, conducted the singing in the Tabernacle. Professor John J. McClellan played the accompaniments, interludes, etc., on the great organ, assisted by Edward P. Kimball and Tracy Y. Cannon.

The stenographic reports of the discourses in the Tabernacle were taken by Elder Franklin W. Otterstrom, assisted by Clyde Rasmussen; in the Assembly Hall and the Bureau of Information by Elder Frederick E. Barker, and Fred G. Barker.

EDWARD H. ANDERSON, Clerk of Conference.

HAVE you ever stopped to think how much time we spend in planning what we shall put on and what we shall put in our children's bodies and how little in planning what we shall put in their minds? They go to school, to be sure, but that is for only five hours a day for approximately 185 days a year. What of the years before they begin to go to school, what of the hours and days each year in which they are not under instruction? Have we any deliberate plans to care for the mind's growth as we care for the body's?

It is just as important that children shall read good books as it is that they shall learn to read at all. It would be hard to find any one who would declare that it is unnecessary for children to learn to read. Yet reading in itself is not the end we seek, but only a means to the end. The goal of all education is the enrichment of life, and a child's reading carefully guided will deepen and strengthen his future ability to make the most of himself and his opportunities.

To really love books so that they may be woven into the warp and woof of his life a child should have his own individual library, which grows year by year with his growth, yet which contains friends to whom he will return time and time again, secure in the knowledge of a happy companionship, full of pleasant associations. A large number of books is not essential to have, but a few should be added each year and the standard of choice should be kept high.—Seattle Public Library Bulletin.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I rejoice again to have the opportunity of meeting with the Latter-day Saints in another general conference. I am very happy to see so many here at this, our opening session. I desire with all my heart that all that I may say during this conference, and all that is said by my associates who speak to you, shall be inspired of the Lord. I am grateful beyond expression for the rich outpourings of the Spirit of the Lord during our conferences that we have held since it fell to my lot to preside over the Church. I am free to confess that I approached our June conference, and the other conferences that have been held here since my presidency, with fear and trembling. When I thought of the wonderful blessings of the Lord in the past at our general conferences and the inspiration to Brigham Young and those who have succeeded him, I desired with all my heart that there should be no falling off in the inspiration of the Lord to those who might address us, and earnestly supplicated him to this effect. And I am indeed grateful for the blessings that we have enjoyed, and I pray that that same blessing, that same rich outpouring of his Spirit may be given to all who shall speak to us during the sessions of this conference.

A MAGNIFICENT GIFT TO THE CHURCH

I received a letter last night that was very gratifying to me, and before making any remarks, I will read it:

Salt Lake City, Utah, October 7, 1920.

President Heber J. Grant and Council:

Dear brethren: We desire to give to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints our home on Main and First North streets to be used preferably for the women's building, thus housing the three women's organizations, or for such other purpose as may be deemed best.

Yours faithfully,

(Signed) A. W. McCune,
Elizabeth A. C. McCune.

I remarked to one of the wealthy men of our Church, within the last forty-eight hours: "When you come to pass away don't leave all of your property to your family, but give a portion of it as an endowment for some good cause for the advancement of the work of God." I have always regretted that those who have been abundantly blest of the Lord with the wealth of this world have failed to leave a part of it to some of our charitable institutions or our various organizations. I believe that where a man is worth a half million dollars or even less, if he were to give a tenth or even a quarter of his means for some charitable purpose in this Church, the remainder that he left to his family would do them more good and they would have greater wisdom in handling it and would accomplish more than though all the wealth had been left to the heirs of the departed man or woman, as the case may be. My heart has gone out in gratitude to the late Matilda M. Barratt for building us the splendid building known as the Barratt Hall, in the days of the adversity and financial hardships of our schools. And I pray God to bless Brother and Sister McCune for this magnificent gift, and to multiply their substance.

THE SPIRIT OF HELPFULNESS

This morning, after coming to my office, I happened to see lying upon my desk the first volume of what is known as Heart Throbs. I had brought it from my home to have a couple of poems copied, several days ago, and as I looked at the book I remembered a poem in it that I decided to read here today: "I shall not pass again this way," is the title. Preceding the poem is the following note:

(For several years before his death, Mr. Daniel S. Ford, the proprietor, editor and builder of the "Youth's Companion," because of delicate health, did his work and managed his mammoth business from a little room in his home in one of the beautiful parks of Boston. When loving hands cleared the plain, but convenient desk, there was found, in a conspicuous place, much worn with frequent handling, the following poem. If the poet had intended to describe Mr. Ford's daily words and actions, he could not have done so in more appropriate language.)

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The bread that bringeth strength I want to give,
The water pure that bids the thirsty live;
I want to help the fainting day by day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,
The faith to conquer crowding doubts and fears.
Beauty for ashes may I give away;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure running o'er,
And into angry hearts I want to pour
The answer soft that turneth wrath away;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give to others hope and faith,
I want to do all that the Master saith;
I want to live aright from day to day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I feel that every Latter-day Saint ought to have the same desire as Mr. Ford found expressed in this very beautiful poem. I am sure I have it in my heart this very day, as I stand before you. I feel, as expressed in the Psalms:

Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts:
And see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting.—139:23, 24.

The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever: the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.

More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold: sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb.—19:9, 10.

PAINED OVER POLITICAL AND FINANCIAL DIFFERENCES

In speaking to a few friends the other day I made some remarks and as my secretary happened to be present to take notes, I decided to read what I said on that occasion:

"I am anxious to see the Latter-day Saints devoted to the work of God above everything else in the world; and I have never been so pained in my life as I have been during the past few months over the conditions—political, financial, and otherwise—that we find among the people. The spirit of bitterness that seems to exist in the hearts of some true, faithful and honest Latter-day Saints, because of their difference of ideas and opinions on business matters and political matters is very painful to me. I do hope and pray, with all my heart, that the Spirit of the Lord may come to the Latter-day Saints in great abundance; that this spirit of almost hatred and animosity, that seems to be existing today among the people may disappear."

THE LORD'S DEMAND

In section 64:8-13, Doctrine and Covenants, we find the following:

My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted, and sorely chastened:

Wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin.

I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men;

And ye ought to say in your hearts, let God judge between me and thee, and reward thee according to thy deeds.

And he that repenteth not of his sins, and confesseth them not, then ye shall bring him before the Church, and do with him as the Scripture saith unto you, either by commandment or by revelation.

And this ye shall do that God may be glorified, not because ye forgive not, having not compassion, but that ye may be justified in the eyes of the law, that ye may not offend him who is your Lawgiver.

And in section 121:45, 46, we read:

Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly, then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God, and the doctrine of the Priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven.

The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy sceptre an unchanging sceptre of righteousness and truth, and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee for ever and ever.

ILLUSTRATION FROM PERSONAL EXPERIENCE

I have a very wonderful respect and regard for this quotation from page 240 of the Doctrine and Covenants. Some years ago a prominent man was excommunicated from the Church. He, years later, pleaded for baptism. President John Taylor referred the question of his baptism to the apostles, stating that if they unanimously consented to his baptism, he could be baptized, but that if there was one dissenting vote, he should not be admitted into the Church. As I remember the vote, it was five for baptism and seven against. A year or so later the question came up again and it was eight for baptism and four against. Later it came up again and it was ten for baptism and two against. Finally all of the Council of the Apostles, with the exception of your humble servant, consented that this man be baptized and I was then next to the junior member of the quorum. Later I was in the office of the president and he said:

"Heber, I understand that eleven of the apostles have consented to the baptism of Brother So and So," naming the man, "and that you alone are standing out. How will you feel when you get on the other side and you find that this man has pleaded for baptism and you find that you have perhaps kept him out from entering in with those who have repented of their sins and received some reward?"

I said, "President John Taylor, I can look the Lord squarely in the eye, if he asks me that question, and tell him that I did that which I thought was for the best good of the kingdom. When a man holding the holy Priesthood of God goes forth to proclaim the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, to call the wicked to repentance; goes to proclaim that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that the gospel has been restored again to the earth, and that man in the mission home of the Church of Christ commits adultery, I can tell the Lord that he had disgraced this Church enough, and that I did not propose to let any such a man come back into the Church."

"Well," said President Taylor, "my boy, that is all right, stay with your convictions, stay right with them."

I said, "President Taylor, your letter said you wanted each one of the apostles to vote the convictions of his heart. If you desire me to surrender the convictions of my heart, I will gladly do it; I will gladly vote for this man to come back, but while I live I never expect to consent, if it is left to my judgment. That man was accused before the apostles several years ago and he stood up and lied and claimed that he was innocent, and the Lord gave to me a testimony that he lied, but I could not condemn him because of that. I got down on my knees that night and prayed God to give me the strength not to expose that man, seeing that he had lied but that we had no evidence, except only the testimony of the girl that he had seduced. And I prayed the Lord that some day additional testimony might come, and it did come, and we then excommunicated him. And when a man can lie to the apostles, and when he can be guilty while proclaiming repentance of sin, I think this Church has been disgraced enough without ever letting him come back into the Church."

"Well," repeated President Taylor, "my boy, don't you vote as long as you live, while you hold those ideas, stay right with them."

A CHANGE OF HEART—THE SPIRIT OF FORGIVENESS

I left the president's office. I went home. My lunch was not ready. I was reading the Doctrine and Covenants through for the third or fourth time systematically, and I had my bookmark in it. but as I picked it up, instead of opening where the bookmark was, it opened to:

I, the Lord, will forgive whom I will forgive, but of you it is required to forgive all men; but he that forgiveth not his brother standeth condemned before the Lord.

And I closed the book and said: "If the devil applies for baptism, and claims that he has repented, I will baptize him." After lunch I returned to the office of President Taylor and I said, "President Taylor, I have had a change of heart. One hour ago I said, never while I live, did I expect to ever consent that Brother So and So should be baptized, but I have come to tell you he can be baptized, so far as I am concerned."

President Taylor had a habit, when he was particularly pleased, of sitting up and laughing and shaking his whole body, and he laughed and said, "My boy, the change is very sudden, very sudden. I want to ask you a question. How did you feel when you left here an hour ago? Did you feel like you wanted to hit that man right squarely between the eyes and knock him down?"

I said, "That is just the way I felt."

He said, "How do you feel now?"

"Well, to tell you the truth, President Taylor, I hope the Lord will forgive the sinner."

He said, "You feel happy, don't you, in comparison. You had the spirit of anger, you had the spirit of bitterness in your heart toward that man, because of his sin and because of the disgrace he had brought upon the Church. And now you have the spirit of forgiveness and you really feel happy, don't you?"

And I said, "Yes I do; I felt mean and hateful and now I feel happy."

And he said: "Do you know why I wrote that letter?"

I said: "No, sir."

"Well I wrote it, just so you and some of the younger members of the apostles would learn the lesson that forgiveness is in advance of justice, where there is repentance, and that to have in your heart the spirit of forgiveness and to eliminate from your hearts the spirit of hatred and bitterness, brings peace and joy; that the gospel of Jesus Christ brings joy, peace and happiness to every soul that lives it and follows its teachings."

LOVE AND FORGIVENESS

And so he went on. I cannot remember all of the teachings, but he continued in this way, telling me that he could never have given me that experience, that he could not give to me a testimony of the gospel; that I must receive that testimony for myself; that I must have the right spirit come into my heart and feel it—the spirit of forgiveness, the spirit of long-suffering and charity—before there would any good come to me as an individual; that by simply surrendering my will to his, and voting to baptize this man, I would never have learned the lesson that the spirit of joy and peace comes in the hour of forgiveness, and when our hearts are full of charity and long-suffering to those who have made mistakes. From that day to this I have remembered those teachings.

The Prophet of the Lord said:

My boy, never forget that when you are in the line of your duty your heart will be full of love and forgiveness, even for the repentant sinner, and that when you get out of that straight line of duty and have the determination that what you think is justice and what you think is equity and right should prevail, you oftentimes are anything but happy. You can know the difference between the Spirit of the Lord and the spirit of the adversary, when you find that you are happy and contented, that you love your fellows, that you are anxious for their welfare; and you can tell that you do not have that spirit when you are full of animosity and feel that you would like to knock somebody down.

I am reminded of one of the finest chapters in all the Bible (1 Cor. 13):

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.

And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

Charity, suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up,

Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil;

Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth:

Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

For we know in part, and we prophesy in part.

But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.

When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things.

For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.

And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.

Many people imagine that charity is giving a dollar to somebody; but real, genuine charity is giving love and sympathy, and that is the kind of charity that the apostle had reference to in this 13th chapter of First Corinthians.

I remember that after that teaching given to me as a young man, as a boy, almost, by the President of the Church, I read this chapter about once a week for quite a while, then once a month for several months. I thought I needed it in my business, so to speak; that it was one of the things that were necessary for my advancement.

I remember that a year ago, here at the conference, I read a very splendid and wonderful song, the half of the first verse of which reads as follows:

Let each man learn to know himself,
To gain that knowledge let him labor,
Improve those failings in himself
That he condemns so in his neighbor.

The whole poem was published in the conference pamphlet. I quoted it some weeks ago, and was asked where one could get a copy, and again last Sunday, when I told some people that they could read it in next Saturday night's News. So I shall not take up your time by quoting the whole poem. I also quoted the four short verses from our hymn on page 66, a part of which reads as follows:

Should you feel inclined to censure
Faults you may in others view,
Ask your own heart, ere you venture,
If that has not failings too.

I had not the slightest idea when I quoted these poems, that I would desire to quote from them again today; but in view of the condamnation and the spirit, almost, of animosity, and hate that seems to be manifested by some people among the Latter-day Saints, at the present time, regarding business and political affairs, I desire to emphasize, with all the power of my being, the last verse of that little hymn, on page 66:

Do not form opinions blindly,
Hastiness to trouble tends,
Those of whom we thought unkindly
Oft become our warmest friends.

EVERY MAN INNOCENT UNTIL PROVED GUILTY

There are a great many people who believe that if a person is indicted, he is undoubtedly a criminal. There are very few people who stop to reflect upon the fact that when a Grand Jury finds an indictment against any man, it is seldom, if ever, the case that he is permitted to appear before the Grand Jury, or to have a representative there to state his case. The law itself provides—as I understand it—although I am not a lawyer—that every man shall be considered innocent until such time as he is proved guilty; and no man is guilty, in the true sense of the word, of an offense, just because a Grand Jury finds an indictment against him. In criminal cases a man is to be considered innocent unless the evidence against him shall be so conclusive that there is not even a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. Certainly Latter-day Saints ought to be as liberal in their judgments, as the cold law of the land; and certainly every man ought to be considered innocent in the estimation of the Latter-day Saints—particularly if that man is a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and has devoted his life for the up-building of God's kingdom until such time as he has what is known as "his day in court." We can afford, I believe, to be as liberal as the cold law itself.

I desire to repeat the last verse of that excellent hymn, which I learned thirty-five or forty years ago, when Francis M. Lyman first sang it for me. I wrote it that very night, and learned it the next day. I would like every Latter-day Saint to apply the teachings of this splendid verse in his or her life, and if we do that I believe we will grow in love and charity; that the spirit of peace and happiness, that President Taylor promised me when I entertained the feeling of determination to keep a man out of the Church, and the spirit of joy and peace which came to me, after the change of heart, will come to Latter-day Saints:

And in self-judgment, if you find
Your deeds to others are superior,
To you has Providence been kind,
As you should be to those inferior.
Example sheds a genial ray
Of light, which men are apt to borrow,
So first improve yourself today
And then improve your friends tomorrow.

REGRETS THAT THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS QUESTION IS IN POLITICS

A year ago, at our conference, I expressed sincerely my regrets that bitterness was being engendered in the hearts of the Latter-day Saints, because what was known as the League of Nations had been injected into politics. I expressed my sincere regrets that this great document should ever have been made a subject for political discussion. I felt that all people in these United States of America should approach the consideration of this great document, independent of party affiliation. I desire to express my regrets that, if anything, it is in politics more today than it was a year ago.

I sincerely regret that what is known as the "sugar question" has been injected into politics, in this State of Utah. I feel in my heart of hearts that it has engendered bitterness, that it has created a great deal of animosity, and I think it is something that ought to have been eliminated from politics, and that all questions of that kind should be settled by the interested people. I desire, beyond my power to tell, that there shall always be perfect harmony and perfect justice between the farmer and the sugar producer. I desire that all judgments by Latter-day Saints upon the course of men connected with any industry in this state, shall be withheld, at least, until there has been passed a final judgment by a court that has the right to pass upon it.

I wish to say to all Latter-day Saints:

Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

KEEP THE COMMANDMENTS OF GOD

I beg every Latter-day Saint to cultivate the spirit of charity, of long-suffering, and brotherly love. I say to all Latter-day Saints: Keep the commandments of God. That is my keynote speech, just those few words: Keep the commandments of God. Read the psalm that tells you not to fret your soul about the sinner. It is a magnificent psalm to read. I thought some of reading it here to this congregation, but I have read so much that I am afraid you will get tired of the reading. Keep the commandments of the Lord. Be honest with God. Never fail to pay an honest tithing to the Lord, on every dollar that comes into your hands. "Oh but," says one, "the Church does not need it." You are right; you are correct. The Church does not need it, but the man who has made covenant with the living God to keep his commandments, and then does not keep them, he needs it. A man who is not honest with the Lord should repent and be honest with the Lord, and then the windows of heaven shall open and God will pour down upon the heads of the Latter-day Saints blessings, if they are financially honest with the Lord. Observe the Word of Wisdom. Never indulge in those things that the Lord God Almighty, the Creator of heaven and earth, has told us are not good for man.

CONCLUSION

I rejoice that we have national prohibition. I rejoice that many, even in our own community, who were wrecks financially, almost wrecks spiritually, because of prohibition and the taking away of temptation, are making men of themselves today. I rejoice that prohibition—to my mind the greatest financial and moral blessing that has ever come to humanity—has come to the people of the United States, and I hope and pray that it may soon come to every nation under heaven.

I rejoice that the women have the franchise. I rejoice in all of the great and wonderful advancements that are being made for the benefit of mankind; and I rejoice, above all things, in a knowledge that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of the true and living God; that the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the plan of life and salvation, has been restored to the earth. I rejoice that you and I have a knowledge of that gospel; and oh, may God help us to live it; may he fill our hearts with charity, with love, with forgiveness, with the desire to serve him, and may we in very deed be Latter-day Saints, is my prayer and desire, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A duet, "I know that my Redeemer lives," was sung by J. R. Boshard and Elizabeth Evans.

PRESIDENT ANTHON H. LUND

I have listened with much attention to our President's remarks, and I hope that every heart will retain the good counsel he has given, and that all will remember it and make it the moving principle of their lives.

KEY WORDS OF THE CONFERENCE

Love and charity, forgiveness, and doing our duties that the Lord has laid upon us are the key words or the key note to this conference. You who have had much experience in life know the truth of what the president has expressed. In our intercourse with one another it often happens that a word may displease us, or the act of our brother cause us to blame him, and, perhaps, enlarge upon what he has done until we make it almost a crime. We ought to be careful not to let anything like this cause bitterness and hatred in our hearts, for as the president read to us, the Lord will forgive whom he will forgive, but he commands us that we shall forgive one another. This is a beautiful principle. When we remember the relationship in which we stand to our heavenly Father and to his children we ought to practice the principle of charity toward one another. We generally love our own brothers and sisters, we are tender about what is said concerning them, we even feel anything said derogatory to their character to be almost the same as if it were said about our own. As we feel toward our own brothers and sisters, so we should likewise feel towards our brethren and sisters in the covenant and for all men. We should not let hatred enter our hearts. Let us forgive others their offenses in the hope that we can have forgiveness for our own.

BLESSEDNESS OF CHARITY AND FORGIVENESS

The scriptures give us many examples of the blessedness of charity and forgiveness. I recall the story of David and Saul. Saul had learned that David had been anointed to become king of Israel. Although at one time he loved David, and David had been able with his singing and his harp to drive out the evil spirit from the old king, yet when the king heard of the destiny of his own house, that his son was not to rule in Israel, that the kingdom was to be given to David, his heart was filled with hatred. He took three thousand men and went down into the southern part of Palestine, among the mountains, hunting for David and the few followers he had with him, determined to kill him. Saul entered a cave where David and his associates were hiding. David knew the king had come to make him a captive and to take his life; yet he would not hurt Saul, because he was the anointed of the Lord. He cut off the skirt of Saul's robe and left the cave. In the morning when the king left the cave David cried to him and showed him what he had done. The king felt repentant for a little while. He knew he had been in the power of the man whose life he sought, and he acknowledged that David was more just than himself. He saw that David had not exercised the power he had to kill the one who sought his life. David felt reverence for the man who had been anointed by a prophet of God. I am sorry to say that Saul's good mood did not last long, but still there was a moment when he felt the power of forgiveness working upon him.

SCRIPTURAL EXAMPLES

Jesus in one of his parables tells about the servant that owed his master a great sum of money, so much that he could never pay it, but because of his pleading his master forgave him and let him go. When going from his master's house he met a man who owed him a very small amount. The servant that had been forgiven so much was not willing to forgive this other man the small amount that he owed, and being unable to pay the wicked servant cast him into prison until he could pay the debt. When the master heard of this unforgiving man's act he called him back and measured out to him his punishment for being so hard-hearted and so ungrateful for the blessings he had received.

Jesus taught his disciples how to pray, and one part of that prayer is, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." That is the principle. We all know how greatly we are indebted to our heavenly Father, and remembering this we ought to be willing to forgive all men their trespasses against us.

CHRIST SET THE GREATEST EXAMPLE OF ALL

Let us not entertain hatred against anyone, whether he is connected with the Church or not. That feeling ought not to be harbored in our breasts. Let us rather feel to imitate our great Master. He not only taught, as he did in the parable just related, the necessity and the importance of forgiving others as we want to be forgiven, but he showed forth this spirit in his life. When he was crucified at Golgotha—and it is said that the suffering of crucifixion is the keenest kind of torture—suffering intensely and knowing that he was innocent, and that those, for whom he had labored and desired greatly to save, had hung him on that accursed tree, he did not ask the Lord to take revenge upon them, but asked his Father in heaven, “Forgive them, for they know not what they do.” Just think of his asking for their forgiveness when he was under such intense suffering on the cross! There is the example for us. We must exercise charity for one another and avoid letting ill-feelings rankle in our hearts against any person.

LET CHARITY DRIVE OUT BITTERNESS

We have not the right to hate any of the creatures of God, but we have been commanded to love them, and also to forgive them if they have offended us. I believe that you can put this down as a principle, that to start with there are very few offenders who wilfully intend to offend, not having given full thought to their acts. They do something that offends us, and we at once feel offended and angry and, perhaps, we let it grow to that greater amount of anger that we call hatred. This should not be. Perhaps if we had spoken to our brother at once we would have learned that he did not really mean what we thought he did, and that we have become offended too hastily. Let us have enough charity for one another that we will not allow anything to be an offense to cause us hardness of heart.

FORGIVENESS AND CHARITY BRING HAPPINESS

I remember once I went with President Grant and two others of the apostles to investigate complaints against a certain bishop. Among those opposed to the bishop was a man who had much influence with the people. He and the bishop almost hated each other. We brought them together, they freely expressed their feelings and what had caused them. We acted as peacemakers, and when they saw their error, with tears in their eyes they clasped hands and forgave each other. It was a touching scene and joy filled all our hearts. After that the bishop was reconciled to his opposers. Now, brethren and sisters, those men felt happy afterwards. They felt that they had suffered for a long time from something that they ought not to have borne in their hearts. As President Grant has told us, anyone who forgives his enemy or his brother what he has done against him feels joy in his heart and the spirit whispers that he has done the right thing.

Now, let us learn to have charity for one another, and carry it out in our every-day lives, and we will make life happy to ourselves and to our neighbors and our path will be much smoother.

May the Lord help us to do our duties in all the different lines of work given us, and may we ever remember what we owe to our heavenly Father and try to show love to our brethren and sisters. I ask the Lord to help us in this matter, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. PENROSE

I feel exceedingly thankful this morning for this great privilege of meeting with the Latter-day Saints, my brothers and sisters, once more in general conference. I have not fully known for a fact that I would be able to be here on this occasion. For several days past I have not been in my usual health and vigor, but thanks be to the Lord for this great blessing to me this morning.

I have listened to words of life, eternal life, from the man who stands at the head of the Church to which we, most of us, if not all, belong. We have felt that the Lord has been with him in the instructions which have been imparted, and that the same spirit and power which always belong to the leader of the Church have been with him in talking to us today, as they were in years that are past, from the days of President Brigham Young to his successors in office down to the present moment. I cannot speak personally of the influence and power that attended the Prophet Joseph, whom God raised up when a youth to open up the latter-day dispensation—but I am familiar with his words that have been recorded, that have been published, and that are contained in the history of the Church and in many manuscript documents which the Church possesses. But I know that the same spirit that burned in his soul, and with which he inspired the Saints of God who were placed under his direction, has been with us right down to the present time since his martyrdom.

THE SPIRIT OF LOVE AND CHARITY, THE SPIRIT OF THE GOSPEL.

This morning I feel that that spirit is here in great power, and the words that have been spoken to us have been given to us in great plainness. We can all understand them, and we can appreciate the spirit by which they have been delivered. The spirit of love and charity is the spirit of the gospel. This is what Christ breathed. That is what his apostles carried with them except on occasions when they became a little dissatisfied with each other, and spoke against each other. Even Paul, the great apostle, as we call him because he wrote so much, dissented with Peter and boasted that he had charged him to his face with doing something that he thought was wrong; and yet Paul himself committed the same kind of error, if it was an error—of course it was not—in regard to Timothy and in regard to other matters that came before his attention. Later he arrived at the position that "to a Jew he was a Jew; to the Greek he was a Greek;" and he became "all things unto all men, that he might win some unto Christ;" yet for one little act not in variance with that, he found fault with Peter. But that is only a side question. The apostles of old, as we have heard this morning from the revelation that President Grant has read, differed from each other sometimes; and they found fault with each other; but, as the Lord said, the great fault was that they did not forgive each other "in their hearts." They might do it with their lips and by the clasping of their hands, but they did not forgive each other in their hearts, and therefore "they were sorely afflicted."

LET US FORGIVE IN OUR HEARTS

Now, Latter-day Saints, let us take that lesson to our hearts. If we are offended with any one, if we feel that somebody has grieved us or oppressed us, done us some wrong, let us forgive them in our hearts, if we want to be called saints of the Most High and so regarded by the powers on high. It is in the soul of man where this feeling of charity should prevail, which is not merely the kind of charity that is shown forth in giving alms to the poor, or anything of that kind. That is only a very small manifestation. It is the spirit of brotherhood, the spirit of kindness, the spirit of forgiveness in our hearts, that we must entertain towards one another, that counts. I have had considerable experience in high councils, in the course of my activities in the Church, and I have seen people who were required to forgive one another arise and shake hands, and then go forth with the same spirit of bitterness in their souls that they had in the beginning, so that their feelings of repentance and charity were not genuine and did not count.

I remember one particular case that occurred, not a thousand miles from Salt Lake, when two brethren engaged the high council a whole week in settling a difficulty about sheep. We used to have a great many difficulties on the sheep question. After we had spent all that time in regard to it a certain division was made and a conclusion arrived at by the high council. Fifteen men, all desirous of doing right, having no personal interest in the matter except to do right, the Presidency and the High Council together, made a decision, and the brethren who had quarreled so much were required to shake hands in agreement over the decision, which they did. At the closing of the meeting one of them said to the other: "Well, I will shake hands with you; I will forgive you, but I will have them there sheep in the resurrection, with interest!"

THE DOCTRINE DECLARED BY THE LORD

I wish to read a little scripture contained in the same writings from which President Grant read this morning. Christ's remarks in regard to judging are to be found in the 7th chapter of Matthew. "Judge not, that ye be not judged," that is in the first verse. I advise my friends here to read the whole of the discourse, so far as it relates to that matter; and now I want to read just a verse or two from the eighteenth chapter of Matthew:

Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother.

But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established.

And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the Church: but if he neglect to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican.

You know the publicans in those times were tax collectors, and they were not very popular, any more than they are now, most of them.

This is the doctrine enunciated by the Lord Jesus Christ when on earth, and that is now established in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is another side to this question, perhaps, a little. The principle expressed to us this morning by President Grant and President Lund is what we need to carry away in our hearts from this conference. It is a key-note to our services, just as Brother Lund said. I have felt that, and I appreciate these things that have been said by the President more because of the opportunity that I have had for a few days past of thinking over matters when I was awake. I was asleep about half the time, but while I was awake the very passages that he has cited here, and some of the hymns that he has referred to, have passed over my mind and I have felt in my soul that this is the word to be carried to all Israel—the spirit of charity and brotherly love, which promotes real union. We must not become divided in our souls, in our spiritual natures, in our intercourse with each other. We may hold different views of certain matters that I will not even allude to here this morning, but that should not affect our brotherhood, our real sentiments of kindness and of charity towards each other, and it should not affect us when we attempt to pass judgment and have no right to do it.

PASSING JUDGMENT ON OUR NEIGHBOR

There is the point I want to draw your attention to. We not only want to entertain this spirit of kindness and charity, but even when we think certain persons have done something that is wrong, and that it affects us—"When thy brother trespasseth against thee,"—as Jesus puts it, have we the right to pass judgment upon him, even in our minds? No we have not. The principle of justice and of mercy together will say: "Let that man stand uncondemned until he can defend himself." The stream of accusation is frequently very shallow, and underneath it sometimes lie dark purposes, and they are revealed when the person is placed on his defense and has the opportunity of explaining. As I say in one of my little songs:

School thy feelings;
Condemnation never pass on friend or foe,
Though the tide of accusation
Like a flood of truth may flow.

Hear defense before deciding,
And a ray of light may gleam,
Showing thee what filth is hiding,
Underneath the shallow stream

The Lord has provided in his Church that justice shall be done, but it does not exclude mercy, of course. We have a splendid illustration of the exercise of mercy in that case that Brother Grant has told us about, in regard to what President John Taylor taught him. But people say sometimes when aggrieved: "If that is 'Mormonism' I don't want to have anything to do with it." What a foolish thing. Does "Mormonism" in any respect condone iniquity? Does it approve of oppression? Does it approve of injustice? Does it approve of one man doing wrong to another in any way, without recompense and making it right? It does not. People sometimes say, "Well, if that is what the Church allows I am not going to church." Oh, what folly—not going to church? Are you going to hurt yourselves? You hurt yourself when you do not fulfil the requirement of God to go up to the house of prayer on the Lord's day, as he has commanded. You hurt yourself if you hold the Priesthood of the living God and you do not attend your quorum meetings and observe the duties that belong to you, you are offending yourself, you are doing harm to yourself. The Church has got so big now and so powerful, financially and otherwise—although it is pretty well up to the mark now in its finances—yet it has advanced so far that it can do without you or me or anybody else. When we neglect a duty we neglect something that benefits ourselves, and we are the worse for it. So much for that.

THE CHURCH PROVIDES FOR HEARING WHERE JUSTICE IS DONE

But the Church supplies the means whereby everybody who is oppressed or trespassed against can receive a hearing, and get justice done. In what I have cited the Lord lays down the principle, and we have that embodied in the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We have a body of men who go from house to house to visit the Saints. We call them teachers. Well, they are, but this belongs to the duty of the priest, as you will read in the twentieth section of the Doctrine and Covenants. The priest's duty is to preach and teach and expound and baptize and to "visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties," and so on. That is his duty.

In addition to that the Lord says the teacher's duty is to watch over the Church and be with the Church always, and to see that there is no iniquity in the Church, neither hardness of heart, nor evil speaking. Why is it a sin? Because the great body of the people have been into the house of the Lord, and they have made a covenant that they will not speak evil of the Lord's anointed, have they not? Take it to heart! Are we not under a covenant with the Lord that we will not speak evil of his anointed? Well, when we do that we break that covenant. We sin against that commandment of the Lord. So we should not do it. But some may say, "Well, I have a reason for it." Well, if you have a reason, do as Jesus says. Here are persons appointed in the Church who will go with you to the individual that has trespassed against you, or if you will do your duty properly you will begin by going to that person alone.

THE PLAN TO BE PURSUED

I have heard some awful things said about mighty good men in this Church, men of influence and authority and power in the Church. I have heard shameful things about them, said unwittingly, perhaps, but very disgracefully. Have persons who used such language gone to the individual who, they think, has been oppressive to them, or has done them harm or trespassed against them,—and talked the matter over with him alone? No, oh, no, oh, no. They have said, "He ought to be in the penitentiary." Well, that is not the right kind of talk for a Latter-day Saint, and especially for an elder in Israel, a bishop's counselor, or a high councilor, very wrong indeed in its nature. Here is the plan: If any man has trespassed against you, go to him in the spirit of kindness because you want the thing put right, and explain to him where you think he has done you a wrong, and see whether he has done you a wrong or not, or whether you may not be mistaken. But if you will not do that, which is the great commandment, then get the teachers, or men that are acting as teachers, two of them, to go with you and see him, talk it over and find out what the facts are in the matter, and see if you cannot be reconciled with your brother. If you can, then the Lord says you have "gained your brother." He may repent, if he has done wrong, or he will explain, or have the opportunity of explaining where he is right. Now, let us apply that to present conditions and circumstances, and do not go away and repeat these things again. Do not speak evil of your brother; become reconciled to him if you can, and if you cannot, why, get some wise man to go with you and talk it over. What then? Well, if he does not see it as you do, but insists that he is in the right and you are in the wrong, what is the next step? Why, there is a court, we call it a bishop's court. The bishop, who is a common judge in Israel, by appointment, the bishop and his counselors can meet together as a court, and they can hear you and your witnesses, if you have any, and then they will hear the accused man or woman, as the case may be, and hear his or her witnesses, then judge the matter, and if satisfaction is not had, even in that court, which is usually sufficient, or should be, because honest men, good men, are chosen to act in the bishopric,—the Lord bless them! Some of them do not know quite as much as they might know if they had had more experience, but they are honest men and wise men, and they are placed there by their brethren who have chosen them, and they have had the support by the lifting up of hands of the people. Now, if justice does not seem to be had by them, then what? Why, there is a High Council, composed of the presidency of the stake and twelve high priests, good men, honorable men, men of experience men of character, all members of the Church, all men holding the priesthood of the Lord, and they have that appointment; they are established, they are high priests in Israel and they are set apart for that purpose. They meet together and they will see that justice is done. If it is necessary for the case to be brought before that body an opportunity is had for the accuser and for the accused; and that full justice may be done, the Lord has appointed that half of that council shall stand up for the accuser and half for the accused, not that they should be biased either on one side or the other, but so that right may prevail.

I know from experience in these matters that the brethren who are organized in these councils are men of honor and integrity and influence in the Priesthood, and they will not judge a matter before they hear it. When the whole matter is heard, then the president of the council and his counselors together talk the matter over and make up the decision as they consider in justice and righteousness before the Lord, and present it to the council. If a majority of the council agree with them it stands.

AN APPEAL MAY BE MADE

An appeal can be made, if it is claimed that injustice is done, to the Presidency of the Church, who do not sit as a court, to hear witness, but go over all the evidence as presented and attested by the clerk, to see if there is any wrong and mistake made, any injustice done, and if so, that they can point out the means, as provided in Section 107 of the Doctrine and Covenants, how the matter can be fully determined and heard again, if they so decide, and that the matter can be so looked into that every point, every part and every item of the decision can be questioned and examined, and a conclusion arrived at as to its justice and righteousness.

UNSAFE TO FOLLOW A RUMOR

But is anything of that kind being done in the cases which have been referred to here this morning? Not at all. What are you doing? Following a rumor, a most unsafe thing to do. A certain rumor gets out that certain things have been done, and people think they know they are true, because of circumstances that arise; but they do not get the other side, they do not pay any attention to it, and if anybody seeks to put forward the other side, it is said: "Oh, yes, you stand up for him of course." That is the spirit that is manifested. Now, we want to do away with that, and therein is the great lesson of this morning to me and to all of us, I hope. The Lord has given us the way and the means to settle our difficulties and differences in the Church, and so, as the old apostles taught us, the Latter-day apostles teach: "Don't go to law with your brother, if it can be avoided by taking the matter before the courts of the Church, or to a court of arbitration composed of persons chosen on either side, who can arbitrate the matter in the right spirit. There are certain kinds of cases, like cases for the settlement of titles to land, that cannot be settled that way; they are outside of this jurisdiction. But the whole of our gospel and our teachings and our influence is ecclesiastical. We may say it is temporal as well as spiritual. Certainly: our Church embraces the temporal and the spiritual together, as the Lord does, and the authorities of this Church, in their station, preside over the whole Church, in all of its ramifications—the most beautiful and splendid and perfect organization on the earth.

LET US POSSESS OURSELVES IN PATIENCE

Now, let us take to heart the lessons of this morning, brethren and sisters. Do not, during this coming campaign,—I allude to it just simply in that way; I do not want to talk politics, or to have it said I have been talking politics,—but in this coming campaign possess yourselves in patience, and do not abuse or misrepresent any other person or party. You have no right to do it. I do not care how strong a partisan you may be on your own side, you have no right to misrepresent the other. You have no right to lie about it or about them. You have no right to commit any kind of injustice. Tell the truth as you understand it before the Lord, but not the whole truth, if that truth includes abusing the other party. Do not misrepresent what other people believe, and say a certain party believes this. Do not do that. Tell them what you believe, if you want to tell them what you understand; make clear and plain the truth as it appears to you, and do not find fault with and abuse or misrepresent others, either parties or persons. Is that politics? Call it what you like, it is the truth, it is the gospel. Jesus Christ, in the same discourse that we have heard about this morning, told his apostles to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness—not "its," as we quote it sometimes, but seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these temporalities that he was talking about shall be added unto you. How do we find out about the righteousness of God that we are to seek for in the gospel? The Apostle Paul, writing to the Romans, I believe, said: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation, unto every one that believeth; for therein is the righteousness of God revealed, from faith to faith."

SOME DUTIES OF THE SAINTS

Study the gospel, live the gospel. Seek to God, that you may understand his word, his righteousness, and pattern after it as you go on from faith to faith, and put away from your souls everything of the kind that has been spoken against this morning, but be filled with the spirit that cometh from above; for God is love, and his tender mercies are over all his works. He loves us, and will lead us and will save us if we will keep his commandments and walk in his ways, and the time will come when we will meet together in his eternal presence, and all that belongs to us we shall get, everything.

Now, let us forgive one another, in our hearts, if any offenses have been made, and proceed from this conference determined to carry that spirit wherever we go. And men who are in authority, presiding authorities, bishops, and all the brethren who hold the Priesthood, who labor among the Saints, carry that spirit with you wherever you go, and do not listen to evil things against your brethren, but speak of all the best you can. God bless you all in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I am grateful beyond expression that President Penrose has been able to speak to us. He has been at home, sick abed, most of the time during the last week.

I will state that a general music committee has been selected, and will undoubtedly be sustained at our conference, with Elder M. J. Ballard as the head of that committee.

The congregation sang, "Come, come ye Saints."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Lewis Anderson, President of the South Sanpete stake of Zion.

AFTERNOON SESSION

President Heber J. Grant presided and called the congregation to order at 2 o'clock. The house, both in the auditorium and galleries, was comfortably filled with representatives from all parts of the Church.

The congregation sang, "Do what is right."

Prayer was offered by Elder Edward C. Rich, President of the Montpelier Stake of Zion.

The congregation sang, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah."

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

My brethren and sisters, you will pardon me if I look straight ahead and do not turn to the right or to the left; it is the only way.

I was profoundly impressed by the stirring exhortation and testimony of President Grant this morning, which was strongly emphasized and reinforced by remarks of the brethren who followed. Surely it was a keynote address. We have received the word and we would do well to give heed to it.

NATURE OF FORGIVENESS

Forgiveness is one of the most attractive and beautiful principles of the gospel of Christ. You know Moses said: "The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy." He is a God of mercy and of forgiveness and is long-suffering. We should be like him. Do you know that what some people call forgiveness is not always forgiveness. "Yes," says one who has been wronged, "I'll forgive but not forget." I am reminded of the story of the two darkies, Rastus and Sambo. These darkies were at enmity all their lives. There was a great feud between them until Sambo came to his death-bed, and a friend said to him: "Sambo, in this solemn moment, surely you will forgive Rastus." Sambo said, "Yes," and turning to Rastus remarked, "Rastus, if I dies you are forgiven, but if I lives, look out for me." Another illustration. One friend said to another: "Do you love your enemies?" He answered: "No sir, but I sympathize with them." "Well, I did not know they needed sympathy." "They don't," he said, "but they will when I get through with them." Remember, the admonition is, seek diligently faith, hope and charity, but the greatest of these is charity.

THREE EVILS EXTANT IN THE WORLD

I would like to speak for a few moments today upon the subject of three evils that are extant in the world at large and which have also crept into our community, in some places in a greater degree, in other places in a lesser degree; but they are here nevertheless, and oh, what a triumvirate of evils! I allude to profanity, the tobacco evil, and the bondage of debt.

SACREDNESS OF THE NAME OF GOD

You will remember that the Lord spoke to Moses upon one occasion and said to him that he was about to come down and manifest himself to his people. Moses was instructed to sanctify the people that they might meet the Lord, to take two days for this important duty and on the third day the Lord would come down. This is what the record says of that manifestation of majesty and power:

And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp trembled.

And Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God; and they stood at the nether part of the mount.

And Mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the Lord descended upon it in fire: and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly.

And when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, Moses spake, and God answered him by a voice.

And so the Lord descended upon Mount Sinai and revealed himself in power to the children of Israel and spoke to them, but I would like to say to you, that this great demonstration of the power of God, which must have been exceedingly impressive, was nothing, in my judgment, compared with the words which the Lord spoke upon that occasion. Remember, the thunders passed away, the lightnings ceased to flash, the earth trembled no more, but the words that were spoken have come thundering down through the ages and are known to us as the Decalogue, and these words, mark you, are binding today upon the children of Israel, and upon the whole world.

Now, the first of these commandments was exceedingly impressive. The Lord said: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

"Thou shalt not bow thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous god."

In the commandments that followed, the Lord made reference to the sacredness of the Sabbath day. He spoke in regard to the attitude of parents to children, that children should honor their parents. He spoke against the evil of killing, of stealing, of adultery and of bearing false witness. He also said:

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

I remind you, brethren and sisters, that there are two great Priesthoods in the Church of Christ. One is the Aaronic Priesthood, the other is the Holy Priesthood after the order of the Son of God, but out of respect and reverence to the name of the Supreme Being, to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name, they, the Church, in ancient days, called this Priesthood after Melchizedek. Melchizedek was a great high priest. He is spoken of as having been the king of Salem and the prince of peace. He must have been a great and good man, and surely he was highly honored in having the Priesthood named after him. But it was primarily for the purpose, mark you, of avoiding the too frequent use of the name of Deity. Jesus, during his ministry, emphasized this matter of profanity. It had his attention, he took notice of it, and thus he spake to his disciples and to his people:

And again ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, thou shalt not forswear thyself but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths: but I say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great king. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communications be yea, yea, and nay, nay, for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

Now brethren and sisters, we learn from these scriptures that the name of God is very sacred, and that it ought not to be used lightly. We have been told many times that even in our sermons it should not often be spoken, neither ought it to be used very much in our prayers. If that be the case, what shall we say of the man, and particularly if he be a man holding the Priesthood, if he takes the name of the Lord in vain? The Lord has said he shall not be held guiltless, he must answer for it. You do not hear profanity everywhere, you do not hear it in all places, but now and then, in various sections of the Church, you will hear the name of the Lord profaned. It is a great sin. It is a serious evil and the man, (and I might say also the woman) who is guilty of this fault hath need of repentance.

TOBACCO IS NOT GOOD FOR MAN

I would like to say a word or two upon the subject of the tobacco evil. This matter is before us. You know the slogan of the Young Men's organization, in fact, of all the auxiliary organizations of the Church, is that we stand for the non-use of tobacco, because we regard it as detrimental to the health and welfare of the people of God, and also to the people of the world if they would but recognize the fact. It is an evil wherever you find it. Especially so among the Latter-day Saints, because, we have the word of the Lord upon the subject.

How very kind and merciful the Lord is that at almost the beginning of the Church, he should give us to know as a people, what is good for us and good for our bodies, good to eat and good to drink. He mentions various articles. You are familiar with them. We verily know, that the things which the Lord has said are good for us are good. We have proved it in times past. Every man knows it, every woman knows it, and the children are going to know it as they get knowledge. Bread is the staff of life. Water is a pure beverage from heaven, you might say. It comes from the earth but it might just as well come down from heaven. It is so harmless and so fine for the human system. We should eat the things that are good for us in reason, sparingly, especially in the use of meat. We must not go to excess in the use of that article and if we eat it largely, to any extent, it should be in times of cold weather. Now the Lord has declared in positive language that no one needs to err, no one needs to go astray in this matter. He has said it in plainness and simplicity. He does not say bread and water are not good for the body, but he does say tobacco is not good for the body. It is not good even for sick cattle except to be used outwardly for bruises and so on, and I feel sure that if tobacco, or tobacco juice was administered regularly, to an animal, say, a cow or a horse, if it had been healthy before it would be terribly sick thereafter. We are admonished to refrain from the use of this article and other things that are hurtful to the body. We should put them aside and pass them by. In this connection, it would be well to remember that a great and glorious blessing goes with the observance of the Word of Wisdom. The Lord has told us clearly and strongly what would follow. "All saints," he says, "who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures. They shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." Yea, the Lord giveth a promise that the destroying angels shall pass them by as the children of Israel and not slay them.

But aside from this promise, it ought to be the good pleasure of the Latter-day Saints to honor this commandment because it is from the Lord. He has spoken and we ought to listen and give heed to his word. Tobacco is particularly hurtful to young people, to the boys, many of whom fall into the habit of smoking cigarettes. They know not what they are doing. It may result in irreparable damage to them all through their lives. Listen to what Thomas A. Edison, the great inventor, says upon this subject. He says: "The injurious agent in cigarettes comes principally from the burning paper wrapper. The substance thereby formed is called 'Acrobin.' It has a violent action on the nerve centers, producing degeneration of the cells of the brain which is quite rapid among boys. Unlike most narcotics, this degeneration is permanent and uncontrollable. I employ no person who smokes cigarettes."

If any of your boys are using cigarettes, you ought to take instant notice of it, and exert every power and every influence within your means to get them to overcome the habit.

Another word upon the subject. In the Unpopular Review, of January, 1914, Henry W. Farnham, Professor of Economics in Yale University, had an intensely and illuminating article on our tobacco bill, and which we have kindly been permitted to quote. Says Professor Farnham:

The importance of tobacco in our National budget is shown by the latest census figure, according to which it ranks eleventh among the industries of the country with respect to the value of the product. Our manufactured tobacco was worth at the factory in 1909, four hundred and sixty million, six hundred ninety-five thousand dollars. It thus outranked bread and other bakery products, women's clothing, copper, malt liquors, automobiles, petroleum and distilled liquors. It was but about one-third less important than the manufactures of cotton. A careful statistician, Professor William B. Bailey of Yale, published nearly two years ago some figures showing that the people of the United States spent at that time in a single year about one billion, one hundred million dollars on tobacco. As the receipts from the Internal Revenue Tax on tobacco have increased by about fourteen per cent in the last two years, it seems fair, to assume that the general consumption has increased by this amount. It seems, therefore, conservative to state that at the present time the people are spending at least one billion two hundred million dollars for the pleasure of smoking and chewing. The significance of these figures can best be appreciated if we compare them with other items in our national budget. To put the matter concretely "tobacco takers" spend in a single year twice the amount spent by the entire country on railroad travel, and about three times the amount which it spends on its common school system. They pay out annually about three times the entire cost of the Panama Canal, they destroy directly about three times as much property as was destroyed in the San Francisco earthquake. Their smokes and chews cost them just about twice what it costs to maintain the government of the United States, including the interest on the public debt. Our smokers could, in a year and a half, pay off the entire bonded debts of our states, cities and counties, as it was in 1902, and in an additional nine months the entire interest-bearing debt of the United States, if they were willing to exercise the self-denial which was exercised a few years ago by the Persian people.

These figures are impressive. I think I am safe in saying that vast sums are expended in our own state every year for tobacco and that thousands and tens of thousands of cigarettes are smoked by the young people in the State of Utah. It ought not to be. We must get together, we must be absolutely united, we must set our faces as flint against this evil, because it is breaking down the health and weakening the constitution of our young people. It will never do.

THE BONDAGE OF DEBT

Just a closing word upon the subject of indebtedness. Any man who has been in debt, any man or woman who is in debt now, surely knows the evil of indebtedness. It is bondage. It is worse than imprisonment. It is time that our people, at least, should give this important matter consideration. We do not know what is ahead. There may be evil times, we do not know. Money seems to be plentiful just now. How it comes and where it comes from I don't know, but I see a great deal of it wrapped up in the thousands and tens of thousands of automobiles that are plying throughout the country, in every city and in every country place. Surely, it is all right for a man to have an automobile for the use of himself and his family, and especially to take his family out occasionally and particularly if his family lives upon a farm. I think it is a grand thought that a farmer may take his hard-working wife and his family out for a little fresh air and drive them over the country, in the country places, and in the city too. It is all right if he can afford it. If he has the money to invest in this luxury it is all right. But I would not think it is all right to put a large sum of money into an automobile, if he does not have it, and if he must needs mortgage the automobile or possibly mortgage his home in order to get it. To me that looks like a great evil, but the thought that is in my mind is that we ought to retrench in our expenditures. I am safe in saying that this is an extravagant age in which we are living and much money is spent recklessly and wildly.

Keep this in mind. Let us fight these three gigantic evils.

The Lord bless you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Lola Leonard sang a sacred solo: "Sweet story of old."

ELDER REED SMOOT

I am very grateful for the privilege I had of attending the conference session this morning, and I desire to express my approval of all that was said. Every admonition I approved of, and it met a responsive answer in my heart. I enjoyed greatly that wonderful hymn that was sung so beautifully by Brother J. R. Boshard, and a member of the Provo choir, entitled "I know that my Redeemer Lives." I think that is my favorite song, and every time I hear it sung it builds me up in my faith and gives me confidence that there is a living God and that he has a watch-care, not only over his people, but over the whole world.

NEED OF REFORMATION IN THE HOME LIFE OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

I am going to read an extract of a letter from a governor of one of the great states of our country. I believe that never in the history of the world has it been so necessary that there be a reformation in the home life of the American people, and to a certain extent, in our own homes in Zion, as exists today. This excerpt is as follows, in answer to a letter written the governor upon a question that I thought was very vital to the American people:

The destiny, the greatness of America lies around the hearthstone. If thrift and industry are taught there and the example of self-sacrifice oft appears; if honor abide there, and high ideals; if there the building of fortune be subordinate to the building of character America will live in security, rejoicing in an abundant prosperity and good government at home, and in peace, respect and confidence abroad. If these virtues be absent there is no power that can supply these blessings. Look well, then, to the hearthstone. Therein all hope for America lies."

I am delighted to know that from the very beginning of the Church, immediately after its organization, the "Mormon" people became home-builders and home-owners, and in the early days of this Church, at least as far back as I can remember, the admonitions to the people were to secure a home and keep it unencumbered. That admonition is good today.

PEOPLE LIVING BEYOND THEIR MEANS

I have been surprised to see in a few of the business concerns the amount of indebtedness owing by our people and in many cases it seems to me in amounts that it will be impossible for them to repay without some unforeseen relief. I want to echo the same idea expressed by Brother Clawson and ask our people, as well as other people who are deeply in debt, to get out as soon as possible. The obligations, of our government were never so great, brought on by the wicked world war, but it is not only the government, it is the people generally throughout all parts of the country. The people generally have been living beyond their income. And as long as money was so easily obtained, many who never were in debt before, find themselves in that condition today no one can tell, but we know that there are thousands and tens of thousands of them, and we do know that from now on there must be a retrenchment in the mode of living by the people of the United States. Extravagances upon all hands, and sometimes as I look around in the large cities it seems to me that that old principle that made America so strong and powerful, that home-owning tendency, that hearthstone spoken of by the governor, is fast disappearing in many parts of our country. Instead of homes we see great buildings erected as apartment houses. From my front door in Washington I look upon the hill but a few rods away, and there is built what is said to be the largest apartment house in all the world. People are applying for space faster than it is possible to furnish.

PRAYER IN THE HOME

I hope and trust that the homes of the "Mormon" people will be homes in which prayer is always practiced, for there is power in prayer and as long as the father and the mother and the children of a home believe in prayer, and believe that God will answer the prayers, and offer those prayers with an honest and pure heart, there is not very much outside danger that will come to such homes. The five years that I was a counselor in the Presidency of the Utah stake there never was a case of dispute or trouble between the husband and wife that came under my observation, but what, upon inquiry, we learned that in that home prayer had ceased to be the rule. And I am one who believes that where the inmates of a home pray for strength, pray with faith, pray with their children and for their children, that there is not going to be an estrangement between the father and the mother, or the children and the parents. I hope and trust that where our people, through circumstances perhaps over which they have no control, are forced into apartment houses, that they will try to make the rooms they occupy in such a building a place where prayer shall be exercised.

In our meeting the other day some of the presidents of the missions reported some remarkable healings of the sick. As I listened to them I thought to myself, are there any more remarkable manifestations of the power of God recorded in Holy Writ than those that were reported to us at that meeting, the blind made to see,—the paralyzed made to walk! And I want to testify to you, my brethren and sisters, that I do know that there is that power in the Priesthood of the living God, that through faith and prayer and laying on of hands, the household of faith can be healed. I think we are making headway in the world. I think that the walls of prejudice against this people are crumbling day by day. I think that the character of the people is better understood as time passes on, and I haven't a doubt in my mind but what all the purposes of the Father will be fulfilled in his own due time. And it is with us, as members of his Church, to see that our homes are put in order and that we ourselves are willing to keep the commandments of God as was requested of us this morning by President Grant.

CONVERSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD

We have many missionaries in the field, some fifteen hundred, I think, and with all the expense attached to maintaining them in the missionary field, and with all of the baptisms that are performed by the missionaries, I want to say to the brethren and sisters here today that the number of such conversions in the world are not more than twenty-five per cent of the number of the children that are born of "Mormon" parentage. I may add that I was pleased with some of the reports that came to the Council of the Twelve in relation to the home missionary work in some of the stakes of Zion. I understand that the home missionaries in one stake of Zion have converted within the last year, or less, some thirty-eight persons, and I thought to myself, a soul saved in Zion, a baptism made at home, is just as precious in the sight of the Father as one that is made abroad. And if with our lives and through our energies we can convert the people who live among us, the people who see our every-day lives, the people who know what this work has accomplished in this part of God's vineyard, how blessed it would be, and I am quite sure it would be approved of the Father.

Now, brethren and sisters, I ask God's choicest blessings upon you, and I want to say with all the fervor of my soul that I know that the Father is at the head of this work, he is directing it, and I know that his servants are in full accord with the wish of the Presidency of the Church. May his blessings ever attend all of the people, and may they remember him in their tithes and in their offerings, for it is from him that all good comes, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEYIN TUNE WITH THE KEYNOTE.

My spirit is in perfect tune with the keynote struck for this conference. I believe in charity and forgiveness. I fully agree with the one who said: "He that judgeth a matter before he heareth it is not wise." And we do not hear a matter by hearing one side of it. It is wrong to pass judgment before proof of guilt. The Prophet Joseph Smith was murdered while awaiting trial on a trumped up charge of which he had not been proved guilty, nor could he have been. He had surrendered for trial, but his plotting murderers declared: "The law cannot reach him, but powder and ball shall." And they forthwith carried out their wicked threat. This, however, is not the theme that was weighing upon my mind.

TWO PHASES OF GOD'S WORK.

I have been thinking of two great phases of the Lord's Latter-day work, one of them appealing more strongly, perhaps, to the traveling ministry who are preaching the gospel in the world; the other to those who are laboring at home in the Stakes of Zion and particularly in the temples of God.

TEMPLES IN THIS DISPENSATION

Temples and temple work is a subject that lies very near and is very dear to the heart of every faithful, thoughtful Latter-day Saint. This Church since its organization, has built eight temples—the first one at Kirtland, Ohio, in the year 1836; the next one at Nauvoo, Illinois, in the early forties; and it projected others at Independence, Missouri, and at Far West and Adam-ondi-Ahman in that state. Then came the departure of the Saints into the wilderness. The first temple in Utah, the one at St. George, was dedicated in 1877, the year that President Brigham Young died. Next in order was the Logan Temple, completed in 1884; then the Manti Temple, in 1888. The great Salt Lake Temple, which occupied forty years in building and cost over three million dollars, was dedicated in April, 1893. Since that time, we have built a temple in the Hawaiian Islands, and another at Cardston, in the province of Alberta, Canada. And now the Church contemplates a temple at Mesa, Arizona, which will make the ninth, thus far, in this dispensation.

THE KIRTLAND TEMPLE

Among all these sacred structures there is one that stands out unique, with a character and history all its own. It is not the largest of our temples, nor the costliest; but things occurred within its walls of which there is no counterpart in the history of any other house of God. I refer to the temple at Kirtland, which it was my privilege to visit, first, in 1877, and subsequently in 1914. One peculiarity of that temple—which yet stands—is the absence of a baptismal font, the principle of baptism for the dead not having been revealed to the Church that early. But there is something connected with the Kirtland Temple of far greater consequence than a baptismal font, and without which there would have been no baptismal font in any of the temples since erected; and without which, moreover, the whole work of God in this dispensation would have come to a standstill.

JOSEPH AND OLIVER

You will understand me more clearly after I have read to you a selection from the book of Doctrine and Covenants—a portion of Section 110, the caption of which runs as follows: “Visions manifested to Joseph the Seer and Oliver Cowdery, in the Kirtland Temple, April 3rd, 1836.” This was just one week after that house had been dedicated. Joseph and Oliver were the first and second Elders of the Church. They had been associated together in the translating of the Book of Mormon. They were together when John the Baptist restored the Aaronic Priesthood, and when the Melchizedek Priesthood was brought back to earth by Peter, James and John. They were together in organizing the Church; and now, six years after that event, they are together in the first temple erected by the Latter-day Saints, receiving from God one of the most wonderful manifestations ever vouchsafed to mortals. It came in order that what had gone before in the opening of this gospel dispensation, might not be in vain. The glorious appearing of the Father and the Son; the visitations of the Angel Moroni; the discovery of the Nephite plates; the restoration of the Priesthood, and the organization of the Church—all these events were preliminary to what was about to come. Here is the record of visions seen by Joseph and Oliver on that occasion:

JEHOVAH APPEARS

The veil was taken from our minds, and the eyes of our understanding were opened.

We saw the Lord standing upon the breast-work of the pulpit, before us, and under his feet was a paved work of pure gold, in color like amber.

His eyes were as a flame of fire, the hair of his head was white like the pure snow, his countenance shone above the brightness of the sun, and his voice was as the sound of the rushing of great waters, even the voice of Jehovah, saying—

I am the first and the last, I am he who liveth, I am he who was slain, I am your advocate with the Father.

A wonderful revelation in itself, this proclamation from the mouth of Jehovah, the God of Israel, that he is no other than Jesus Christ, the Savior of mankind. He accepts the house—the Temple built to his name—and the record thus continues:

MOSES AND ELIJAH

After this vision closed, the heavens were again opened unto us, and Moses appeared before us, and committed unto us the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north. . . .

After this vision had closed, another great and glorious vision burst upon us, for Elijah the Prophet, who was taken to heaven without tasting death, stood before us and said—

Behold, the time has fully come, which was spoken of by the mouth of Malachi, testifying that he (Elijah) should be sent before the great and dreadful day of the Lord come,

To turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers, lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse.

Therefore the keys of this dispensation are committed into your hands, and by this ye may know that the great and dreadful day of the Lord is near, even at the doors.

THE GOSPEL TO THE NATIONS

Up to this time the activities of the Elders who were preaching the gospel had been confined to various states of the Union and to the Dominion of Canada; but now the Ensign, previously lifted, was farther advanced. The keys of the gathering having been restored, preparations were made for sending the gospel from the Land of Zion into foreign lands, calling in from their long dispersion the children of Israel, scattered for generations through the various nations of the world. But if the keys committed by Moses, who held them at the time of Israel's exodus from Egypt, had not been conferred upon the Prophet presiding over this dispensation, the work of God would have halted then and there. There would have been no gathering of Israel, if the keys for the gathering had not been restored.

FIRST FOREIGN MISSION

In the summer of 1837, a little over a year after these keys were given to Joseph and Oliver, the Prophet, harassed and tortured by conditions then prevailing at Kirtland, where everything seemed tottering to its fall—half the Quorum of the Twelve and many of the Seventies and Elders arraying themselves against the Lord's anointed—voiced the word of God to the effect that "something new must be done to save the Church." Yes, Satan saw what was coming; he knew the significance of the restoration of those sacred keys, and he did his utmost to destroy the Lord's work in its infancy. It was a period of apostasy; the things of the world were uppermost in the minds of the people, and many were neglecting their spiritual duties, and seeking to become rich at the sacrifice of principle. Such was the situation when, according to Heber C. Kimball, one of the Apostles, the Prophet, sitting beside him in the Kirtland Temple, Sunday, June 4, 1837, said: "Brother Heber, the Spirit of the Lord has whispered to me, 'Let my servant Heber go to England and proclaim my gospel and open the door of salvation to that nation.'" Heber C. Kimball and Orson Hyde, with Willard Richards, Joseph Fielding, Isaac Russell, John Goodson and John Snyder, crossed the Atlantic, landed at Liverpool penniless, proceeded to Preston in Lancashire, and there preached the first "Mormon" sermons ever heard on European soil. Their success was marvelous. Whole villages were swept into the Church by these unlettered but divinely empowered apostles of the new dispensation. In eight months they baptized two thousand souls, and Heber wrote back to Kirtland: "Glory to God, Joseph, the Lord is with us among the nations!"

EARLIEST IMMIGRANTS

Subsequently another apostolic mission, headed by Brigham Young and including a majority of the Twelve, crossed the ocean and carried the gospel to all parts of the British Isles. Five thousand converts were added to the Church; a new edition of the Book of Mormon was published; many thousands of tracts were distributed; the Millennial Star was founded; a permanent emigration agency established; and in the month of June, 1840, the first company of Latter-day Saints from a foreign land sailed from Liverpool to New York, bound for Nauvoo, Illinois, which had become the place of gathering. From that time on, Israel has been flocking from the nations, to meet the God of Israel when he comes, and to make the necessary preparation for his coming. All this by virtue of the keys restored by Moses, and conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in the Kirtland Temple.

JUDAH TO RETURN

About two months before that little company of forty-one Saints crossed the Atlantic on the ship Britannia, a notable conference was held at Nauvoo, and two of the Apostles, Orson Hyde and John E. Page, were called to go to Palestine and bless that land, that its barrenness might depart and the way be opened for the restoration of the Jews. For be it remembered that the gathering of Israel includes the assembling of "the dispersed of Judah"—their return to their ancient homeland. America is the Land of Zion, and here the New Jerusalem will stand. But Christ's kingdom will have two capitals, one in the Old World; one in the New; "for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

ORSON HYDE IN PALESTINE

John E. Page faltered and fell by the way; but Orson Hyde accomplished his mission, though beset and hindered by many hardships and difficulties. It took him a year and a half to reach the goal for which he had set out. Finally, on the 24th day of October, 1841, from the summit of the Mount of Olives, overlooking Jerusalem, he offered to Jehovah, the God of Israel, a most fervent and eloquent prayer in behalf of his covenant people. He blessed the sterile land by the power of the holy apostleship, that it might become fruitful once more, and that Judah might repossess his ancient heritage. Afterwards he predicted that the British nation would take an active part in the redemption of Palestine; a prophecy fulfilled at the close of the recent World War, when General Allenby, at the head of a British army, made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem.

LATER MISSIONS TO THE HOLY LAND

In the year 1872 a mission went from Salt Lake City to the Holy Land. President George A. Smith headed the party, which also included Lorenzo Snow, one of the Twelve Apostles, and his gifted sister, the poet, Eliza R. Snow. Upon reaching Palestine, President Smith duplicated the work done by Orson Hyde in 1841, dedicating the land for the return of the Jews and the rebuilding of Jerusalem. Other elders of the Church have since visited that once favored and yet to be glorified region. President Anthon H. Lund was there in 1898; and he likewise offered up an earnest prayer for the great consummation. All this because Moses restored the keys for the gathering of Israel in this dispensation.

THE KEYS OF ELIJAH

But what about the keys of Elijah? What is their significance? If you will read Sections 127 and 128 of the Doctrine and Covenants, and peruse pages 27 to 35 of "Joseph Smith's Teachings," you will learn what the founder of this Church had in mind relative to that important matter. In connection with the building of temples and the work done in them by the living for the dead, we have from his pen this glorious utterance: "It is necessary, in the ushering in of the dispensation of the fulness of times, . . . that a whole and complete and perfect union and welding together of dispensations and keys and powers and glories should take place and be revealed from the days of Adam even to the present time; and not only this, but those things which never have been revealed from the foundation of the world, but have been kept hid from the wise and prudent, shall be revealed unto babes and sucklings in this the dispensation of the fulness of times."

A GREATER GATHERING

In other words, there is to be another gathering, one still greater than the gathering of the dispersed house of Israel. It is the gathering or bringing together of the gospel dispensations, and the binding of all into one. This is called the dispensation of the fulness of times, and its peculiar distinguishing characteristic is, that it folds to its mighty bosom all the dispensations preceding it; the angels holding the keys of the past conferring them upon the Prophet who presides over this period or division of God's work, to the end that oneness and unity may be established as a condition precedent to the Savior's Millennial reign. Therefore came Moses and Elijah, John the Baptist, Peter, James and John and others, bringing and bestowing their keys, so that their work might be blended with the work done in this dispensation, which is destined to gather together all things that are Christ's, both in heaven and on earth. Especially was it necessary that Elijah should restore the keys of his calling and ministry—keys comprising the revelation of "the fulness of the Melchizedek Priesthood," with all its "ordinances, oracles, powers and endowments," the seals of which must be placed upon the House of Israel, that all may be made ready for Messiah's advent.

THE WELDING LINK

The Prophet says that there must be "a welding link between the fathers and the children"—the fathers in heaven yearning over their children on earth; and therefore was Elijah sent. His keys empower the living to do saving work for the dead and seal them up to come forth in the first resurrection; "to seal those who dwell on earth to those who dwell in heaven." "For we without them cannot be made perfect; neither can they without us be made perfect." "This is the power of Elijah and the keys of the kingdom of Jehovah." The welding link is baptism for the dead, with other vicarious work now going on in the temples that God's people have erected. You brethren and sisters who labor in these temples may cherish in your souls the sweet conviction that you are helping to bind together the gospel dispensations and assisting to advance the mighty purposes of God.

THE EVERLASTING GOSPEL

"Mormonism," as it is called, did not originate in the nineteenth century. It is not of any one time nor of any one place. It is the everlasting gospel, the same yesterday, today and forever. There never has been and never will be another gospel; but this one, framed in heaven, has been upon earth again and again, in a series of dispensations reaching like a mighty chain from the morning of creation down to the end of time. And all these dispensations must be linked and bound together before the God of Israel appears; for unless a condition of unity and power, resulting from faith and righteous works, exists at that time, the whole earth will be smitten with a curse. Not that the Lord wishes to curse, but rather to bless mankind. But the blessing that he desires to bestow at his coming would change into a consuming curse, if the necessary preparation were not made.

PERFECTION THE GOAL

The gospel is the plan of eternal progression, and perfection is its goal. Apart from our ancestors who figured in the former dispensations, neither we nor they can attain perfection. But by unity, which brings power, and by faith, which makes all things possible, the glorious end can be achieved. The sacred ordinances of God's House—baptisms, endowments, sealings, adoptions, etc.,—all point to a perfect state of righteous love and unity. Why, for instance, do we marry for eternity, and not merely for time? It is because we are children of eternity, building for eternity, and "the man is not without the woman nor the woman without the man, in the Lord." Together they represent completeness, perfection; separated, they symbolize incompleteness, imperfection; and nothing imperfect can enter into the Divine Presence. Let a man and a woman, single or married only for time, present themselves at the celestial gates, and it will be said to them, or of them, as it was said at the gates of Verdun: "They shall not pass." But they who are wedded for eternity, wedded according to God's law and by his sealing power and authority, shall pass by the angels and the gods and inherit a fulness of joy. The welding link must bind together husband and wife, parent and child, present and past, living and dead—"all things in Christ," to the end that there may be completeness, perfection, and that that condition of unity and love may prevail which is the required preparation for the coming of the Lord in his glory. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn, "High on the mountain top."

Benediction was offered by Elder Daniel G. Miller, President of the Yellowstone Stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until Saturday morning at 10 a. m.

SECOND DAY.

Conference convened in the tabernacle, Saturday morning, October 9, 1920, at 10 o'clock.

The congregation was called to order by President Heber J. Grant, who presided.

The choir and congregation sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

Opening prayer was offered by Elder Orville H. Budge, President of the Logan Stake of Zion.

The choir and congregation sang, "O ye mountains high."

ELDER GEO. F. RICHARDS

I am very happy to be able to say to you, my brethren and sisters, that my feelings are in perfect accord with those of my brethren as expressed in their remarks in the sessions of the conference yesterday. I hope that I may be guided in my remarks by the Spirit of the Lord so as to speak forth the word of the Lord in truth, that it may find a ready response in the hearts of the Latter-day Saints, and that perchance we may be pricked in our hearts and be resolved that we will, with the help of the Lord, come nearer doing his will in the future than we have done in the past, for our own good, happiness, and salvation and also for the blessing and happiness of others and the glorifying of the name of our Lord.

GOD'S PURPOSE IN CREATION

I call your attention, my brethren and sisters, to the words of the Lord to his servant Moses, spoken to him in the mount where the Lord talked with him face to face. The Lord said: "Behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." This then, I conclude, is the aim; all the other works of God are but a means to this end, to save and exalt his children with him in his kingdom. For this purpose the earth was created, the gospel plan was instituted, and as a part of that plan the Savior was chosen to be the Redeemer of the world. We read this in the holy scriptures: "For God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Whenever I have occasion to use this passage of scripture, in discourse, I feel that an explanation is necessary, or at any rate, is in good place, because of the fact that this scripture is used so largely by religionists in the world to justify themselves in the belief, that faith only, is necessary to salvation; that our Savior has done all, and that all that is necessary for us to do is to acknowledge him and his work, and we will be saved. This is a misunderstanding of the word of the Lord. An explanation is found in the following scripture: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." So that it is doing the works such as Christ did that is going to save us, rather than the mere intellectual assent or profession of faith in him and his ministry.

LOVE, SACRIFICE, AND SERVICE

There is another impressive passage of Scripture, also corroborative of this fact which reads: "Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered, and being made perfect he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." There is much other corroborative scripture.

Now returning to that expression that "God so loved the world that he gave his only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We see in this three great principles exemplified, viz.: love, sacrifice, and service. The love of God our Father for his children led him to give his first-born Son, in the spirit, his Only-Begotten in the flesh, to a life of sorrow and an ignominious death, that they might be redeemed and saved in his kingdom on conditions of obedience unto the laws and ordinances of the gospel. Then we find the Son also, because of the love that he bore for us, his brothers and sisters, giving himself voluntarily. He said: "I lay down my life for the sheep. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself," and he said again: "Greater love hath no man than this: that a man lay down his life for his friends." Here we find the love again, an example to the human family. Here we find again sacrifice, all that could be made, a willingness to do the will of his Father at whatever cost of sorrow and of suffering. Here we find a service rendered to the children of men necessary for their salvation; and the salvation of men should be the prize, the pearl of great price, to be desired by them above any and all other blessings.

LET US BE BOTH HEARERS AND DOERS OF THE WORD

We were told by President Grant yesterday, in concluding his remarks, that what he desired is, that the Latter-day Saints will keep the commandments of the Lord. I thought, when he made that remark, of our weaknesses as a people. We are prone in this day and dispensation, as others have been in previous dispensations—as evidenced by the nature of the counsel and instructions given by the prophets of old—to hear the word of the Lord and be not doers of it, or doers of it only in part. We go forth into the world bearing the message of the gospel, and we tell the people it is not sufficient to say: "Lord, Lord;" that that will not save them in the kingdom of heaven, but they must do the will of our Father which is heaven, and his will has been expressed in the life and teachings of our Savior and of the apostles and prophets which have gone before and which are recorded here in the Holy Bible and in the Book of Mormon. We tell them that an assent merely to these things is not all that is necessary. Some of us have entered the Church by baptism and confirmation to membership, and we have halted by the way. Many of us have stopped progress, we are hearers only, of the word of the Lord in regard to bearing false witness, in regard to honesty, in regard to our tithes, our offerings, and many other requirements which are made upon us. What we most need, it seems to me, my brethren and sisters, is to be impressed with the necessity of doing the things that we know we ought to do. We are well enough educated as a people. We know what we should do in order to obtain salvation; and because we know these things, if we do not do them, we will be under condemnation.

HOW WE MAY ASSIST THE LORD IN HIS PURPOSE

I would like, if I could, to impress my hearers on this occasion, with the necessity of assisting the Lord in the great work that he has undertaken, to save and exalt the souls of men and women. He needs our assistance. He has called upon us to so live before the world that they, seeing our good works, will be led to glorify our Father in heaven. That is one way, in which we can assist the Lord in the accomplishment of this particular purpose, by being obedient unto him, by making his mind and his will our mind and our will, even as Christ our Savior who was the great exemplar and prototype of mankind did, for he set the example and told us to follow him. We are required to walk in the light as he was in the light, with the promise that if we will do so, we shall have fellowship one with another, in him, and his blood will cleanse us from all sin; but there are other things that we are called upon to do. We are called to love one another and to sacrifice and to serve one another. The Savior on one occasion was asked by a certain lawyer, who thought to entrap him in his sayings: "Master, which is the great commandment?" The answer of the Savior was: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first great commandment and the second is like unto it: thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Even as our Father and as our Savior loved the children of men, we are required to love them also, even as we love ourselves. There would be no back-biting, there would be no evil-speaking, there would be no taking advantage of others, if we loved them as we love ourselves. There would be nothing left undone that we could do for the comfort of others, if we loved them as we love ourselves. If we loved the Lord with all our heart, we would give to him our lives and everything that we possess, if necessary, to assist him in this great work.

WHAT CONSTITUTES THE STRAIGHT AND NARROW WAY?

This gospel we have received is one of sacrifice, service and self-abnegation from beginning to end. That is what constitutes the straight and narrow way that leads to life eternal. Some of us are more faithful, some are less faithful than others in our sacrifices. My brethren and sisters, there will come a time of accounting, and we will be judged and rewarded according to the sacrifices which we make, and the services we render to God and to our fellowmen. Let me tell you here that when we undertake to glorify our Father in heaven by living a good life, we help others along the way. Religion, true religion of the Master, is so different from politics. When we aspire to an office as politicians, and become candidates, our only hope of success is in the defeat and disappointment of somebody else. In this great work, if I, through the help of the Lord, shall be successful in saving my own soul, it will be through works of righteousness, through a good example which will be helpful, and no person will be deprived of the blessings he is laboring for because of my success, but just the reverse, he will be helped along the way. Now in this work of sacrifice and of service, we need encouragement, and stimulation.

GET SOMEBODY ELSE

There is a little poem that I desire to recite to you because I feel that it will have this effect. And let me say here, that I believe in the poets. I believe there is much inspiration from the Lord outside of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in various ways, not the lest of which is found among the poets. This little poem is entitled "Get Somebody Else." The Lord is always to his servants calling, something more for us to do. Are we willing, or are we too much engrossed with the affairs of life? The little poem reads:

The Lord had a job for me
But I had so much to do;
I said, "you get somebody else,
Or wait till I get through."
I don't know how the Lord came out;
No doubt he got along,
But I felt kind o' sneakin' like,
I knew I'd done God wrong.

One day I needed the Lord
Needed him right away,
But he never answered me at all,
And I could hear him say,
Down in my accusing heart:
"Child, I've got too much to do.
You get somebody else,
Or wait till I get through."

Now, when the Lord has a job for me,
I never try to shirk,
I drop what I have in hand
And do the Lord's good work.
And my affairs can run along.
Or wait till I get through.
Nobody else can do the work
God has marked out for you.

I feel that I have occupied all the time that I should, and will close my remarks here, with my testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, that I know that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, that it has in it the power of God unto happiness and salvation, in this life, and in the life to come; and I exhort you, with all the earnestness of my soul, to live up to the light which you have received in the gospel, and promise you, as a reward, eternal life in the kingdom of our God. This I do in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A solo, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace", was sung by Royal W. Daynes.

ELDER DAVID O. McKAY

It is an inspiration always to meet with the Latter-day Saints in conference. I rejoice with you in having this opportunity of listening to the words of love and inspiration with which this conference has been favored. I am overwhelmed, as I stand here and face this large interested audience, but I am free to say to you that if I had my choice I would not choose to speak to you, men of the Priesthood, and faithful women in the Church. I should prefer to give whatever message I have in my heart to another audience, this morning, which is scattered all up and down these counties and towns and valleys of the western states. I should like to speak to your boys and to your girls, to their playmates wherever they may be. However, since we have but very few of them here, I shall have to speak to them through you, because after all this conference, inspiring as it may be, is not an end in itself. The purpose of it shall not have been attained until the messages through you reach your sons and your daughters, and your neighbors' sons and daughters. Your happiness, your peace, depends upon your ability to get the message into their hearts.

TO BE CARNALLY-MINDED IS DEATH—TO BE SPIRITUALLY-MINDED IS LIFE AND PEACE

If they were here this morning I would read the following text: "To be carnally-minded is death, but to be spiritually-minded is life and peace." Glorious words these—life, peace. The whole purpose and end of existence is life, and to obtain in that life, peace. Eternal life—we have heard from Elder Richards, that the work and glory of God are to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man—and our purpose wherever we may be, is to live.

THE HAPPY LIFE COMES FROM OBEDIENCE TO LAW

I believe that we can meet our boys on that plane and appeal to them, and show them that the best life, the happiest life is the life that is prompted by the ideals of true religion. Many of them will turn aside when you say you are going to preach to them. I do not always blame them. I believe that too many of us stand on the side, as it were, and call to them to come back without ever entering into their lives.

I was reminded this morning of an old story that appeared in one of our early school books. Many of you present will remember it, so I need not repeat it to you. You remember the author pictures some people sailing down the river towards the Niagara Falls, and the man on the shore cries:

"Young men, ahoy, the rapids are below you!"

But they went on laughing and carousing. Later he cried:

"Young men, ahoy, the rapids are below you!"

But they heeded not his warning call until they suddenly realized that they were in the midst of the rapids, and with all the power at their command they failed to turn their boat upstream, so, he says, shrieking and cursing over they go!

Well, it is a very impressive picture. The lesson left an indelible impression upon me, but today it seems incomplete. It is one thing to stand on the shore and cry: Young men, ahoy, there is danger ahead; and it is another thing to row into the stream, and, if possible, get into the boat with the young men and by companionship, and by persuasion, by legitimate force, when necessary, turn the boat from the rapids. Too many of us stand on the shore and cry: Young men, ahoy! Let us get into their lives, let us touch their personality by our personality, and let them feel that there is something real in this religion; that it is the greatest thing in life, that nothing else can make them live as the true religious life. When they feel this they love it, and until they do feel it, until they do sense an immediate blessing, following activity, we are going to find difficulty in calling them into that realm where there is peace. Young people say: "We want to live. That is just what we are going to do. Let us have life, and have a good time." But their view is often distorted. They are seeking to live in the physical pleasures. They are seeking to live in the realm that brings only immediate sensation, and afterwards no peace. They fail to distinguish between the carnal pleasures and those which are intellectual and spiritual. I am not going to ask them not to have a good time. I think they should have a good time. Young men and young women are entitled to it; all men and all women are entitled to it. We are all here to enjoy life in its fullest and most complete sense; but the message of the gospel of Jesus Christ is this: that to live one must live in obedience to law, physical law, intellectual law, spiritual law. Transgression of law always brings unhappiness, it always brings death when carried to the ultimate end.

HE WHO PLAYS THE CROOKED GAME LOSES

I was deeply impressed, and I hope the young men of the United States were impressed, with the remark made by one who was nationally disgraced recently when he said, it seems to me, in a rather repentant spirit: "I have played a crooked game, and I have lost." Boys, that is the story of every one who plays the crooked game. The one who plays the game straight, who deep down in his soul does the right thing, because it is right, is the man who has that peace and contentment that we all so much long for.

HE LIVES MOST WHO LISTENS TO THE URGENCE FOR A HIGHER, BETTER LIFE

Let us seek to live intellectually. I welcome with all my heart the hundreds, and the thousands of boys and girls who are participating in the realm of education in the auxiliary associations, and in the Church schools. What are they learning to do but to live!—to live completely and abundantly; and in the living to serve—serve their fellow men. He lives most who sees or hears “Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones, and good in everything.” He lives most who sees beyond these trees, these stones, these running brooks and sees God and goodness in it all, who sees an overruling providence in all this world and recognizes God’s children as brothers and sisters, in every one of whom there is something good, ever striving, to lift the man up out of the sensual world into the realm of true religion. I believe that there is in every human soul a something good calling for something better, very much as that something of life mentioned by Lowell when he said, referring to spring, “Every clod feels a stir of might, an instinct within it that reaches and towers and groping blindly about it for light, climbs to a soul in leaf and flower.” So there is in the human soul that divine element which is calling, striving, urging the person up to a higher, to a better life. Boys and girls should do right because it is right. The day is past when you can threaten them with punishment hereafter. The world has passed by the fears of a fire and eternal torment. They can be appealed to, however, upon the sound principles of true religious living. It is the best because it works best. It is the best because it makes us happy and better here and now. We are better citizens, we are better friends, we are better football players, we are better students, we are better sons, we are better daughters, we are better everything, and the world should know it. When we take the opposite view, as many of our boys unfortunately are doing, and seek life in immediate pleasures, transitory pleasures, indeed, we find only disappointment and eventually death, for to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. “Live while you live, the Epicure would say, and seize the pleasure of the present day.” That is one view. “Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries, and give to God each moment as it flies;” the other: “Lord, in my view, let both united be. I live in pleasure when I live to thee.”

PHYSICAL PLEASURES TO BE AVOIDED

There is no peace in yielding to the temptation to transgress the laws of virtue and chastity. If there is one thing in all this world for which we should be thankful as Latter-day Saints, it is that there is a sentiment, founded upon the solid basis of revelation from God, that chastity among the young is as sacred as life itself. One of the most disintegrating influences today is that feeling that is creeping in amongst some of our young boys and young girls that they can violate the law of chastity with impunity. The law of the land may not reach them—they may avoid that. Their bishops may not detect their transgression. But God can. And deep down in their own souls they know that they have lost part of their life. They have lived as the Epicure would live, for the moment, and they have no peace. Their souls are turbulent. Why? Because they have stained the character of another, they have stained their own souls eternally. No one can transgress the laws of chastity and find peace. That is the message to our boys, to our girls. No matter what the opportunity, no matter what the temptation, let the young man of Israel know that to find happiness he must hold sacred his true manhood, let him know that he is going to live and live completely by refusing to yield to that temptation. Then he is happy; he is happy. There is peace instead of turbulency in his soul.

Next to that disintegrating evil, is the evil mentioned by President Clawson, tobacco—young men who are just learning to indulge in this physical pleasure, this sensual appetite, have been told by you parents, not to smoke. Some of the young men are not doing it in your presence. Some of your boys you think have not become addicted to that habit. In trying to correct this evil, have you stood aside and cried, Young man, ahoy, there is danger down there? Or have you tried to touch his soul? Have you tried to convert him to the fact that to indulge in the pernicious habit is to take part of his life, to weaken his physical being? Have you studied how to convince him of it? If you haven't you are standing on the shore simply crying to him instead of plunging in and trying to guide him around.

The gospel of Jessu Christ when lived in its fulness, as we were admonished yesterday by the President in the keynote of this conference, gives peace, life, physical life, intellectual life, spiritual life.

The Word of Wisdom is a law that applies directly to the physical world, the physical salvation and peace of man. Too many of our boys are unconverted to it. We haven't touched them by our appeals. We haven't given them facts, perhaps. They think we are preaching, simply crying to them to come back. I would that every young man knew this: that every person who indulges in the use of tobacco simply hampers his physical well-being to the extent that he uses that narcotic. Let us appeal to them. Let us unite as a body in the campaign that is now abroad in our land to eliminate the use of that weed, from our communities. The time has come when the Latter-day Saints should stand by their principles, not on the bank crying, but in the midst of the young, out with them, in their quarters, out with them to the picture shows, go out with them, mingle with them. It is all right to talk about the sacredness and the influence of our homes, and there is no one that will stand more solidly behind the importance of having the right influence in the home than I, but the fact remains that our boys are going out at night, night after night; and you and I are out of our homes, during the day, so we are not associating with them very often in their homes, and it behooves us to get out into the pleasures more than we have, to go to their shows with them, aye and go to their parties and become acquainted and touch their lives. Then we may know, whether or not they are taking a cigarette once in a while. We can detect their breath, perhaps. We can see the companions with whom they are associated, and we can judge our boys and our girls greatly by the companions they keep, as well as by their actions in the home. To boys I would say, that if they want to live physically, if they want to be men strong in body, vigorous in mind, if they want to be good sports, enter the basket ball game, enter the football game, enter the contest in running and jumping, if they want to be good scouts, if they want to be good citizens, in business, anywhere, avoid tobacco and live strictly the religious life. I am not afraid to call it the religious life to them. It is not a thing that will make them gloomy and sad. Live the gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the science of life revealed from on high. Make them feel it as you feel it and I am sure we are going to save them, and by that I mean we are going to make them live happier and better. If we need any test, anything to help us on that, to appeal to them, we can find plenty of material to help us. I would like the boys to understand that the revelation given by the prophet Joseph is borne testimony to, today, by thousands and thousands of men and women. Here is one testimony, which I would like to read. It comes from a man who spent many years in the study of opium, in curing drunkenness, and who is now striving to cure the habit of tobacco. He has spent many years in the Orient and he has seen the effect of opium upon the eastern people.

A COMPARISON

He compares the effect of the cigarette with that of opium. Mr. Charles B. Towne in Habits that Handicap says:

I have spent a good deal of time in the Orient in the interest of those who are trying to subdue the opium evil, and I may add that there is in China today a flourishing concern which has grown rich out of the sale of cigarettes. With the extremely cheap Chinese labor the concern was able to sell twenty cigarettes for a cent of our money. Up to the beginning of this enterprise, about 1800, the Chinese had never used tobacco, except in pipes and in very minute quantities and in rolling their own crude cigarettes. The concern was sending salesmen and demonstrators through the country to show the people how to smoke cigarettes. Now it is estimated that one-half of the cigarette consumption of the world is in China. In trying to lessen the opium evil, in which they have to a very considerable extent succeeded, the Chinese are merely substituting the cigarette evil. It is well known to the confirmed opium smoker that he needs less opium if he smokes cigarettes. The Chinese are spending today twice as much money for tobacco as for opium. If any one thinks that China is the gainer by substituting one drug habit for the other I beg leave to differ. The opium smoker smokes in private with other smokers, and is thus not offensive to other people. He is not injuring non-smokers, or arousing the curiosity of boys, or polluting the atmosphere, or creating a craving in others. In the West the opium habit is generally condemned, because the west is able to look with a new and unbiased mind on a drug habit that is not its own. I consider that cigarette smoking is the greatest vice devastating humanity today, because it is doing more than any other vice to deteriorate the race.

HOW LIFE AND PEACE COME

To be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace—peace that comes by obedience to principle, peace that comes by overcoming habits, evil habits, peace that comes by self-mastery over appetite and over passion, the peace of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

A man must earn his hour of peace,
Must pay for it, with hours of strife and care,
Must win by toil the evening's sweet release,
The rest that may be portioned for his share.
The idler never knows it, never can.
Peace is the glory of the happy man,
And man must win contentment for his soul,
Must battle for it bravely day by day.
The peace he seeks is not a nearby goal.
To claim it he must tread a rugged way.
The shirker never knows a tranquil peace,
Peace but rewards the man who does his best.

God help us as men of the Priesthood, as fathers and as mothers, to reach our boys and our girls, and impress upon them this great lesson, this divine truth that to be carnally minded is to be miserable, unhappy, perhaps not for the time being, but to lose part of our very life. To be spiritually minded, which means to obey the principles of the gospel in all that it means, is to have life, life eternal and peace. I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTHONY W. IVINS

Now, it came to pass that the people of Nephi, under the reign of the second king, began to grow hard in their hearts, and indulge themselves somewhat in wicked practices;

Yea, and they also began to search much gold and silver, and began to be lifted up somewhat in pride;

Wherefore I, Jacob, gave unto them these words as I taught them in the temple, having firstly obtained mine errand from the Lord.

For I, Jacob, and my brother Joseph, had been consecrated priests, and teachers of this people, by the hand of Nephi.

And we did magnify our office unto the Lord, taking upon us the responsibility, answering the sins of the people upon our own heads, if we did not teach them the word of God with all diligence; wherefore, by laboring with our mights, their blood might not come upon our garments, otherwise, their blood would come upon our garments, and we would not be found spotless at the last day.

THE TEACHER MUST EXEMPLIFY IN DAILY LIFE THE DOCTRINES TAUGHT

When I came into the conference yesterday, my brethren and sisters, I had no thought regarding what I might say, if called upon to address you, as I expected, because of past precedent, that I would be; but since the beginning of the exercises these words of Jacob, the brother of Nephi, called and ordained under his hand to be a priest and teacher to the Nephite people, were brought to my mind, because of the character of the services. I read these words many years ago, when I was only a boy, and was profoundly impressed by them, for I reasoned that as the responsibility of teaching the word of the Lord rests upon him who has been appointed to that particular calling in the Church, it devolves upon every member of the Church to give heed to the words so taught, because they come as from the Lord himself. They did to me, and I thought, this responsibility rests not alone upon the presiding authorities of the Church, but every member of it; for there has never been a time, I suppose, in the history of the world, when the Priesthood has been so universally bestowed upon the members of the Church as it has been in this dispensation. So I reasoned that while the responsibility is not, perhaps, upon me, to the same extent, to stand as a teacher of the word of the Lord, having taken upon me the name of Christ, and having identified myself with his Church, and entered into covenant with him that I would, with his assistance, keep his commandments, I must in my daily life exemplify the doctrines which he taught.

So, my brethren and sisters, in addressing you this morning I deeply feel this responsibility, and I have always felt it when I have stood up to expound the scripture or exhort my brethren and sisters in the Church.

FOUNDATION PRINCIPLES OF THE CHURCH

The foundation upon which the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints rests is faith in God the eternal Father, recognition of his power, recognition of his relationship to us as the Father of the spirits of all men, recognition of the control which he has over the universe and all of the creations of his hands. We must have faith in the Redeemer of the World, believe that he was verily the Son of God, our elder brother; that he came to earth in order that God might be manifest in the flesh, that men and women might see the Lord as he was, might hear him as he would have spoken had he been in person upon the earth, might see his life, and know by his life what the life of the Father would have been had he been upon earth; might hear his voice and listen to his admonition, which was the voice of God, the Eternal Father, to the inhabitants of the earth. That is the foundation upon which the Church rests. We must believe in the Father and in the Son, and recognize the fact that the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who accept the Father and the Son, is the power and Spirit of God by which men are led in the way of everlasting life, by which they are given power over evil, by which they may learn to do well.

THE SAINTS MUST ASSUME RESPONSIBILITY OF CARRYING THESE INTO EFFECT

Once having assumed these responsibilities, then comes the more difficult task—clothed upon as we are with mortality—of carrying them into effect in our daily lives. It is a very great responsibility, my brethren and sisters. Never before, in the history of the world, has there been a greater necessity for the exemplification of the doctrines of the Redeemer in the lives of the members of the Church than at the present time, because the world needs those influences. Without them I see very little hope for the world. And what are they? What are those simple things which the Lord has commanded us to observe, having once become members of the Church?

THE REDEEMER'S CODE OF LAWS

Seeing the multitude, Jesus went up into a mountain, and when he was seated his disciples came unto him—and he preached the greatest sermon that was ever preached, the greatest sermon that ever will be preached; for human tongue cannot express the same godlike sentiments with the same spirit, and carry the same influence with it, that characterize the words of the Redeemer of the world. So I read from them:

And he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying,
 Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.
 Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted.
 Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.
 Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled.
 Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy.
 Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.
 Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God.
 Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

A very simple code of law, given to his disciples by the Redeemer. So, reasoning as my mind prompts me to reason, I take it for granted that except we do in humility the things which the Lord gives us to do from day to day, we are not in harmony with these words. I take it for granted that except we are merciful, we do not receive mercy, and are not in harmony with the words of Christ which I have read. I take it for granted that except we are pure in heart, we are not pleasing our Father in heaven; that if we are not peacemakers, living at peace with each other and with the world, we are not in harmony with this command which he gave us.

Further he continues:

Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth;
 But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.
 And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.
 And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.
 Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away.

Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy;

But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN FORGIVENESS OF SIN AND JUSTIFICATION OF WRONG DOING

Not so easy, this latter admonition, my brethren and sisters, which carries with it this doctrine of humility, this doctrine of forgiveness, this doctrine of long-suffering and kindness toward those who may appear to be your enemies, which has been dwelt on during this conference, and yet it is an admonition of the Lord.

Now what does it really mean—this distinction I would like to draw? if the Lord will make it possible for me to do so, as I understand this latter doctrine. If a man sues you at the law and you forgive him, if when he smites you upon the right cheek you turn the other, if when he compels you to go one mile with him you go with him twain, you are justified; but the fact that you extend forgiveness and mercy to him, does not in any degree justify the man who took you without cause to the law, or who smote you upon the cheek, or who took your coat and to whom you gave your cloak also. There is a most pronounced and direct distinction between forgiveness of sin and justification in wrong doing. The Lord has told us that he cannot look upon sin with any degree of allowance. He has made clear to us, beyond the question of a doubt, that men will be held accountable before him for the deeds done in the body. While he has taught us the doctrine of humility, the doctrine of forgiveness, he has always made it clear that mercy cannot rob justice one whit, but that the ends of justice must be satisfied as well as the ends of mercy.

THE EXAMPLE OF CORIAONTON

When his father admonished him of his wrong doing, Corianton could not understand this doctrine. To him the Lord appeared to be not a God of mercy and love; but just the contrary, because he condemned his wickedness, the wrong which he had done; and then his father, inspired by the Spirit of the Lord, explained to him that the mercy of God is extended to the penitent transgressor, and to him who turns away from sin, to him who repents from it. By this act he pays the penalty, if he is sincere and has made amends for the wrong which he has done; and is held guiltless before the Lord. But justification of sin must never be confused with mercy and forgiveness which comes to the penitent sinner. It was not because the prodigal son had left his father's home, not because he had dissipated his heritage, not because he had lived a life of riotous living and immorality until he had been reduced to a condition of poverty, that the arms of his father were held out to him in forgiveness, but because he returned, humble in his spirit; he came back and said, "Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. Just let me be thy servant, let me go out in the field and work with those who labor for you, that is all that I am worthy of." It was that spirit of repentance which brought the gladness which was shown to his father's heart when he came back, because the lost had been found, the dead lived again. And this, my brethren and sisters, is the very foundation of the doctrine of the gospel taught by Jesus Christ. I have seen this doctrine so perverted, so erroneously interpreted, that it has become the most obnoxious of all the doctrines which anti-Christ teaches in the world today, the doctrine that the mercy of Christ, the mercy of God as it was manifest through Christ, redeems men from sin, regardless of their acts; that just to ask forgiveness and it is granted, and you may go on again in your transgression. It grew to such a degree that sin was anticipated and men obtained indulgences—the world knows it perfectly well—for the commission of sin, on the theory that the Lord would forgive it. It is wrong; it is a pernicious doctrine.

AN ILLUSTRATION FROM THE SPEAKER'S LIFE

I had an example of this come into my personal life, one which I never can forget, because the crisis was right there with me as to whether I should do my duty as a man, as an officer of the law, or whether I should yield to the impulse of my nature to ignore the obligation which I had assumed, in behalf of a friend, and he was a very dear friend too, but he was addicted to the use of liquor and when under its influence he was a lawless man. I had been appointed a peace officer. I had taken oath that I would administer the law as it existed. Upon one occasion this friend of mine, in the night time, in his crazy drunkenness, committed offenses which made it necessary for me to take him, and with some severity, too, and drag him, assisted by another man, to prison, throw him into an iron cell and lock the door. After I had done it my heart went out in sympathy to him. I knew it was not the man; I knew it was his inflamed brain, and that liquor was responsible for it. I thought of his mother, who was a widow. I could not endure the thought that he should remain there during the night as an ordinary criminal should have done, and as he should have done had he had his deserts, so I plead for him and obtained permission to release him. I went back to the jail, unlocked the door, and took him to his home. He never forgave me for that act. I don't suppose he ever has until today. He argued that if I had been his friend I never would have taken him there. He argued that if I had been his friend I would have condoned his lawlessness. I could not do it. Had I done so I would have violated the oath of office that I had taken, and, worse than that, would have violated my conscience; for I felt in my conscience that the law must be magnified. He was a transgressor of it. He is an influential man today. I suppose he is, because he is possessed of wealth, and is a banker in this state. I do not think, to this day, that he ever forgave me; but I forgave him—I forgave him the wrong he had done; I forgave him the violation of the law of which he had been guilty. There was nothing but sympathy in my heart for him, but I knew that in justice and in righteousness he must pay the penalty, and he did it, the following day in the court.

FORGIVENESS COMES THROUGH REPENTANCE

So, my brethren and sisters, this is the thought that I desire to leave with you: Do not, as the greatest church in the world has done, ever confuse this doctrine of God's mercy and forgiveness which comes to the penitent sinner, with the thought of unconditional forgiveness. It must come through repentance. We must abstain from sin. We must live humble, simple lives, the lives of Latter-day Saints.

THE WORD OF GOD ON THE SUBJECT FROM THE BOOK OF MORMON

I shall conclude my remarks with these words, because they are said better than I can say them. Thank the Lord for the scriptures. Thank the Lord for inspired men, for prophets in olden times, and for prophets in the day in which we live. I believe in God's word. I have endeavored to live by it. I cannot bring my conscience to believe that I am justified in deviating from it, whatever may be the opinions of men:

And now I, Mormon, speak unto you, my beloved brethren; and it is by the grace of God, the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, and his holy will, because of the gift of his calling unto me, that I am permitted to speak unto you at this time.

Wherefore I would speak unto you that are of the Church, that are the peaceable followers of Christ, and that have obtained a sufficient hope, by which ye can enter into the rest of the Lord, from this time henceforth, until ye shall rest with him in heaven.

And now, my brethren, I judge these things of you because of your peaceable walk with the children of men;

For I remember the word of God, which saith by their works ye shall know them; for if their works be good, then they are good also.

* * * * *

Wherefore, all things which are good, cometh of God; and that which is evil, cometh of the devil; for the devil is an enemy unto God, and fighteth against him continually, and inviteth and enticeth to sin, and to do that which is evil continually.

But behold, that which is of God inviteth and enticeth to do good continually; wherefore everything which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God, and to serve him, is inspired of God.

Wherefore take heed, my beloved brethren, that ye do not judge that which is evil to be of God, or that which is good and of God, to be of the devil.

For behold, my brethren, it is given unto you to judge; that ye may know good from evil.

If there is a man or woman in the Church of Christ who has not this gift, it is because they are not magnifying their calling, for every person who is confirmed into the Church has sealed upon him the gift of the Holy Ghost, for the express purpose that he may be able to determine for himself that which is right and that which is wrong, which is good and which is bad.

For behold, my brethren, it is given unto you to judge, that ye may know good from evil; and the way to judge is as plain, that ye may know with a perfect knowledge, as the daylight is from the dark night.

For behold, the Spirit of God is given to every man, that they may know good from evil; wherefore I shew unto you the way to judge; for everything which inviteth to do good, and to persuade to believe in Christ, is sent forth by the power and gift of Christ; wherefore ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of God.

But whatsoever thing persuadeth men to do evil, and believe not in Christ, and deny him, and serve not God, then ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of the devil, for after this manner doth the devil work, for he persuadeth no man to do good, no not one; neither doth his angels; neither do they who subject themselves unto him.

* * * * *

And now, my beloved brethren, if this be the case, that these things are true which I have spoken unto you, and God will shew unto you with power and great glory at the last day that they are true; and if they are true, has the day of miracles ceased?

Or have angels ceased to appear unto the children of men?—or has he withheld the power of the Holy Ghost from them? or will he, so long as time shall last, or the earth shall stand, or there shall be one man upon the face thereof to be saved?

Behold I say unto you, Nay; for it is by faith that miracles are wrought; and it is by faith that angels appear and minister unto men; wherefore if these things have ceased, woe be unto the children of men, for it is because of unbelief, and all is vain.

* * * * *

Woe be unto him that shall pervert the ways of the Lord after this manner, for they shall perish, except they repent. Behold, I speak with boldness, having authority from God; and I fear not what man can do, for perfect love casteth out all fear;

And I am filled with charity, which is everlasting love.

Wherefore, if a man have faith, he must needs have hope; for without faith there cannot be any hope.

And again I say unto you, that he cannot have faith and hope, save he shall be meek and lowly of heart;

If so, his faith and hope is vain, for none is acceptable before God, save the meek and lowly in heart, and if a man be meek and lowly in heart, and confesses by the power of the Holy Ghost, that Jesus is the Christ, he must needs have charity; for if he have not charity he is nothing; wherefore he must needs have charity.

And charity suffereth long, and is kind, and envieth not, and is not puffed up, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, and rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things hopeth all things, endureth all things.

An exemplification of this doctrine of charity, corresponds with that which was given to us by the President of the Church, going beyond the giving of alms, into every walk of life and every act of ours.

Wherefore, my beloved brethren, if ye have not charity, ye are nothing, for charity never faileth. Wherefore, cleave unto charity, which is the greatest of all, for all things must fail;

But charity is the pure love of Christ, and it endureth forever; and whoso is found possessed of it at the last day, it shall be well with them.

Wherefore, my beloved brethren,—and my beloved sisters, I will add—

Pray unto the Father with all the energy of heart, that ye may be filled with this love, which he hath bestowed upon all who are true followers of his Son Jesus Christ, that ye may become the sons of God, that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is, that we may have this hope, that we may be purified, even as he is pure. Amen.

A number of notices pertaining to special meetings were given and the choir and congregation sang, "Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder William H. Smart, President of the Roosevelt Stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The conference was called to order at 2 o'clock by President Heber J. Grant, who presided.

Choir and congregation sang, "Redeemer of Israel."

Prayer was offered by Elder Orvil L. Thompson, President of the Millard Stake of Zion.

Choir and congregation sang, "Come let us anew, our journey persue."

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

"If ye love me, keep my commandments."

These words were addressed by the Master to his disciples but a few hours before his death, as he had assembled with them to eat the passover, and give them the final instruction before he should suffer for the sins of the world. On that same occasion, and shortly before these remarks were made, he referred to the same subject, when he said:

Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me; and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go ye can not come; so now I say to you. A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

I believe that I can do no better than to read other instructions that were given by our Lord and by his disciples, in regard to the same subject, because they have said it so much better than I could say it, and I firmly and faithfully believe all that is written. In this same discourse the Lord continued saying:

He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.

Judas said unto him, (not Iscariot) Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?

Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.

He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me.

WE ARE HERE FOR THE TRUTH WHICH MAKES US FREE.

I look over this congregation and I see before me men and women who have been gathered from all parts of the earth, or whose parents before them have been gathered out, by the preaching of the gospel. We have come to these valeys of the mountains, and our fathers before us, that we might be established in the truth which makes men free. Because here an ensign has been raised to the nations and the declaration has gone forth that in Zion may be found the word of the Lord, and so we came with the hope and desire of keeping his commandments, making covenants, taking upon ourselves obligations that would bring us eternal life. It would be a shame, after we have been gathered out in this manner, according to the predictions of the prophets of old, if now, because of prosperity, or for any other cause, we should let the adversary find a place in our hearts to destroy the truth and the love we should have, one for another; for we are indeed the disciples of the Lord. If we love him we will keep his commandments. No question about that. And should there be in Zion any who offend or who fail to keep the commandments of the Lord, then it is evidence sufficient that they do not love him. I cannot have hatred in my heart for my fellow men, whether they be in the Church or out of it, if I abide in the commandment of the Lord. I must obey them, and I show by my works that I love the Lord my God with all my heart, with all my might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ I serve him and love my neighbor as myself. This is the word of the Lord as it has been revealed in these modern times for the guidance of Israel. Therefore, I should have in my heart a feeling of love for my fellowmen, and especially for those who have made covenant with the Lord to observe his laws and walk before him in righteousness. What right have I to complain, or find fault, or endeavor to destroy the usefulness of my brother? It matters not what the occasion may be, why should I engender feelings in my heart of enmity for one that I am called upon and commanded by the Lord to treat as a brother? We are not merely friends; we are brothers and sisters, the children of God, who have come out, as I have said, from the world to enter into covenants, to observe his laws and to abide by all things which are given us by inspiration. We are commanded to love one another. "A new commandment," the Lord has said, and yet like many other commandments it is as old as eternity. There never was a time when that commandment did not exist and was not essential to salvation, and yet it is always new. It never grows old, because it is true.

THE NEW AND EVERLASTING COVENANT

I am reminded of an expression that occurs in one of the early revelations (section 22) shortly after the organization of the Church, when the Lord said that he had given unto the Church "a new and everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning." Those words are very significant. It was a new and everlasting covenant, and yet it had always existed, for it was from the beginning, and so this new commandment that we should love one another has always been. The truth does not grow old. Some people, you know, are extremely progressive. They want a change in this and a change in that, and a change in the other thing, but the principles of the gospel never change. The principle of love is the same today that it was yesterday and will endure the same tomorrow. If I am not in harmony with that principle, which is a principle of eternal truth, then I am under condemnation before the Lord and have no fellowship with him.

FURTHER QUOTATIONS AND ILLUSTRATIONS ON THE POWER OF LOVE

There are some other expressions of this nature that I desire to read, as I say, because they are stated so much better than I would be able to express them. John, known as the revelator, and the beloved disciple of the Lord, has borne witness likewise to this commandment. There is no wonder that the Lord loved him. He is spoken of, you know, in the scriptures, as the disciple whom the Lord loved. Why did the Master love him? Because he loved the Master; because he loved his fellowmen. Now I do not mean to say that the other disciples did not love the Lord, and that they had anything in their hearts but love for one another, but John stands out among them in this regard as one who had this gift in larger measure, perhaps, than did some of his fellows. Let me read to you one or two things that he has written. In his First Epistle, 3rd chapter and 14th verse, I read this:

We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death.

I can not afford, therefore, to have enmity in my heart, to speak disparagingly of one of my brethren or of one of my sisters, because that is death to me. Now the next verse says:

Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

I do not know that I would dare say a thing like that of myself, and yet it is true. That is to say, a man who has hatred in his heart for one of his brethren, not only for his own flesh and blood, but also for a brother in the covenant of the gospel, has the same spirit which exists in the heart of one who has murder in his heart. It is a murderous spirit and there is no eternal life for such a man.

"Beloved, if God so loved us," John has said, "We ought also to love one another."

Again:

Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world.

There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love.

We love him, because he first loved us.

If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.

IN HARMONY WITH THE KEYNOTE OF THE CONFERENCE

These words which I have read are in harmony with the keynote of this conference. I endorse the remarks that have been made here by all the brethren. I rejoice that there is harmony and love in the hearts of the presidency, one for another, and the members of the council of the Twelve. We are not divided. We do not see differently, but we accept the same thing, and in the love of God have but one desire in our hearts and that is to serve him and keep his commandments.

Now, I want to say a few words in regard to this phase of the subject, and I will repeat one of these verses: "He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings; and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me," and the preceding verse:

ON KEEPING THE COMMANDMENTS

"Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." Now, do we fully understand just what that means? The great promise that is made to the members of this Church who are willing to abide by the law and keep the commandments of the Lord is that they shall not only receive a place in the kingdom of God, but that they shall have the presence of the Father and the Son; and that is not all, for the Lord has promised that all that he hath shall be given unto them. In section 84 of the Doctrine and Covenants this truth is very clearly set forth, and notwithstanding the fact that I may weary you, I shall read one or more verses:

For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies;

They become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God.

Now, I am not going to take time to explain all of that which I have read, but I want to read a little more and give some explanation:

And also all they who receive this priesthood receiveth me, saith the Lord;

For he that receiveth my servants receiveth me;

And he that receiveth me receiveth my Father;

And he that receiveth my Father, receiveth my Father's kingdom; therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him;

And this is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood.

That is in harmony with this expression which I have read here from John's gospel, that if we keep the commandments of the Lord—and I apply this to us, although he declared it unto his disciples then, it is just as true today—if we keep the commandments of the Lord, then we shall have both the Father and the Son and we shall dwell in their presence, we shall receive his kingdom as the elect and shall be heirs of God, joint heirs with our elder Brother in receiving the fulness of the kingdom, for all things are ours. O how wonderful, how great the blessings of the Lord to the Latter-day Saints and to all who are willing to go through the waters of baptism and abide by the law and keep the commandments of the Lord!

THE WHOLE DUTY OF MAN IS TO KEEP THE COMMANDMENTS

A more timely thing could not be said than that which was uttered here as the keynote of this conference that we as Latter-day Saints should keep the commandments of the Lord. That is the whole duty of man. I have no right to do anything else. You have no right to do anything else. We have the privilege, but because we are servants, who have gone through the waters of baptism and taken upon ourselves obligations, there is nothing else that we should do. Woe unto the man who has made covenant with the Lord in the waters of baptism and in the temple of the Lord to keep his laws and his commandments and then violates them!

There is another passage of scripture here in explanation of one of the parables. You know the Savior spoke of the parable of the wheat and the tares. It is not necessary for me to read it because you are familiar with it. But I want to read one verse of the interpretation. The Lord said:

The field is the world; The good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the children of the wicked one.

The enemy that sowed them is the devil; The harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels.

As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world.

The Son of man shall send forth his angels and they shall gather out of the kingdom all things that offend and them which do iniquity.

Now, he is not speaking of the world in that passage of scripture. He is speaking of Israel. If I have enmity in my heart, or hatred, then I offend. If I do not have a love for the principles of the gospel then I am an offense before the Lord. If I am not willing to live up to every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God, but make exception in my case, because, perhaps, I think I may have weaknesses and may be different from other men, then I offend and am in danger. If we are not in harmony with the Church and Kingdom of God in all things, and faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord, the time may come when we shall be removed, for the angels of heaven will take a hand and all that give offense, all things that are impure, unholy, and stand in the way of progress and advancement and the establishment of truth in the hearts of the people shall be removed.

I never did learn to deliver a discourse without referring to the scriptures so you will have to pardon me. I will read one more passage and this I expect will be the last that I will read. In the preface to the Lord's revelations he said this:

And the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord; neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people.

How are they to be cut off? By being gathered out as the Lord declared in his explanation of the parable of the wheat and tares, when the angels shall go forth and cleanse and remove from Israel and the kingdom of God all things that offend. We have been commanded to stand in holy places. We can not stand in a holy place, even though it be in the temple of the Lord, if our thoughts, our desires, and our feelings, are impure, because we would desecrate the house of the Lord, and to stand in holy places we must be in harmony with the truth and observe and keep all of the commandments that have been given unto us.

GREATER COMPREHENSION OF THE GOSPEL MUCH NEEDED AMONG THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS

I was in one of our northern stakes not long ago. I made the remark there that I thought the thing that was needed as much as anything else among the Latter-day Saints was a better understanding or comprehension of the gospel. And after I sat down we called upon one of the bishops and he got up and endorsed what I had said and put it to a vote of the people and it was adopted in that stake of Zion as a slogan, that we stand for a better comprehension of the gospel through study and by faith. I say to you, my brethren and sisters, you cannot keep the commandments of the Lord and walk in righteousness unless you know what they are. The Lord has commanded us to search the scriptures, for the things which they contain are true and shall be fulfilled, and so I say to you, and this is my closing message: Search the scriptures; make yourselves familiar with that which the Lord has revealed for your salvation, the salvation of your house, and of the world. Do not procrastinate the day of repentance. Let us walk humbly, righteously, diligently before the Lord and let, above all things, this spirit of love dwell in our hearts for all men and more especially for our brethren. If we see them going wrong, if we see them doing that which they ought not do, there is a proper way to correct them. The Lord has pointed out the way and we can make the matter right nearly every time and if we can not make it right with the offending brother there is a procedure which we may take to make it right, and I have no right to backbite, to faultfind, to condemn before others one of my brethren unheard, whether he be high or lowly. The Lord has pointed out the procedure in all of these matters for our guidance.

Let us love the Lord for this is the foundation of all things. It is the first commandment, and the second commandment, to love our neighbors as ourselves, is like unto it, and when we have done that we have fulfilled the law, because there is nothing that will be left undone. The Lord bless you, my brethren and sisters, let us stand together united in the service of the Lord, I pray in his name. Amen.

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

I am very thankful to find that I am in harmony with what has been said in this conference in the addresses of the brethren, from that of the president of the Church and the prophet of the Lord at the opening session, to the last Amen by the speaker who has just closed. A variety of topics have been touched upon, and I have felt to regret in a way that the time limitations did not permit several of the speakers to go on as I could see from the trend of their remarks they would have done, had they had time—to a fuller elucidation of the very splendid principles they have presented.

LOOKING AT THINGS FROM DIFFERENT ANGLES

We have been able to look at things from different angles by following the remarks of the several brethren, and all harmonize. I believe that the remarks are peculiarly timely. Not that I feel that there is any great danger of the Latter-day Saints going astray as a body—for I have faith in them, and I know that they are the Lord's people—but because there are at this time conditions before the people upon which divergent views are held; and, consequently, not all see things from the same angle, and therefore do not have precisely the same image formed upon the retina of their spiritual and physical eyes.

Very much depends, you know, upon our point of view. There are men who would not recognize a photograph of their own home if it were taken from the rear, for they have been in the habit of looking at it only from the front; and such a one would probably say: "That is not mine; that is not the way I would build a house; it is all wrong."

THE LORD CAN NOT LOOK UPON SIN WITH ALLOWANCE

I was impressed by the brief and passing remark made by Brother Ivins, this morning, in which he incorporated one of the most profound epigrams in scripture, in which the Lord repeated words that he had before given through the mouth of his ancient prophet Alma. They appear in the 45th chapter, 16th verse, as Alma's words spoken under inspiration. In the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants, 31st paragraph, they appear as the direct words of the Lord:

"For I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance."

I read further:

"Nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven;

"And he that repents not, from him shall be taken even the light which he has received, for my Spirit shall not always strive with man, saith the Lord of Hosts.

"And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh,

"For I am no respecter of persons, and will that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the devil shall have power over his own dominion;

"And also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world.

"Search these commandments for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled.

"What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same;

"For behold, and lo, the Lord is God, and the Spirit beareth record, and the record is true, and the truth abideth forever and ever. Amen."

This is no ancient scripture only. The principles involved were proclaimed early in the history of the race; and they have been given anew to you, to me personally, to the people who are living in this dispensation, in this year of our Lord.

"I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance." I say that epigram is startling. It has attracted the attention of theologians; it has led them to profound reflection; it has enlightened their minds. In the scripture that I have read to you the Lord draws a very clear distinction between sin and the sinner. The dis-tion is real and vital. Some may say: Can there be sin without a sinner? Can there be theft without a thief? Can there be falsehood without a falsifier? Can there be murder without a slayer? I take the liberty of reading to you a few lines of my own, with scripture incorporated, as already published:

Admittedly, sins may be planned but not executed, thought out, though not carried to the extent of actual commission, as is connoted by the Lord's words respecting adultery: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old, Thou shalt not commit adultery: But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." (Matt. 5:27-28).

Men may be potential liars, robbers or murderers, but, lacking opportunity to become criminals in fact, or restraining their evil impulses through considerations of policy or personal advantage, they may maintain outward signs of probity. The wearing of a sheep's fleece by a ravening wolf is no modern camouflage.

But in all such dissemblings, the fact of wicked purpose exists; and the evil purpose, thought, or desire, is of itself essentially sin; and such a case, therefore, presents no phenomenon of abstract guilt, but actual and individual offense; for the thinker of evil is a sinner.

Who of us can regard tuberculosis, smallpox, or the insidious and deadly influenza that has swept the earth, with other feelings than repugnance and fear? Yet we treat the afflicted person with effort to bring about his recovery; and if we loved him while well, we do not hate him because he has become ill; but, to the contrary, we become the more solicitous in his behalf. Health officers and the medical fraternity look not upon disease with compromise, toleration or allowance. They are the marshalled assailants of physical malady, whatever its disguise; and their best means of waging war on disease is that of ministering to each afflicted one, while taking all measures possible to protect the well against infection.

The germs of disease exist, whether they find lodgment in human bodies or not; and, by analogy, we may say that the spirit of or incentive to thievery, adultery, or murder, is alive, as the definite contagion of evil, though men may or may not be actually overcome thereby. Now, in the case of physical affliction, definite treatment is invoked; and compliance with prescribed conditions is enforced so far as the patient will submit.

In fine and purposeful irony, the Divine Healer met the casuistry of certain self-righteous scribes and Pharisees with the declaration: "They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." (Mark 2:17.)

THE LORD, HOWEVER, IS MERCIFUL TO THE SINNER

But as the scriptures abundantly affirm, and as experience demonstrates, there are none of us entirely free from sin; to the contrary, every one is in need of the Great Physician's healing ministrations. "Sin is the transgression of the law" (I John 3:4); furthermore: "There is none righteous, no, not one" (Rom. 3:10); and again "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." (I John 1:8).

I learn from the scriptures that the Lord hates sin in every one of its multifarious manifestations, but he is kind and merciful and long-suffering toward the sinner. It is true that disease may come upon us through our own neglect, or our own actual commission of overt acts. It may come upon us even against the best we can do. The diseases I have named, most of them, and diphtheria, and others, are classed by physicians as filth disease, because the germs that produce them breed in uncleanness; but even the cleanest of men, even the man who has lived according to the laws of health, may come down under the stroke of one of those dread maladies; and though I hate diphtheria, I may love with a yearning that leads me to fasting and prayer, the one who is stricken. Let us segregate the ideas even as the Lord hath done.

A MEANS OF TREATMENT FOR THOSE WHO SIN

Now the Lord has provided a means of treatment for those who are spiritually afflicted, even as means are provided for those who are physically ill, and by compliance with his laws of spiritual health we may, perchance, be healed, however ill we may have become. But we should not lose sight of the fact that the Lord has no compromise with sin. He has provided that if any man in this Church shall offend, he shall be dealt with as a man who is afflicted with smallpox must be dealt with, with the hope of saving him. The purpose of the Church is to heal, not to spread disease; to build up, not to tear down; to save, not to destroy, but that does not mean that we are to look upon sin in our midst in any namby-pamby way and pass it by.

The Lord hath declared that there must not be iniquity in his Church, and he has provided officers whose specific and specified duty it is to hunt out iniquity, to run it down, so that every case may be dealt with, and the afflicted ones perchance, be saved. He has not told us to cover up sin in the Church. That is not the Lord's will, nor purpose nor plan. He has told us that we should avoid gossip and slander and all kinds of misrepresentation, and speaking ill against our brethren, whether we regard them in their official capacity as officers of the Church, general or local, or otherwise. I have no right to speak in condemnation of my brother, unless I do it in an official capacity, in the exercise of the authority of the Holy Priesthood, and then I should do it in love and with yearning for him.

SIN SHOULD BE EXPOSED

You have raised your hands in this great building many times, sustaining me in the position to which I have been called. I make myself the subject of the illustration. Perchance you will have an opportunity to do that again, or to vote against me. But does that mean that because you vote and sustain me in my position that I am exempt from judgment if I do wrong? By no means. But there is a way in which your complaints, if you are in any way justified in making such, may be given consideration. If any one of you feel that you can not sustain me in my position, because of anything you know of me as being wrong, I pray you, come to me, come to me. I will give you a hearing; I will listen to you patiently, and if you do point out any error in my life, anything in which I have been doing that which I ought not to do, the Lord being my helper I will thank you and bless you for it, and bless him who inspired you to come. Or, go to those who preside over you and me, and let them judge between us. But do not go around gossiping about me, and trying to undermine my influence, which I desire before the Lord to be for good. Do not condemn me unheard. Do not pick out a rumor from the air and think it over and magnify it until it becomes an established fact in your disordered mind. But on the other hand, if I am guilty of sin that makes me unfit to be one of the goodly company to which I have been called, that should be known; it should be pointed out, in the proper way and in the proper spirit.

DISCIPLINE REQUIRED IN THE CHURCH

Now, the Lord has provided that those in his Church shall live according to the law, and he makes a distinction between the law pertaining to the Church and what we call the secular law, or the law of the land, but he requires obedience to each. My love for my brother in this Church does not mean that I am to shield him when he has violated the law of the land, nor that I am to stand between him and righteous judgment. This Church is no organization like that of the secret combinations of old, which the Lord hath said he hates, the members of which were pledged, and bound by oath and covenant, that they would stand by each other whether right or wrong, that they would cover up one another's crimes, that they would justify one another in theft and murder and in all things that were unclean. It is no such organization at all. It would not be of God if it were.

The resurrected Christ, after his ascension, in giving the revelation through John, instructing the revelator to have messages sent to the different churches, included in the message to the church at Ephesus the word that he did have something good to say to them, because, as I read, "Thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate." (Rev. 1:6.) He did not say he hated the members of that unholy band, but he did hate their doctrines and practises, which were the doctrines of a secret combination, the members of which were pledged to stand by each other no matter what any one of them might do. That the Lord requires discipline in his Church is made plain in the revealed word, as you may read in the 42nd section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"And again, I say, thou shalt not kill; but he that killeth shall die.

"Thou shalt not steal; and he that stealeth and will not repent, shall be cast out.

"Thou shalt not lie; he that lieth and will not repent, shall be cast out.

"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else;

"And he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit, and if he repents not he shall be cast out.

"Thou shalt not commit adultery; and he that committeth adultery, and repenteth not, shall be cast out."

And then, to cut the matter short, he says:

"Thou knowest my laws concerning these things are given in my scriptures; he that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out."

In the latter part of the same revelation, we find these instructions:

"And if a man or woman shall rob, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land.

"And if he or she shall steal, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land.

"And if he or she shall lie, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land.

"And if he or she do any manner of iniquity, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law, even that of God.

"And if thy brother or sister offend thee, thou shalt take him or her between him or her and thee alone; and if he or she confess, thou shalt be reconciled."

Such is the law to the Church, and respecting the law of the land, the Lord has made it perfectly plain that we are subservient to it and are required to sustain it. Though we have our tribunals in the Church, established according to the order of the Lord, there is no conflict between their administration and that of the courts of the land.

TENDER TREATMENT FOR THE SPIRITUALLY SICK

"Let no man break the laws of the land," saith the Lord in the 58th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, "for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land: Wherefore, be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet." And then referring to the laws previously given he said: "Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the Church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold here is wisdom."

I remind you of the strictness with which the Lord regards his people. He has provided tender treatment for those who are spiritually sick, and it is our duty to assist those who are thus stricken. If I go to my brother in the spirit of kindness, and that spirit must be with me if I go to him in the power of my office and calling, giving unto him words of counsel, and he receive them not in the spirit in which I go, he becomes an offender before the Lord. If I do so when my brother comes to me, I become an offender. But you know there are those among us and elsewhere—the world is full of them—who do not want to be criticized, except in the broad sense of the term, and then the criticism must be favorable. They want to be patted on the back; they want to be told that everything they have said and done is right; and if you point out, perchance, that they should be on their guard against this or that, or they should right this wrong or that, too frequently they become offended against the one who has come to them even as a physician would come to one afflicted with disease.

KEEP THE COMMANDMENTS OF THE LORD

To the people I say, keep the commandments of the Lord as you have been admonished again and again. Do not lie, do not steal, do not take advantage of your neighbor, do not have lustful thoughts, do nothing that is unclean. Keep these commandments of the Lord. Bishops, presidents of stakes, keep ye the commandments of the Lord. When you have under your care those who are offending, you shall deal with them as the Lord hath provided, in all kindness and with a desire to save them; but nevertheless, you are not to cover up iniquity in the Church. The spirit in which this jurisdiction is to be exercised is set forth by the Lord in plainness, as I read to you from the 121st section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"Behold, there are many called, but few are chosen. And why are they not chosen?

"Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and aspire to the honors of men, that they do not learn this one lesson—

"That the rights of the Priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness.

"That they may be conferred upon us, it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control, or dominion, or compulsion, upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the Priesthood, or the authority of that man."

TOLERATION ENJOINED

You see the safeguards that the Lord has set. Now, the Lord hath enjoined love for our fellowmen upon us, such love as will cause us to do even disagreeable things for their welfare, to do that which we do not like to do, to speak a word of caution when, perchance, we would rather not, lest we be misunderstood; but the Lord requires it at our hands; and he has enjoined upon us tolerance toward one another. There are some who have never reasoned carefully along the line of the possibility of two men, for example, looking at things from different points of view, and seeing different images, and yet both seeing the truth. "How is it possible," some have asked, "that two divergent ways may be right?" Why, they may turn, and they may come to be right after all. I can not believe that two men, both desiring the same ultimate attainment, and that good, and both working toward that end with full and sincere purposes of heart, can not both be right, although they seem for the time being to be going differently.

Let me be specific. Do you mean to tell me that all good is in one or the other of the great political parties? Why, if so, if it be right to be a Democrat, then it is wrong to be a Republican. No, my friends. It may be perfectly right for you to be a Democrat and equally so for me to be a Republican, or vice versa. We have our different ways of looking at things, but if I believe that the principles of the Democratic party are right, I am not justified in condemning my brother who believes that the principles of the Republican party are right. I believe that both of these great parties, that is to say all honest members thereof, have at heart the country's good, the nation's welfare. They differ as to the best means of attaining this; and to our great sorrow they have dragged into the field of partisanship questions that never should have been brought in, because they are fundamentally not partisan at all.

THE CHURCH IN ALL THE AFFAIRS OF LIFE

Only the other day I was asked, in the course of conversation with an intelligent gentleman, not a member of our Church:

"Is the 'Mormon' Church in politics?"

I answered him: "Most assuredly it is in politics, and also in business, in statesmanship, in all the affairs of life, teaching the people to do what is right so far as it possibly can."

"Well, has the Church any candidates in the pending election?"

"Yes, indeed," said I, "the Church has a full ticket, and is counseling its members just how to vote."

Now, let me tell you just how you should vote, just as I told him. The Church is telling its members to look upon the franchise as a sacred gift, to exercise it according to their very best judgment before the Lord, and the Church's ticket is the ticket of the best men, according to the best judgment of the people, to whichever party they belong. Vote the party ticket if you honestly feel that to be best, or vote for the men you think will most effectively subserve the needs of country, state, and people.

OUR RELIGION MAKES FOR HONESTY AND TOLERANCE

You have your agency and you know that you are free; therefore do not offend the Lord, by going contrary to what you believe, honestly and after thought and prayer, to be right. But above all, do not say that because your brother does not see things just as you do in the political field, he necessarily is wrong. I was very much touched by the president's words—that he was pained at the evidence that had come to view, that some brethren condemn their fellows because these do not look on things as those of the first class do in matters political. Our religion should purify our politics, and make us honest, tolerant, and bold, to do that which is required of citizens, and to exercise our rights at the polls. Our religion should make us honest in business, truthful in all our doings. To be so is to be in line with the keeping of the commandments of the Lord. I pray that this may continue to be a characteristic of the Latter-day Saints, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

I always find it very difficult to reach a conclusion as to how I should best occupy my allotment of time on these occasions. I think I have been more perplexed than usual at this time to know what I ought to say, in an attempt to make some contribution to the great conference that we are now holding. I desire to say nothing that is inconsonant with the splendid remarks that have already been made, and with the excellent spirit that has here prevailed. I feel, as Brother Whitney expressed himself, to give over my thought to some matters that have been more or less weighing upon my mind; and while I may not be able to give solutions to some of the problems that I see confronting us, I sincerely hope, with the aid of our Father's Spirit, to be able to present to you some questions which I believe deserve our serious consideration.

THE "WORLD" HAS BROUGHT A TRANSFORMATION AMONG US

May I, by way of premise, go back a few years in the history of the Church? Not many years ago the various communities of the Church, that is, the communities in which the Latter-day Saints dwelt, were made up almost exclusively of members of the Church. I think that not more, perhaps, than twenty-five or thirty years ago would have found our villages and our small towns, outside of the few large centers in this intermountain region, to be peopled almost entirely with members of our Church. These villages, these country towns, while all under the jurisdiction of the civil government and all functioning as municipalities, were nevertheless so exclusively made up of people all professing one religious faith, that necessarily there was a unity of expression in matters of social intercourse, particularly, that was very marked. Nearly all of the activities in the societies that then prevailed were carried on under the jurisdiction of Church government. Our wards, being small centers of population, so formed as to make feasible and practical the administration of social affairs and functions, were under the jurisdiction of their bishops, and our people responded almost with unanimous accord to the direction and the influence exercised by the Church in these various communities. We were homogeneous.

With the passing of years a very different condition has come to prevail. In the larger centers of the Church people whom we sometimes designate as "outsiders" have come to be, in numbers, in the majority, and in these smaller centers of the Church there has been such an influx of people, not members, that they form no inconsiderable part of the population of these rural communities, that were once almost entirely made up of our people. With the influx of these people into our various communities have come very many practices that are wholly different from the practices and the standards that were once employed and upheld. The "world," as we commonly designate all that is outside of our Church, has literally come in upon us, and it has brought with it the practices of the world.

OUR RELATIONSHIP TO THE "WORLD"

As I have given my thought to this transformation I have ever asked myself the question: What is our real relationship to the world? How ought we to properly articulate in carrying forward the functions of our Church with these portions of our communities that are not of our Church? I have been very much perplexed in my thinking to answer for myself these questions, and yet I have regarded them as vital and essential to the proper going forward of our work. I have recognized the fact that in an attempt to answer those questions some possible offense might be given to those whom we designate as being of the world and not of us. But I have regarded it as desirable that they, as well as we, should know how we regard our mutual relationship. I have been particularly concerned with the question, because I have thought that it has very definitely affected many conditions in the Church that I regard as being serious today. May I illustrate?

ILLUSTRATION

There has come in upon us the practices, the fashions, and the rules of conduct, and a standard to which the world adhere. People of the world, living for things somewhat different than we profess to live for, have sought by different means to attain their goals in life. There are among these people many first class men and women, many whom I am proud to call friends, and many with whom we all associate, and to whom we look up as being desirable in every sense of the word. But among these many good people there are also numbers who are wholly devoid of any of the conceptions that we ourselves have with reference to our duties to God and to one another. There are great numbers who in no sense, either in principle or action, stand by the ideals for which we stand and to which we devote our lives.

We find also that in the establishment of the various institutions that we have among us there has come, in many cases, to dominate, the spirit of the world. I have reference particularly to our homes. I know that any thoughtful man, who has had any opportunity for observation, will be convinced that throughout the whole country there is a growing tendency and disposition on the part of men and women not to regard the home in the same light which we have always regarded it. I know that men and women, united under the bonds of matrimony, in many cases, altogether too numerous, have failed to make of the great institution of marriage that which God intended it should be; and I know, as you know, that the time which is devoted to social affairs, so-called social affairs, precludes both men and women in the world from making home such as it ought to be, in order to insure a citizenship that will carry forward the great ideals of this land.

Now, has it not come to be the case, in very many of the communities where Latter-day Saints dwell with non-"Mormon" neighbors, that the Latter-day Saints themselves have entered into some of the same practices and partaken of some of the same influences that have brought to pass the condition which I have named? I ask you, is it reasonable to expect that young men and young women may associate with their neighbors and friends not of the Church, partake in all of their social pastimes, devote themselves to these so-called teas and card parties and club arrangements, and at the same time not partake of those influences that deter men and women from functioning, as God intended they should do, in the building up of the race and in the maintenance of homes which constitute the very foundation of our society and national structure? Is it reasonable to think that that influence which always comes from close contact between personalities, when it induces a course of action in one direction, is not very apt to induce a course of action along all directions in which the society of the world moves?

EVERY LEGITIMATE OPPORTUNITY FOR SOCIAL INTERCOURSE SHOULD BE PROVIDED WITHIN THE CHURCH

In my own thinking I have come to the conclusion that, while it may be possible for our people to hold close communion and intercourse with those who do not profess our standards and ideals, and maintain their integrity, their virtue, and maintain in purity their own ideals and standards, it is unlikely that they will do so; and I am convinced that it is right that the institutions of the Church should provide for our people, particularly for our young people, for whom we are all deeply solicitous, the facilities, the advantages, the necessary opportunity for expression of all that is good within them, and the necessary opportunity for all kinds of social intercourse, in order that we may preserve in its original purity the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

A MISTAKE TO MARRY THOSE NOT OF OUR FAITH

I welcome the stranger within our gates; I welcome a fair and proper intercourse between men and women not of our Church and those of the Church; but I would deplore any lack of opportunity within our Church which should lead our young people, in particular, to think that they have to go beyond the confines of the Church to find the necessary opportunity for gratification of all their legitimate social desires. This question, in my judgment, has very important and divers bearings in all phases of our life. I observe, and you know, that no inconsiderable number of the young men and young women of this Church are marrying outside of the Church. I grant that some might say that a liberal, broad-minded, tolerant policy would welcome such a situation. I believe it to be the mind of the presiding authorities of this Church, as well as the mind of all thoughtful Latter-day Saints, that it is the profoundest mistake for young men and young women of this Church to marry those who are not adherents of its faith. Experience has demonstrated in so many cases that it would not be possible to enumerate them, that such a union, in our conception of that great relationship, is a failure, and that only in the most exceptional of cases does it prove to be for the happiness and the welfare of the parties concerned. I believe, my brethren and sisters, that it is necessary that we shall maintain our standards and our ideals, in order that they may appeal to the world, and in order that the world, seeing our good works, may be led to adopt these principles for the guidance of their lives.

THE GOSPEL, A LIGHT TO THE WORLD

I read in our Doctrine and Covenants the following:

And even so, I have sent mine everlasting gospel into the world to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people and for the gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way for me.

I regard that message, coming from our Father, to indicate to us that first we must maintain the great, high, magnificent standard of living that he has given to us, and then by maintaining that standard we will attract the people of the world to it, and let them know of the vitality of the great principles that we espouse, by incorporating them into our lives. I believe that the world does not want our doctrines under the label of "Mormonism." I am convinced that many of the principles for which we stand are acceptable to many men and women in the world. I am convinced that many are now in course of adoption, and that they are gaining great headway among all the peoples of the country. But I am convinced that they do not want these principles under the label of "Mormonism." They want to work into them in their own way. They want to incorporate them into life and society under different names. They do not want them under the name of "Mormonism." But I want them under that label. I want them to be known as the great life-saving principles that have been revealed in the gospel of Jesus Christ. I want the world to know that the only security that there is for perfect life, for advancement, for progress, for peace, lies in the gospel of Jesus Christ. I want the Lord to be recognized as the giver of all these great, good, and virtuous things. I believe that the only way in which we can sustain them as the principles of the gospel in unity, in their integrity, is by cultivating a close adherence to the Church, and maintaining the standards for which it stands.

OUR FORCES SHOULD BE UNITED AGAINST SIN

I endorse heartily the words that have been spoken concerning sin, and I regret, beyond expression, the fact that sin is creeping in among us. I believe it is our duty, as it scarcely ever was our duty before, to unite our forces against this incursion of sin, and in order that we may the better do it I am convinced that we must provide within the Church, as are now provided, means and facilities to satisfy all the legitimate desires of our people.

WE MUST PROVIDE RECREATIONAL INSTRUCTION AND EDUCATION

In order to make some practical application of the principles that I here advocate, I would like to suggest, particularly to the officers of the Church, those who have jurisdiction over its various organizations, that in my humble judgment we are equipped with every necessary organization to provide adequate facilities for all of our people to fully and richly live. I think we have the necessary club facilities. I think we ought to provide the necessary facilities for recreation, and I feel that it is the proper time to provide such opportunities that our young people, in particular, will not think themselves obliged to receive their recreational instruction and education—because education and instruction come as much from recreation as in any other way—from sources in no wise under our control, and which bring baneful influences in among us.

When you come to consider the fact that the moving picture business has today come to be one of the very largest businesses of the country—I heard it rated only a short time ago as fourth—when you come to consider that that business and its projections appeal to all our people, in every hamlet, in every village, in every community where we dwell, is it not time that some effort should be made to direct and supervise and, if possible, control its large influence upon the lives and the characters of our people? Has the time not come when we should be willing and able to provide recreational facilities, so that it could not be said that the commercialized dance hall or the commercialized theatre, or circuits of vaudeville, have a monopoly on all of the dramatic presentations, carrying with them their influence and the force of their instruction?

INDISCRIMINATE MIXTURE DEPRECATED

My judgment is that we must meet the situation soon, and that we must give to our people, within the organizations of the Church, all the opportunity necessary for the development of culture, for the development of their better selves; and that in order to do it, it will probably be necessary to stand somewhat aloof from the world, whether they like it or not. I cannot but think that when the Lord said that we were the salt of the earth, he intended that we should so preserve the great principles of truth committed to our custody that they would not be tainted or polluted by any outside worldly influence; and I regard it as well nigh impossible to keep them in their undefiled purity if we permit an indiscriminate mixture with all the influences and practices and fashions and fads that come into our midst, brought by those who are not of us.

Now, I do not wish to be considered as intolerant of others. I recognize a very great obligation to the stranger who has come among us. I recognize the obligation that has been referred to a number of times during this conference to give him that which we have. I tolerate his views with full willingness; without reservation I accord to him the privilege of worshiping how or whom he may. I want him to know that there are no people in all this broad land who more thoroughly believe in the true principles of liberty and freedom than do our people. But I would like him to know, at the same time, that we are trying to carry forward the work of God, that we regard ourselves as the custodians of the principles of truth, committed to us in this last dispensation by the Lord himself, through his divinely chosen prophet; and I would like him to know that we do not want those great principles of truth in the slightest degree corrupted by any notions, by any practice, by any fashions that he may introduce among us.

CLOSE ADHERENCE TO THE ORGANIZATIONS OF THE CHURCH COUNSELED

Therefore my thought is, and I propound it in the form of a question, my brethren and sisters: Is it not incumbent upon us in these perilous times to adhere close to the organizations of the Church, to make them function fully in the lives of the people and provide, as God himself in his infinite wisdom and mercy and kindness has provided for us, all necessary opportunity for the complete development of manhood and womanhood, under the auspices of the holy Priesthood of God? I pray that we may think and study and act, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

After a number of notices had been given out in relation to the overflow meetings on Sunday, the choir and congregation sang the "Doxology."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder John W. Hart, President of the Rigby Stake of Zion.

Conference was adjourned until Sunday morning.

THIRD DAY

Conference continued in the tabernacle Sunday morning, Oct. 10, 1920.

President Heber J. Grant called the congregation to order at 10 o'clock.

The choir and congregation sang, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

Patriarch Warren Smith of American Fork, Alpine Stake, offered the opening prayer.

The choir and congregation sang, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah."

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

It is more than a hundred years since the Prophet Joseph Smith received his first vision. It is more than ninety years since the Church was organized. It is more than eighty-eight years since the prophet received and gave to the world the revelation on the Word of Wisdom.

A LESSON FROM THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT

The thought of the amount of time that has elapsed since these important events in the Church took place suggests that I read the following from the seventh chapter of Matthew—a few of the last stanzas in the Sermon on the Mount. I begin at the 15th verse:

Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

Many will say to me in that day Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?

And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity.

Therefore whosoever [I draw attention to these words after these long years have passed in the history of the Church] therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them. I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock;

And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock.

And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand:

And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it.

“WE STAND FOR THE NON-USE AND NON-SALE OF TOBACCO”

More than eighty-eight years since the Word of Wisdom was given to the world through the Prophet Joseph Smith. A business man of this city stated in my presence a few days ago that the stir we are making with respect to the use of tobacco is having the effect of increasing rather than having the effect of decreasing the amount of tobacco that is being used. This man needs but to be associated with our Church auxiliary organizations in order to learn that his assertion is not correct. If he had looked into the faces of those who assembled this morning as Mutual Improvement officers and other workers, if he had seen their clean faces, if he could know their clean lives, if he could know the intensity of their determination to labor for the improvement, the education, the uplift of the young people of the Church, he would realize that his assertion is not correct. Audiences of this same quality I see when meeting with the Young Men's Mutual Improvement workers in the various stakes of Zion. And what can be said of these can be said also of the workers in the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Associations, of the workers in the Relief Society, in the Sabbath Schools, in the Primary organizations and in the Religion Classes.

The slogan of the Mutual Improvement Associations for this year is: “We stand for the non-use and non-sale of tobacco.” When our legislature was in session recently one active Mutual Improvement worker presented a bill in the state senate providing for the abolition of the cigarette in the state of Utah. When he presented his arguments in favor of this measure his fellow legislators told him there was no sentiment or little sentiment in the state of Utah in favor of legislation of that sort and no serious demand for it.

IS THE SENTIMENT OF THE PEOPLE FOR THE WORD OF WISDOM?

I want to know whether we believe in the Prophet Joseph Smith or not. I want to know if this great multitude of people, assembled in this historic place, followers of the Prophet Joseph Smith, worshippers of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, believe in these revelations nearly eighty-eight years since that revelation was given. The President of the Church said in one of our meetings a little while ago: “Certainly in this length of time we ought to begin to see the fruits of our labors.”

The promises that are made in the Word of Wisdom and which were read yesterday by President Rudger Clawson, are, or ought to be in themselves, enough to induce us to live in accordance with the teachings of this great revelation. Nor is it necessary for us to base our conclusions with respect to these matters entirely upon this revelation.

ANDREW D. WHITE ON TOBACCO

One of the great American educators, only a few years ago, asked the multitude of teachers who were before him, to go out and take to the young people of the country a message from him, Andrew D. White, against the habit of smoking. I wrote to this great teacher and college president later with respect to this matter. One sentence of his reply reads: "I consider any young man at school, in college or in any professional school, is seriously, indeed, almost fatally handicapped by the habit of smoking." Andrew D. White was a great educator, and statesman. It was he who served so ably as ambassador to the Imperial German empire. It was he who, as a professor at the University of Michigan, and as president of the Cornell University, lived in close touch with college men for a period of fifty years.

That the Latter-day Saints have a tremendous work to do we all agree. We can only do this work well if we live in accordance with the teachings of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We cannot stand around with our hands in our pockets and get things accomplished. We cannot drink tea, we cannot drink coffee, we cannot drink liquor, we cannot use tobacco, we cannot be unkind, or dishonest, and in reason expect to accomplish our tremendous task. If we live these teachings we shall be known everywhere for our good works—the charity that we extend, the kindness that we put forth, and the honor which characterize our dealings. These are the genuine products of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

SENTIMENTS OF DAVID STARR JORDAN

Another quotation on the subject of smoking from the great educator, David Starr Jordan: "I am not much of a mathematician, said the cigarette, but I can add to man's nervous troubles, I can subtract from his physical energy, I can multiply his aches and pains, I can divide his mental powers, I can take interest from his work and I can discount his chances of success."

Another from Dr. Jordan. This I heard quoted many years ago by President Heber J. Grant: "Boys who smoke cigarettes are like wormy apples. They drop long before the harvest time. They rarely make failures in after life, because they don't have any after life. When the other boys are taking hold of the world's work these are concerned with the sexton and the undertaker."

APPEAL TO ENFORCE THE LAWS

"Whosoever," says the great Master, "whosoever heareth these words of mine and doeth them, I shall liken unto a wise man who built his house upon a rock and the rains descended and the floods came and the winds blew and beat upon this house and it fell not, for it was founded on a rock." I appeal to you as a young man, as a Mutual Improvement worker, one who is interested, intensely so, in the welfare of the boys of this state, I appeal to you every one to see to it that the laws of the state, as they exist today, are enforced, that these boys who, in their ignorance are destroying, by the use of cigarettes, their chance of success may be protected against themselves.

OUR DETERMINATION

An election is coming. I wish that in all the conventions all over the state the same resolution had been adopted that was presented and adopted in one of the counties by one of the political parties. I think they used these words: "We stand for the non-use and the non-sale of tobacco in the state of Utah."

When the next legislature meets, I beg of you, see to it that the men who represent you realize that there is in Utah a determination to preserve the brains, the memories and the reasoning powers of our boys. We are determined to increase and not decrease their chances of success. Whosoever heareth these teachings and liveth in accordance with them, the great Master himself has likened unto the wise man who built his house upon the rock. The rains descended, the winds blew, the floods came and beat upon the house, and it fell not, for it was founded on a rock. Let the legislators know that our faith, too, is founded on a rock, I ask it through Jesus Christ. Amen.

Emma Lucy Gates Bowen sang a solo, the words of which are found on page 66, L. D. S. Hymn Book, "Should you feel inclined to censure."

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

I am very happy, my brethren and sisters, that I find myself in complete accord with my brethren, and with all that has been said during the sessions of this wonderful conference. Many times, as I have sat here looking upon this wonderful scene—the gathering of the children of the Latter-day Saints who entered these valleys—I have been thinking, again and again, of the question: Do we really realize who we are and why we are here?

WHO ARE WE?

I am sure if we shall give it a moment's thought it will impress itself upon us that our being here is no ordinary circumstance; and if we shall give attention to what the Lord has said, I am sure we shall be convinced that we are no ordinary race of individuals. We have learned, through the revelations of the Lord in this dispensation, that when "one of a city and two of a family" should be gathered, as we have been gathered from the nations of the earth, those who would thus be gathered would be the children of Israel; and individually we have received assurances, through the words of the inspired patriarchs, that we are descendants of Joseph who was sold into Egypt, upon whose posterity were placed blessings beyond the blessings of his progenitors, and these blessings are ours, even to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills, where we are now assembled.

We have learned that the Lord has had in training, before they came into this world, tried and tested individuals, even as he revealed to Abraham, to be his leaders in the various dispensations—men whom he knew, prophets, statesmen, wise men, and leaders for all nations. I am convinced also that when our Father sent these leaders into the world he did not send them alone. He sent, in connection with them, hosts of other tried souls who would be helps to those who were selected of the Lord to be his leaders. I believe, therefore, that when the time came for the birth into the world of the chosen prophet, Joseph Smith, who was selected before he came into the world to be the prophet of this last dispensation,—he did not come alone, but there came with him men and women like unto himself, tried souls. God knew them. He held them in reserve for ages, until this day should dawn. They were scattered among the nations of the earth. They were born in those houses where the blood of Israel still remained, and inherited the promises made to our ancient fathers. These choice souls were sifted among the nations of the earth, but they heard the call, and they came willingly because they had to, in very many instances; and the Lord gave them no peace in their native lands. Their own homes were closed against them. They were denied admittance to their former circles, and so the way was closed up behind them, and the way was opened up before them. They followed the inspiration of the Spirit as it appealed to their souls, and the circumstances with which they were surrounded made it necessary for them to come. They came here that they may inherit the blessings and promises made unto their fathers. So I bear witness to you that the Lord not only called them but he was sifting them out as they came to these abiding places of the Latter-day Saints, sifting them out by trial, by difficulty, by the hardship of crossing the sea and crossing the plains, and the difficulties of the desert. All these things were as a sieve, parting those who would have been of no great profit in the establishment of this work, from those who had the faith, the quality and the power necessary to contribute to the establishment of Latter-day Zion. So I am impressed, my brethren and sisters, that we are shown whom we are—chosen sons and daughters of God, sent into the world in this age for a specific purpose, and we are gathered here for the accomplishment of definite things.

THE CHOSEN SONS AND DAUGHTERS OF GOD

I want to read what the Lord said on this subject. You will find in the eighty-sixth section of the book of Doctrine and Covenants, beginning with the fourth paragraph, these words:

But behold, in the last days, even now while the Lord is beginning to bring forth the word, and the blade is springing up and is yet tender.

Behold, verily I say unto you, the angels are crying unto the Lord day and night, who are ready and waiting to be sent forth to reap down the fields;

But the Lord saith unto them, pluck not up the tares while the blade is yet tender, (for verily your faith is weak) lest you destroy the wheat also.

Therefore let the wheat and the tares grow together until the harvest is fully ripe, that ye shall first gather out the wheat from among the tares, and after the gathering of the wheat, behold and lo! the tares are bound in bundles, and the field remaineth to be burned.

Therefore, thus saith the Lord, unto you, with whom the Priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers.

For ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God;

Therefore your life and the Priesthood hath remained and must needs remain through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.

Therefore, blessed are ye if ye continue in my goodness, a light unto the Gentiles, and through this Priesthood, a savior unto my people, Israel. The Lord hath said it.

I am willing to accept this statement. I believe it. I am convinced that the Latter-day Saints are the "wheat," and they have been, and are being gathered out from the midst of the "tares" of the earth. They are the salt of the earth, and the gathering of the wheat from the midst of the tares is almost completed. There remains but the gleaning of the wheat; and when the wheat is gathered the tares shall be bound in bundles, and the burning time remaineth for them. The Lord gathered this people out from the midst of the nations of the earth to preserve them from the desolations that would come.

I bear witness to you that the angels of God, who hold the power delegated to them to pour out his judgments upon the wicked, marvel at God's leniency and patience to this generation. That is why they cried: "Why are we not permitted to go forth?" They are stayed and held back.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THIS GENERATION

I believe that great responsibility rests upon this generation, because light has come into the world, and men sin in the presence of light and knowledge, and thereby their condemnation exceeds the condemnation of Sodom and Gomorrah. I believe that the Lord not only called the Latter-day Saints here to escape the judgments of the world, but he called us here to be a light unto the gentiles; the world's hope, the world's inspiration. God has assigned a mission to the Latter-day Saints. Let us not forget it.

I believe that we are to solve the problems of the world, and when I think of one of the most distressful things that exists in the world today—the great conflict between capital and labor, that is rending the nations, that is poisoning the hearts of men, I feel that the Latter-day Saints have a great mission to point the way for the solution of those questions. I believe the Latter-day Saints are one hundred years nearer their solution than anybody else in the world. The Lord gave us the key a long time ago; but we were not prepared to live up to it at that time. So, when he discovered our lack of training and ability to do this work, the Lord gave us another principle, known as the law of tithing; and the law of tithing, he states in these revelations, was to act as a schoolmaster to bring us to the higher law, the order that was established among Enoch and his people, by which there was no rich and no poor among them. I want to bear witness to you that the time of our probation in that school will not be forever. I believe there are hundreds and thousands of Latter-day Saints who have profited under that schoolmaster, so that they are about ready for graduation, and I believe the day of their graduation is coming. When the Lord shall see fit, they shall be called by the leaders of this Church to join in the grand demonstration that shall prove, not only to the Latter-day Saints but to the world, that the right order of things God ordained from the beginning can and will be established in these latter days. So, if we have not profited under this schoolmaster, if we have been poor attendants, if we have been truants, if we are not ready for graduation, let us repeat, my brethren and sisters, and resolve we are going to be honest with the Lord in the payment of our tithing, that we may be among those who shall be ready for promotion, and the accomplishment of these glorious purposes. For Zion must show the way. We have the key. We know the way, and we are in training to accomplish those things. I want to advise you, my brethren and sisters, there is no solution to those questions, except by and through the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

RESPONSIBILITY OF RICH AND POOR

I will read you a few more words from the fifty-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, sixteenth verse—an inspired statement that seems to fit exactly our times:

Woe unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation.—The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved.

Do not let us mistake, my brethren and sisters, the meaning of the Lord. He has no purpose to deny the rich the blessings of heaven. He has no enmity in his heart against the rich whose hearts are broken, and who give to the maintenance of his work. I rejoice that in this Church we do have men of wealth and means whose hearts are broken, and who pay their honest tithing, whose example is a shining one for all Latter-day Saints; but there are those who live only for themselves, who hold all they get for themselves, and therein they are in jeopardy.

I am reminded again of the suggestion made by the President in the opening of this conference, when he read us the letter from Brother and Sister McCune, giving their beautiful home to the Church—a splendid example for all others in their circumstances to follow. Our safety is in keeping the commandments of the Lord. The solution of the world's troubles will not come by the rich banding together and thinking only of themselves. Then the Lord said:

Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, who will not labor with your own hands.

Do you know anybody like that? The world is full of them! It is a sin of this age, that men of poverty become envious and are in as great condemnation before the Lord as the rich whose hearts are not broken, who are full of envy, who are full of malice toward those who have some of the things of this world. That is the spirit of Bolshevism. It should have no place in the hearts of Latter-day Saints. The poor should love the rich, and the rich should love the poor, otherwise we shall never come into universal brotherhood and reach a solution of these problems, which we hope to be able to solve, by and through the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

But blessed are the poor [yes, and the rich, too],

Blessed are the poor who are pure in heart, whose hearts are broken, and whose spirits are contrite, for they shall see the kingdom of God coming in power and great glory unto their deliverance; for the fatness of the earth shall be theirs.

For behold, the Lord shall come, and his recompense shall be with him, and he shall reward every man, and the poor shall rejoice;

And their generations shall inherit the earth from generation to generation, for ever and ever.

I am just simple enough to believe it. There is no solution of these problems outside of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by adherence to these things the rich and the poor shall live together as brothers. We shall not be banded off, one group of laborers into one class, fighting only for themselves and their own against all others. We shall be living together in the spirit of love and co-operation. I believe that it is necessary that we Latter-day Saints should keep our minds upon these things, for this is the goal to which we are destined to come.

SALVATION TO ISRAEL

Then there is one other promise that was made. We were not only to be a light unto the Gentiles; we were to be the means of bringing salvation to Israel; and in conclusion I want to read a few words from the forty-fifth section of the book of Doctrine and Covenants, on that subject. These words are a repetition to Joseph Smith, on the 7th day of March, 1831, of words originally spoken by the Master upon the Mount of Olives, when he was discussing with the disciples the judgment that would come upon Jerusalem, its destruction, the dispersion of the Jews, and then their gathering again, and the coming of the Lord in the last days. He said, beginning with the twenty-second verse:

Ye say that ye know that the end of the world cometh; ye say also that ye know that the heavens and the earth shall pass away;

And in this ye say truly, for so it is; but these things which I have told you shall not pass away until all shall be fulfilled,

And this I have told you concerning Jerusalem, and when that day shall come, shall a remnant be scattered among all nations;

But they shall be gathered again, but they shall remain until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

And in that day shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say that Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the earth.

And the love of men shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound;

And when the times of the Gentiles is come in,—[that is, the beginning of this period]—

And when the times of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fulness of my gospel;

But they receive it not, for they perceive not the light and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men;

And in that generation [the generation when the light shall break forth]

And in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

THE GOSPEL FIRST TO THE GENTILES

Now, my brethren and sisters, plainly as anything that the Lord has ever given us, we understand that the beginning of the times of the Gentiles was when the light broke forth in these latter days, and the gospel was given first to the Gentiles. It was written in olden times that those who were first, the Jews, who received the gospel first in former days, should be last in receiving it in the latter days; and those who were last in receiving the gospel in former days, namely, the Gentiles, shall be first in the latter days. So the gospel dispensation in the latter days was to the Gentiles first; and now our souls thrill when we think of the great labor that has been accomplished among the Gentile nations for nearly a hundred years. For it is a hundred years ago now since that light began to break forth, and finally came in its fulness, ten years later, when the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was established in the earth; and for all these many years, by thousands and tens of thousands, the elders of this Church have preached the gospel among the Gentile nations, and the blood of Israel hath been gathered out from the midst of the Gentiles, until the day of gleanings draweth nigh. There shall come a day when the Gentiles shall reject this gospel, they will close their doors against it. That will be the day when the wheat is gathered and when the salt of the earth is taken from among them. When that day comes they will care no more for the word of God, and they will close their doors against it. When that day comes then cometh the day of the redemption of Israel, and that day is nigh at hand. For, when the Gentiles shall begin to reject this word, Israel shall begin to receive it. We see the evidences of God's preparation for that great work of the redemption of Israel under way. Our souls were thrilled as we saw the armies of the Allies march through the land of Palestine, and break down the power that had held that land under its dominion, in cruelty, for ages.

THE JEWS NOW TURNING TOWARD JERUSALEM

Now our souls are thrilled to see our half brothers, the Jews, turning toward the land of promise; and for the first time since their long dispersion one of their own people, an orthodox Jew, is the ruler of the land of Palestine. The Jews will go there. God knows how to bring them. He did it in our case, and he knows how to bring them. They may say they will not go, but they will. The Lord will hedge up the way behind them, and he will open up the way before them, and unto his appointed place they shall go, in preparation for their conversion at the hands of the Master. For he shall come in the day of their trouble, to their deliverance. He will stand upon the Mount of Olives, which shall cleave in twain, and a valley shall open for their rescue from their oppressors; and when they come to the feet of their Deliverer they shall see the marks of the nails in his feet and in his hands, and shall say: "What are these wounds?" Then he shall say unto them: "I am Jesus Christ, who was crucified. These are the wounds I received in the house of my friends." Then shall a nation be converted in a day, and shall respond and become God's chosen people.

THE LAMANITES TO BE REMEMBERED

Then another part of the House of Israel, the children of Father Lehi shall not be forgotten, though they have long been in dispersion. A prophet of old, in the Book of Mormon, said that at the hands of the Gentiles they would suffer and be scattered, but again the Gentiles should become their blessing. I bear witness to you that God, through the Gentile nations, is preparing the Indians of this, the American continent, through their allotments of land, through their education, and in divers other ways, for the acceptance and living of his gospel, and the day of their redemption draweth nigh. The Lord said, in the third section of the Doctrine and Covenants, that for this very purpose the Book of Mormon was given to the Latter-day Saints, to bring to pass the redemption of Father Lehi's children, the Lamanites.

THE LOST TRIBES SHALL ALSO HEAR

Not only the Lamanites, but others of Israel shall hear—the lost tribes, to whom the Master said he would go, and they should hear his voice. My witness and testimony is that they are preparing themselves; that even now their prophets prophecy of their deliverance and are preparing that people. The mountains of ice shall flow down before them, and a highway shall be cast up, and they shall come forth with songs of everlasting joy, to be crowned at the hands of the children of Ephraim. These are only a few of the glorious things that are before us. It is for that purpose we are assembled here. Let us look upon the means which God has given us as only a means to an end, and not the end itself.

OUR POSITION, STATION AND PRIVILEGE

This is our station; this is our position. These are our privileges; and oh! when we look upon them in all their glory, how mean, how small, and how petty it seems to me for us to get down and quarrel with each other, and backbite, and slander, and fight over the petty little things, and forget the glorious purposes God had in bringing us here.

Now, the Lord keep our hearts upon his purpose and his mission for us, that we may be true unto him, and fail not to come unto the standard of perfection necessary to become the light of the world, the redeemers upon Mount Zion for Israel, the salt of the earth, the city set upon a hill, whose light shall shine forth to all men, and attract the good and the great from all nations, who shall come and say: "Let us go up unto the mountain of the house of the God of Jacob," for the light to the Gentiles is manifest, "and learn of her ways and walk in her paths," and become so perfect that we shall attract the attention of the angels of heaven; and the Lord Jesus Christ shall come again to live upon the earth among men, I humbly pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

At the close of Elder Ballard's sermon, President Grant proposed that out of love and respect to the prophet Joseph Smith, all the Latter-day Saints would like to arise and sing, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet." This was done with great spirit.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I had no idea of saying anything more at this conference, but after listening to the very splendid remarks of Elder Ballard, I desire to read a revelation given a year before the Church was organized.

REVELATION TO HYRUM SMITH AND COMMENTS THEREON

This revelation, among other things, says that it is not only for the man to whom it was given—Hyrum Smith, who was martyred with his brother, the Prophet Joseph Smith—but that it is to all of us, and therefore I desire to read it:

A great and marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men.

Behold, I am God, and give heed to my word, which is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of both joints and marrow; therefore give heed unto my words.

Behold the field is white already to harvest, therefore whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God;

Yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God;

Therefore, if you will ask of me you shall receive; if you will knock it shall be opened unto you.

I will say that Hryum Smith and many other men came to the Prophet Joseph, believing that he was in very deed a prophet, believing that God had chosen him to organize again the Church of Christ upon the earth, they came to him and asked: "What does the Lord desire at our hands?" And many of the revelations in the fore-part of the Doctrine and Covenants were given, before the organization of the Church, to individuals, in answer to this inquiry that they made of the prophet. This section I am reading is one of those revelations:

Therefore, if you will ask of me you shall receive; if you will knock it shall be opened unto you.

Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, keep my commandments.

THE KEY-NOTE OF THIS CONFERENCE

Remember, ye Latter-day Saints, that that is the key-note of this conference.

Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion, Seek not for riches, but for wisdom, and behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich. Behold, he that hath eternal life is rich.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, even as you desire of me, so it shall be done unto you; and if you desire, you shall be the means of doing much good in this generation.

TRIBUTE TO HYRUM SMITH

No mortal man who ever lived in this Church desired more to do good than did Hyrum Smith, the patriarch. I have it from the lips of my own sainted mother, that of all the men she was acquainted with in her girlhood days in Nauvoo, she admired Hyrum Smith most for his absolute integrity and devotion to God, and his loyalty to the prophet of God. And God honored that man by allowing to come from his loins the late beloved President Joseph F. Smith.

The devil, through his emissaries, thought to destroy this Church by having them kill the prophet and the patriarch; but the son of the patriarch lived to be the Prophet of the living God, and his great-grandson sits here today as the Presiding Patriarch of the Church. Nothing can be done by the people of the world to retard the progress of the work of God. Murder and all that has been done against the Latter-day Saints has had no effect whatever. The work of God has gone steadily on from the day that the Church was organized with only six members.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, even as you desire of me, so it shall be done unto you; and if you desire, you shall be the means of doing much good in this generation.

Say nothing but repentance unto this generation: keep my commandments, and assist to bring forth my work, according to my commandments, and you shall be blessed. * * *

Behold thou hast a gift, or thou shalt have a gift if thou wilt desire of me in faith, with an honest heart, believing in the power of Jesus Christ, or in my power which speaketh unto thee:

For, behold, it is I that speak; behold, I am the light which shineth in darkness, and by my power I give these words unto thee.

And now, verily, verily, I say unto thee, put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good; yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit.

No man in all the Church put his trust in that Spirit more perfectly than did Hyrum Smith, or than did his son, the late prophet, Joseph F. Smith.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, I will impart unto you of my Spirit; which shall enlighten your mind, which shall fill your soul with joy.

And then shall ye know, or by this shall you know all things whatsoever you desire of me, which are pertaining unto things of righteousness, in faith believing in me that you shall receive.

Behold, I command you, that you need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called.

Remember, the Church was not yet organized.

Wait a little longer, until you shall have my word, my rock, my church, and my gospel, that you may know of a surety my doctrine;

And then behold, according to your desires, yea, even according to your faith, shall it be done unto you. * * *

Keep my commandments, hold your peace, appeal unto my Spirit.

Yea, cleave unto me with all your heart, that you may assist in bringing to light those things of which have been spoken; yea, the translation of my work; be patient until you shall accomplish it.

The work of the translation of the inspired record, the Book of Mormon, was in progress at the time of the giving of this revelation. "Behold, this is your work," and it is the work of all the Latter-day Saints:

Behold, this is your work, to keep my commandments, yea, with all your might, mind, and strength;

Seek not to declare my word, but first seek to obtain my word, and then shall your tongue be loosed; then, if you desire, you shall have my Spirit and my word, yea the power of God unto the convincing of men;

But now hold your peace, study my word which hath gone forth among the children of men, and also study my word which shall come forth among the children of men, or that which is now translating, yea, until you have obtained all which I shall grant unto the children of men in this generation, and then shall all things be added thereunto.

Behold, thou art Hyrum, my son, seek the kingdom of God, and all things shall be added according to that which is just.

Build upon my rock, which is my gospel;

Deny not the Spirit of revelation, nor the Spirit of prophecy, for woe unto him that denieth these things;

Therefore, treasure up in your heart until the time which is in my wisdom that you shall go forth.

Behold, I speak unto all who have good desires, and have thrust in their sickle to reap. (Doctrine and Covenants Secs. 6 and 11.)

THE SAINTS EXPECTED TO STUDY THIS REVELATION

Read this revelation, ye Latter-day Saints, over and over again, because it applies to you; and time and time again you will find that the Lord Jesus Christ, who gave this revelation, repeats himself in saying: "Keep my commandments."

Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the life and the light of the world.

I am the same who came unto my own and my own received me not;

But verily, verily, I say unto you, that as many as receive me, to them will I give power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on my name. Amen.

We will now ask Brother Joseph W. McMurrin to speak to us briefly. Brother McMurrin has proclaimed this gospel of Jesus Christ on three separate and distinct missions in Europe. He is now proclaiming the gospel as the President of the California mission.

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

(Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the California Mission)

My heart has been made exceedingly glad, my brethren and sisters, in listening to the doctrines of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as they have been expounded by the brethren of the presiding authorities of the Church who have been called upon, during the sessions of this conference, to bear record concerning the truth. I thank the Lord, my brethren and sisters, that I have the opportunity of being present in this great gathering, and I am glad in my soul for the joy that is in my heart in connection with the wonderful purposes of Almighty God as they are being wrought out among the inhabitants of the earth, and among the people also who have given allegiance to the work of the Lord, and who have come up from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south, in response to the call that has been made by the Redeemer of the world through the glorious gospel that has been restored in this last dispensation.

It has already been stated, my brethren and sisters, that it is my good fortune at the present time to be laboring in the missionary field, in the California mission. The California mission covers the state of California, and portions of the state of Nevada, and portions of the state of Arizona. We have about thirty branches of the Church in these three states. The great bulk of the Church population resides in the state of California. California is not made up of people who are seeking, to any very great degree, to find the message of the everlasting gospel. There are, however, many very good men and women to be found in the state. Sometimes when our missionaries are attending to their missionary labors, going from home to home, seeking opportunity to present the precious principles of the gospel, they are asked: "Why are you coming here? We do not need your services. We have an abundance of churches, many educated ministers, and there is no room or place for you here. Why do you not go with the message that you say you have, to the people who are in darkness, to the heathen nations of the world?" We are striving to impress upon the minds of men and women with whom we come in contact, that the gospel message, as it has been revealed in this dispensation, is just as it has been declared to be by inspired men who, lit up by divine inspiration, have said that the gospel should be preached in all the world, to every nation, and to every kindred, to every tongue and to every people. We are under obligation not only to carry the gospel to those who live in heathen nations, but we are under like obligation to carry the gospel to every nation and to every people upon the face of the whole earth.

We are trying to impress upon the missionaries, the young men and young women who have been appointed from time to time, to take up their ministry in the California mission, that they are under a very serious responsibility, and that it is their right to know and feel that they have been called, not by bishops, not by presidents, not by apostles, to be ministers of salvation, but that they have been called by the Lord God of heaven to represent him in the preaching of the gospel in the California mission, and that they should dedicate to the Lord our God, their time and means and their talents. We teach them that they should seek unto our Father in heaven, by right living, and by humble and secret prayer, that they may have the companionship of that Spirit that can take of the things of the Father and reveal them unto men. We are trying to impress upon their minds that the gospel of the Redeemer of the world cannot be taught acceptably to our Father in heaven in the enticing words of man's wisdom, but that it must be taught and can only be taught satisfactorily to the Lord, in the power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit. We are trying to tell men and women everywhere, who are not of our faith, that the Lord Jesus Christ is the Son of the living God, that he is the author of salvation, and the only source of divine authority, and that in fulfillment of the promises that have been made by holy prophets in all past dispensations, the divine authority essential to the preaching of the gospel and administering in its holy ordinances has again been revealed by the Lord our God in this the dispensation of the fulness of times.

We are trying to bear record of the truth, but we are not building up men. We are in no way trying to exalt the names of men, but we are trying to advance and magnify the gospel of the Redeemer, which is the power of God unto salvation. As we bear this record concerning the wonderful things of the Lord Jesus Christ and his restored gospel, we also feel that we are under obligation, because of the commandment of God, to bear record to the wonderful mission of the prophet and disciple and apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, Joseph Smith, for we feel and know in our hearts that God has placed this responsibility upon us, and that we must tell the inhabitants of the earth, wherever our lot may be cast, that the Lord Almighty has chosen as his instrument, Joseph Smith, to reintroduce in the latter time, the precious principles of the everlasting gospel.

We are trying to impress upon men that they cannot be saved by simply declaring with their lips the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, but that they must do, as he has taught, as has been advocated in this conference. Men must not only be hearers of the word, but they must be doers also. We are trying to impress upon men the necessity of repentance, to turn away from the evils that are in the world, and from all improper conduct and give their hearts and their time and their attention to the Lord Jesus Christ, repenting in very deed of their sins, but turning away from all sinful conduct. We are trying to impress upon men the importance of the principle of baptism, the principle that has been given by the Lord our God whereby men can receive a remission of their sins. Baptism, to the world, is a mystery. Most men are unable to conceive the necessity or the advantage of this great principle that has been given of God whereby men may be made members of the Church of Christ, and receive a remission of their sins, and by this act of humble obedience be fitted to enter into the kingdom of God. We are trying to bear record to our father's children that they can only comprehend and understand the message of the everlasting gospel by the power of the Holy Ghost, and that they can only be in possession of the Holy Ghost by yielding obedience to the principles that have been revealed. The companionship of the Holy Ghost can only be received by the laying on of hands. We are trying to bear record to the people that men cannot call themselves to preach the gospel, but that they must be called by the Almighty; they cannot assume to take this authority unto themselves, but they must be ordained by revelation, and by prophecy, and by the laying on of hands.

I am glad to say God fills our souls with joy and peace and contentment as we strive to preach these principles among the people, and he increases upon us, testimony, understanding and knowledge concerning his wonderful purposes. I am glad to bring up to you fathers and mothers assembled in this conference the glad news that your sons and daughters believe the message of the everlasting gospel, and that they are consecrating their time and their lives to advocate the principles of salvation, and to reach the hearts of men with the message that has been committed into their hands.

I would that men who are in authority and who select missionaries and recommend them to the Presidency of the Church, would sense more fully the great responsibility that rests upon the people of the Latter-day Saints in the preaching of the gospel, and that they would not only call the boys and girls—thank God for all of these young men and women—but oh, that there might be called into the mission field men of experience, thirty or forty years of age, men who have had experience in teaching the gospel, that they might be a help and a succor, and a sustaining power to the youth of Israel who respond so generally and so cheerfully to these missionary appointments.

I am glad with you, my brethren and sisters, in the work of God. I believe in it from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet. I have confidence that all the promises of the Lord our God will be fulfilled, no matter how marvelous they may appear, or how past possibility they may seem in the minds of men. They will all be brought to pass. God has so decreed and he has the power to fulfil his decrees and his promises. God help us to believe the promises that have been made and to yield obedience to the commandments of God, and may we be under the constant guidance of that kind, forgiving, glorious Spirit that belongs to the gospel of the Redeemer of the world, I humbly pray, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

No more diligent, faithful, inspiring mission president have I ever been associated with than Elder Serge F. Ballif, while presiding over the Swiss and German mission. He has been called to go back again to that country. The gospel found his father there and he gave up a place as a preacher, I understand, to come here and labor for his livelihood in this land as a Latter-day Saint. We will now hear from the new president of the Swiss and German mission, Elder Serge F. Ballif.

ELDER SERGE F. BALLIF

(Newly appointed President of the Swiss and German Mission)

My beloved brethren and sisters: I say "beloved brethren and sisters" because we are all here born into the kingdom of God through baptism, by faith and by a knowledge which we have received from heaven of this great work that has been restored in our day, and therefore I say, we are all brothers and sisters, children of our heavenly Father. I am grateful from the very bottom of my heart that I have a standing in the Church and Kingdom of God. I thank the Lord for the knowledge of the gospel which I have received, and I know beyond all question of doubt that the gospel of Jesus Christ is true.

As intimated by President Grant, I have spent a great deal of time in the mission field. Since 1890, I have devoted a great part of my time to missionary work. I have traveled in all the provinces of Germany, of Austria, Hungary, Switzerland and France. I have borne my testimony before the authorities of those lands; I have borne my testimony before kings; and I can say to you, my brethren and sisters, that I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I know it is the power of God unto salvation, to all those who hear and render obedience unto its principles.

I feel to say this morning, as the Savior said when he was talking to his people and one of his servants said:

Thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee.

But he answered and said unto him that told him, Who is^e my mother? and who are my brethren?

And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren!

For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.

I feel today that those who are keeping the commandments of God, they are my brethren, they are my sisters in very deed.

While I was laboring in my last mission, I never will forget the time when a great conference was called in Berne, the capital of Switzerland, and the president of this Church—the prophet, seer and revelator, Joseph F. Smith—met with us in that conference. In speaking to that people, he held out his hand and said: “The time will come when this land will be dotted with temples, where you can go and redeem your dead.” I thank God from the bottom of my heart that I have been called again to go into that land, I want to do my mite to bring about the fulfilment of the prophecy by President Joseph F. Smith in the capital of Switzerland. I believe it with all my heart, that soon the time will come when there will be temples erected in that land of Switzerland, and I also believe, my brethren and sisters, that there is no greater mission in all the world today than the mission of preaching the gospel in continental Europe. I have traveled in all the provinces of Germany. I know the meek and lowly of Germany; and notwithstanding the great troubles, and the great bloodshed in those lands, during the last few years, I want to say to you that you will find the blood of Israel among the people in those provinces. I say that there will be a great and a mighty work accomplished in that land. I wish to say, also, that I go to Germany to represent you, and I want to represent you honorably and nobly. In turn, I want you, as my brethren and sisters, to support me in that land, that I may be faithful, that I may keep the commandments of God, that I may set an example that will be worthy of emulation; that I can say to those people: “The people of Utah are serving God and keeping his commandments.” That is the greatest testimony that I can give. I wish to say to that people that we are observing the Word of Wisdom, the word of God, that we are paying our tithes and our offerings. I want to say to them that we are laboring in the temples of God to redeem our dead. I want to say to those people that there is love and harmony among the Latter-day Saints; that they are a unit; that they support, with all their might, mind and strength, the authorities of this Church, from the head to the very last ordained member; that the spirit of love, the spirit of peace, the spirit of harmony is found among the Saints in Zion, and not the spirit of criticism or fault-finding, but that they are a united people. We are all laboring for one common purpose, and that is to establish the Kingdom of God, here upon the earth.

One more thing I want to say. When the Savior was preaching and ministering among his people, the sick were healed, the lame walked, the blind were made to see under his hands; and when he called his twelve apostles he set them apart and ordained them; he gave them power to heal the sick and to accomplish the mission that he had begun; and he said: "I send you out without money, without price. Freely you have received, freely you shall impart." When you send your young men into the mission field, I want to ask you, my brethren and sisters, to instil into their souls the principles of the gospel, which will be worth more to them than unlimited means; and by so doing you will help to build them up in their testimonies and knowledge, that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world, and that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God. I do not care whether they have a dollar in their pockets or not; if they have only that spirit burning in their bosom, God will open the way before them. There will be friends raised up to them; they will accomplish a great and a mighty work, and the people in those lands will receive them with open arms. While, on the other hand, if you send them out there with their pockets filled with money, you know what they will do; I do not need to tell you. With all my soul I believe in preaching the gospel without money and without price. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and I am willing to put my trust in the Lord. I will promise you, my brethren and sisters, that I never will ask one of your boys, in the mission field, to do one thing that I will not do myself, with them, with the help of the Lord. God bless the Latter-day Saints. May we be united in keeping his commandments is my prayer, and I ask it, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang the beautiful anthem composed by Evan Stephens, "Let the mountains shout for joy."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Edward H. Snow, President of the St. George Stake of Zion.

The congregation adjourned until 2 o'clock.

FIRST OVERFLOW MEETING

An overflow meeting of the conference was held in the Assembly Hall at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, October 10, presided over by Elder Geo. F. Richards, of the Council of the Twelve. The singing and music were furnished by the Cottonwood Stake choir under the direction of Elder W. F. Robinson, Miss Bernnetta Lindsey, accompanist.

The choir and congregation sang, "Redeemer of Israel, our only delight."

Prayer was offered by Elder Arthur F. Barnes of the Salt Lake stake High Council.

The choir sang, "Dream of Paradise," solo by Elder Manassa Smith.

ELDER NEPHI JENSEN

(President of the Canadian Mission)

My brothers and sisters, I am deeply thankful for this opportunity of coming to Zion to worship our God with you. I am thankful for the opportunity of listening to the sweet singing of the choir this morning. In my heart I pray that the sweet spirit which has actuated the singers will actuate me in what I shall say to you. I want to say the thing that ought to be said; I want to speak the words that will help you and help me to a better and deeper appreciation of the truth which God has revealed to us in the day and time in which we live, for I do know in my heart that the gospel of Jesus Christ is true, I know it is the power of God unto salvation; and the dearest desire of my heart, at this time, is to impress the children of men with the truthfulness of the gospel which has come to us as our greatest heritage.

My heart has often been touched when I have been made aware of the bad name which our people have been given in the world. Just a few weeks ago, one of our lady missionaries in Canada went to a home in Toronto with the view of offering to the people of that home the Pearl of Great Price. When she made known to the folks that she was a "Mormon," the lady of the house sneered at her and scorned her, and said, "I would rather feed a criminal than feed a 'Mormon.'"

When that young girl came to the mission home, and made a report of her experience, I was deeply touched in my heart, and I resolved that I would use the humble talent given to me in writing and in speaking the defense of the best people in the world. And since coming home I have been deeply grieved to find that, even here, some of us so far forget ourselves as to be guilty of the crime which has been responsible for placing upon the fair brow of our religion the hideous mask; I refer to the crime of slander. Our people have suffered as no people have suffered since the days of the ancient Saints because of the crime of slander, and I do hope and pray that this sin shall not creep in among us. I do hope and pray that we will remember the noble words of the great Shakespeare: "Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'twas mine, tis his, and has been slave to thousands; but he that filches from me my good name, robs me of that which not enriches him, but makes me poor indeed." These are noble words. They are as true as anything that ever was written, and I have taken pleasure in quoting these words in the mission in which I work, and I commend them to Israel at home. When I have met the slanderers of our people and our faith, I have often said I would rather be a ghoul, a graverobber, and scratch around among dead bones and steal grave clothes than rob people of their good name. I want to tell you that there is nothing so small, so ignoble as the disposition to want to magnify other men's faults. There is nothing that so soon brands a person as a small and ignoble soul as the desire to make out other people bad.

A few evenings ago I spoke in the open air near the city hall in the great city of Toronto. While I was speaking, a man in the crowd who had a grudge against the "Mormons," and especially against that grand and great man Brigham Young, shouted out while I was speaking, "What about Brigham Young?"

My feathers were up immediately, and I said, Brigham Young was a grand man; he redeemed a wilderness, he built an empire, and endowed colleges and universities, and if he should be talking to us today, to the little souls who are barking at his heels, he would be apt to say, "I don't mind being swallowed by a whale, but I do hate to be nibbled to death by minnows." And after all is said, it is only small dogs that bark at the heels of our people in the hope of making them bad.

I was deeply touched last night in meeting with a friend who, immediately upon my mention of some prominent men in this city who have given their lives to the service of God and the uplift of this people, spoke in disparagement of those men. Every time we do that sort of thing we condemn ourselves, for the Apostle Paul, in his letter to the Romans, said: "Therefore, thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest, for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things." I commend to you these inspired words of the Apostle Paul, and I commend to you also a motto which I saw in Chicago recently upon a great bill board: "Throw away your hammer and get a horn. Knockers never did themselves or anybody else any good."

Now I feel that I have talked as long as I ought to. I want to say that I rejoice with all my heart in the knowledge I have of the divinity of this work. I know that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, and I know that Heber J. Grant is a prophet of God, as I know that light is light. So I know that great man is God's prophet, for I know that during the last year, the promise which he sealed upon my head, when he set me apart to labor in the Canadian mission, has come true; and I testify to you that God Almighty is with that man, and does sustain him and uphold him by the power of the Holy Ghost. God bless you. Amen.

ELDER REY L. PRATT

I am very grateful, my brethren and sisters, that I have the privilege of attending this conference. I am thankful to the Lord that we have inspired men to teach us the principles of the gospel, and I am more grateful than I could possibly express for the gospel, that has been restored to us in these days in which we live. I am thankful to the Lord for the gifts and the blessings of it.

I am thankful to the Lord that I have a testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel, and that the power of the Priesthood is upon the earth today; and I know as I know that I live that the men who stand today at the head of the Church are men endowed with the power of the Lord, and they are in very deed prophets, seers and revelators unto the people.

I should like to read to you the words of the Savior, for we believe that the gospel restored to us is none other than that set up by him when he ministered among men here upon the earth, and I believe that the same powers and the same gifts and the same blessings follow those who believe and those who minister in his name and by his power. After he had appeared unto his apostles he gave unto them a commandment, as follows:

And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

We as a people stand up and bear this message and this testimony in the world. Your sons and your daughters, many of them, are today in the world crying repentance to the children of men, and they are fearless and are boldly declaring to the people that if they will believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, have faith in him, and repent of their sins, and be baptized, they will be saved. And just so fearlessly and firmly do they declare that if they will not do so, they will come under the condemnation of the Lord. I believe, my brethren and sisters, that there is no other system in the world, no other plan, no gospel given to man save that which we have that is "the power of God unto salvation." And we declare to the people of the world that these signs spoken of here by the Savior shall follow the believer, and I am a witness to you today that these things are true. The people of the world among whom we labor believe that the signs followed the believers in days of old. They believe in the miracles recorded in the Bible, in the New Testament; but men are wont to tell us in this day that we are not living in a day when these powers are made manifest unto the children of men. They believe that the apostles of old had great powers, and ministered unto the restoring of people to health and strength; that the blind were made to see, the deaf to hear, the dumb to speak, and the lame to walk; but when we tell them that these things are a part of the gospel to us, they are skeptical, and they do not believe, and they do not have faith sufficient to bring these things down upon their heads for their blessing. They believe that the Lord's hand has been shortened and his power has been lessened. But I am glad to say that we can witness before them that these things do exist in the world today through the gospel, as it has been restored and as we enjoy it. There is an account here, in the third chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, of a remarkable healing, that I would like to read to you. This is accepted and believed by the people of the world, I think, because it happened so long ago:

Now Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour. And a certain man lame from his mother's womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple; who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple asked an alms. And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John, said, Look on us. And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them. Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk. And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up; and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength. And he leaping up stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God. And they knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple; and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering. And when Peter saw it, he answered unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk. The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go.

As I say, the world believe that this man, although paralyzed, was restored so that he walked with the brethren who had restored him, by the power of God. Now, do we believe—that is the vital point for us to consider that the same power that rested upon these men exists in the Church today? When our little ones are sick, when sickness comes into the homes, can we call upon the elders with the same faith as evidenced here, believing firmly that the prayer of faith will heal the sick? Time will not permit me to speak long, but I want to bear you my witness, I have seen many manifestations of the healing power of the Lord.

I recall an incident in far off Mexico, where a little girl came into the presence of the elders, having suffered from smallpox, and as a result of that dread disease, a white film had grown over one of her eyes, causing total blindness in it. The elders administered to her and they testify that when she left them, the afflicted eye was as clear as the other one.

Last June I was visiting the elders in the city of Laredo, Texas. On Sunday night we held a meeting in a hall we had rented, there being about eighty in attendance, and as Elder Pierce, the presiding elder, was speaking, I noticed a little confusion at the door, and as I looked more closely, saw that it was two persons supporting a man who was paralyzed, and bringing him into the meeting. They placed him on a rear seat, and all listened attentively till the meeting was out. Soon after the meeting was over, all those who had attended dispersed, with the exception of the man referred to and those who had brought him. I approached them and asked them what it was they wished, and one of the men who had helped to bring in the sick man replied:

We have heard the teachings of these young elders and the claims by them made that the signs shall follow the believers in the gospel which they teach, and we believe what these elders have told us, and that they are endowed with power to lay hands upon the sick and they shall recover. It is our wish that you should lay hands upon this paralyzed man and bless him.

The case looked to be a very hopeless one to me, but I said to the elders, "Brethren, the Lord has said that these things can be done, so let us exercise all the faith we can."

So we gathered around the man and blessed him, after which we put him in his wagon and sent him on his way home.

The next night we held meeting in the same place with about the same sized crowd present. This night the sick man was again present, but came before the services started, and I spoke to him, asking him how he felt, to which he replied, "I feel much better." I am sure I could not see wherein he looked any better, but I have no doubt that even then the Spirit of the Lord was operating in him and that he did really feel better. After the meeting we again blessed him.

The next day I left Laredo, visiting in other parts of the mission, and it was ten days before I returned home. On reaching home and looking over my mail, I found a letter from one of the elders in Laredo who had assisted in administering to the sick man. He asked, "Do you remember the paralyzed man? We have found that he was stricken a year ago, and during that time he has not been able to stand alone or to walk, but today he is walking all over."

Brethren and sisters, that did not happen 2,000 years ago, but it was only three months ago. Peter said to the people who marveled when they witnessed the wonderful healing of the paralyzed man at the temple gate that it was not by his power, nor that of his brethren that it had been done, but that once again the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob had manifested his power through his Son, Jesus Christ. So it was in the case I have related. It was not by my power, nor by the power of my brethren, but by the power of the Holy Priesthood that the paralyzed man was made well. God had once again made manifest his power through the Holy Priesthood and through his Son, Jesus Christ, in the healing of that man. I testify that this is true. About a month ago I visited Laredo again and learned that the sick man, subsequent to his healing had been baptized a member of the Church. He was not so wholly cured that he was able to walk without a cane, but had been walking with the assistance of a cane.

On my last visit he asked that we administer to him again and after we had done so, he said, "I feel that I can now walk without the assistance of this cane," and he left the hall walking straight to the door with no assistance, very much to the surprise of all those who saw him.

I call your attention to these circumstances in order that our faith may be renewed, and that we may believe that the Lord is the same yesterday, today and forever, and that there is no change, no variation, in him, and that his power and blessings may be made manifest wherever the faith of the people is sufficient to call down these blessings upon their heads. I testify that the Holy Priesthood, by which these things are done, is upon the earth today, just as much as it ever was.

I have a clipping here from the Cosmopolitan magazine for the month of August, dealing with this subject which seems to be troubling the minds of some people, and the writer of this article asks, Why is it that we do not find in the religious world today, a manifestation of the power of God in the healing of the sick and in the revealing of his mind and will to man? Why is it that Elijah, Moses and the prophets of old, were able to see beyond the veil and tell the people what they saw, and to do other wonderful and mighty things which modern ministers say cannot be done? He asked the religious world some very perplexing questions which I think would do them good to contemplate seriously. Speaking of the example cited, he said:

"While these examples may not be of gifts we should class as psychic, they are instances of power. If the Old Testament is to be taken seriously, man was once in control of universal law beyond the point at which he stands today. But as I have stated, what was once a law is still a law, and if things were ever done, they can be done gain. The question naturally arises here as to whether the Old Testament is to be taken seriously or not. If it is not, then its mass of evidence as to universal powers once in the possession of man is worthless. But my appeal in the present series of articles is to those who believe the Old Testament to be the inspired word of truth. If that is so, how are these declarations of power, love, and the sound mind to be treated? Are they to be flatly denied, or deprived of substance by being explained away, or taken as historic? Either man had these powers or he had not. If he had not, shut the Old Testament and banish it from the churches. But if he had, why not seek to recover them? If Moses or Joshua or Peter or Paul of two or three thousand years ago could see beyond the material veil, and tell us what they saw, why cannot the Moses or Joshua or Peter or Paul of the twentieth century do the same? Has it not become a matter of life and death to the whole Christian system that it should demonstrate its possession of power and love and the sound mind by deeds rather than by declarations?"

I ask, can not the power of God today work the same miracles that it could in the days of old? I maintain that it can, and truly it seems to me that it has become a matter of life and death to the whole Christian system to demonstrate that it is in possession of this power, and I maintain that if the religious systems of the world continue without incorporating into their systems this power, their whole system will crumble under them and come to naught.

I maintain that the Peters and the Pauls and the Joshuas and the Moses of this dispensation, as represented in the leaders of this Church, are endowed with power to look beyond the veil and to reveal to the children of men the thing that the Lord would have them know, and also to work through faith the same mighty miracles that were wrought through the Priesthood by those who held it in times that are past. And I testify that the signs spoken of by the Savior of the world, will follow those who truly believe, in this day, just as much as in the time when the Savior himself, was upon the earth.

The Lord bless you. Amen.

ELDER HEBER C. IVERSON

(President of the Northwestern States Mission)

My beloved brethren and sisters, when I look into your honest, eager faces, I feel the sincere desire of your heart for the word of God and his message to you. I am overwhelmed with my own inability, weakness and dependence upon him, and trust, most sincerely, that if such message shall be delivered to you through me, I may enjoy the spirit thereof to the honor and glory of his name.

You, who were privileged to attend the opening session of our conference, I am sure, you can say with me that it was a glorious event, and the glory of it has continued up to the present moment. My soul was overwhelmed with gratitude to God for the blessings therein obtained, and has since that time been filled with unspeakable joy. When President Grant announced to the audience the keynote of the conference, that it should be the love of God, which includes, necessarily, the love of fellow man, the spirit of truth and forgiveness, which is God-love; and when, with power befitting a prophet of God, he delivered to us his message, my soul was thrilled, and in my heart I said:

We thank thee, O God, for a prophet,
To guide us in these latter days;

We thank thee for sending the gospel
To lighten our minds with its rays.

My favorite theme, my favorite scriptures, have been quoted during this conference. To my heart there is no thought more sublime than the love of God as evidenced in the love of his Son and manifest in those who possess his Spirit. "For the fruit of the spirit," says Paul, is "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith;" and inspiring in others love for their fellow man, the spirit of peace, in their souls, the gift of faith and of longsuffering. They are inspired by God's Spirit. How definitely the Lord declared this important principle when to him there came the lawyer, asking: "Master, which is the great commandment in the law." Remember his words: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Nay, upon the first, we might say without being presumptuous, hang all the law and the prophets, because the second is contained therein; for by the same Master these words were spoken: "If a man say, I love God, and hate his brother (mark the strong language employed), he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" Hypocrisy, the spirit of the Pharisee, was most contemptible in the estimation of the Master, and brought forth such strong condemnation in such forceful language as he was not wont to use. Again he said, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye shall love one another; and hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples, because ye love one another."

An invariable evidence of discipleship of Christ is love for our fellow men. And to me these commandments are just as important, just as absolute as the commandment, "Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." for into God's presence no man can go with hatred in his heart toward his fellow men; for, "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of my little ones, ye have done it unto me," with which we receive the illustration of the interpretation, no man loves his God more than he loves his fellow man; no man will serve his God more than he is willing to serve and bless his fellow men, for in this way only we evidence to him our love for him.

Upon my soul there has been a serious thought, and I must refer to it only, it is closely related to the thought of love of mankind, I fear that modern tendencies are drifting from that principle. I fear that most sacred institution, the home, is suffering greatly at the hands of the people of the world. And to our own people, I make a plea here. Among the many wholesome slogans that have been given to us may I be presumptuous enough to add one other—"Back to the Home." You no doubt have observed the tendency to stray from the home, and it was emphasized in the experience of the recent past, when into the ranks of the nation's defense were called our sons and our brothers, and in the avenues of commercial activities were called our daughters and our sisters; there they received magnificent salaries with which they could secure to themselves not only a good living, but many of the luxuries their hearts desired. To return to the simple duties of home has been a difficult task for many of our dear girls, and yet the noblest task that ever was laid upon the children of God. The immortal Roosevelt said: "No work, I care not how important it may seem to be, whether in church or state, in science or philosophy, begins to compare with that done in the home, by the father and the mother, who are the first of sovereigns and the divinest of priests."

What is home? The best definition I ever read is this: "The place where mother is," be it a mansion or a humble cottage, a tent upon the desert sands; where the mother and her little ones, immortal souls, dwell, that is home. Therein is kept the first commandment given of God to our father and to his wife, our mother, in the garden of Eden, and because of its importance it came first. "Neither can we without our children be made perfect, nor they without us," and I decry with all the power of my soul, the abominable practice that has gone abroad, that form of murder known as race suicide. I was astonished when a good woman who has charge of one of our young ladies' associations told me that some of our girls belonging to the best families, noble girls, have had their minds poisoned concerning this matter to the extent that they had come to look upon criminal operations as little less than having a tooth treated or drawn.

I think perhaps I can do no better than to read an article, because it has become a subject of very sincere consideration by thinking men of the world. This article is taken from a Denver paper, and to President Knight I am obligated for possession of it, on the question of marriage and divorce and kindred evils. I shall take time to read an article on "the modern tendencies" which are strongly attacked by another thinking man, for it is evident that lying at the foundation of these evils is the deadly sin against which the Prophet Joseph F. Smith sounded a warning voice just shortly before his death; in his statement that "the dominant evil of the age is unchastity," it is evidenced in so many ways, the spirit of it, is everywhere. To your attention I call this article:

"With science giving the shrug of doubt as to the existence of God, with law courts grinding out divorces and nauseum, with passing literature that finds it pays to portray characters reeking with moral shame and condoning the offense, with young and old gone mad over the lurid motion film, with the drama depraved in spite of heroic efforts of the many who patronize and love the clean play, with the daily press mirroring the crimes and sins of society, with feminine dress mocking at decency and modesty, with ever-decreasing respect for authority and reverence for the flag of our country, where is the power, who has the wisdom, where is the salvation of the youth of our land?

"When Luther repudiated the sacramental idea of marriage he struck a blow at the family and set to work forces which today are placing the home in serious jeopardy.

"Marriage, divested of its religious character and reduced to the condition of a pure civil contract, voidable at will, has become the plaything of the passions, and if those bonds are severed, the family is broken asunder, children are born by later unions, to one or both of the parents, and the family is torn from its true relationships. O, what a mockery! What a travesty of what St. Paul called, 'A great sacrament in Christ and in the Church.' And yet the world in which we live not only condones the evil of those who are guilty of this mockery, but admits them freely in the charmed circle of society. It repels with high disdain the poor Magdalene whom the Savior himself pardoned, but it honors with special friendship the Herods and their consorts. It is high time for society to outlaw such sacriligious profaners and offenders to Christian decency.

"The pagans of old cast their infants from the Tarpeian rock, immolated them before the idol of Molock, but they had not learned the refinement of crime to which their modern devotees are addicted—birth control. There are women who profess to be Christians who are forever going about poisoning the minds and hearts of every young bride they can reach with the venom of their hell-flamed tongues, advising them to forestall the laws of nature and nature's God by preventing the conception, and birth and the rearing of children. Oh, Herod, Herod! what a tyro you were. The modern husband and wife have put you to shame in the damning sin of the 'slaughter of the innocents'. They tell us it is a crime to bring children into the world in poverty, but why be hypocrites? If poverty be the cause, how happens it that the evil flourishes most among the wealthy. Not long since there was a gathering of fashionable women in this very city. Among them were six women who boasted of eighteen husbands. The eighteen husbands and six wives boasted of four children, two of whom were weak-minded."

There is a condition against which we Latter-day Saints, who have taken upon us the name of Jesus Christ and made covenants with our God, must set our faces as flint. And, oh, that woman who denies herself the glory of motherhood, the crown of the celestial glory which none other shall transcend, truly knows not what she does. "A partnership with God is motherhood. What purity, what love, what self-control should belong to her who helps God fashion an immortal soul." Can you think of any glory that can come to one greater than to enter into an actual partnership with God our Father and the Father of our children, and to be in sacred nearness to him in the guidance of those immortal, precious souls!

God help us to know our duty and to do it, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN M. KNIGHT

(President of the Western States Mission and of Ensign Stake)

"Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are whom ye list to obey, whether of sin unto death, or obedience unto righteousness." This scripture has borne itself upon my soul as I have listened to the instructions received from our presiding brethren. There are two great forces working in the world, the forces of evil and of righteousness, or the powers of sin and the powers of God.

I have been very much impressed with the sessions of this conference, and I shall leave this place with my face towards the rising sun, and my heart against doing the things against which our leaders have spoken. I believe there is no thing that will destroy the faith of the Latter-day Saints so much as criticism of the Presidency of the Church, or the presiding authority of the Church, and in the stakes of Zion, over one of which I have the privilege and honor to preside, I have raised my voice against these damning practices; and I believe that it will undermine the faith of the young people of Zion if they indulge in these things.

Permit me to read to you from the Book of Mormon. Alma, that mighty prophet of the living God who declares repentance to the people of this great nation, a thousand years and more ago, found the same condition prevailing among the people of that day and time, and he raised his voice in protest against it. I realize that it is time when we should instil into the hearts of our young people the love of God, a love for their fellow men, a love for the gospel of the Master. And I believe, in order to do that, we should be exemplary in our lives, that we should have in our souls a testimony of the truth, and we should endeavor to surround the youth with the influences of the gospel of the Master, and to hedge up the way that the power of the adversary shall not overcome them in their lives. Alma, you will remember, desired that he might have the voice of an angel to declare repentance unto the ends of the earth, and then he says:

I ought not to harrow up in my desires, the firm decree of a just God, for I know that he granteth unto men according to their desire, whether it be unto death or unto life; yea I know that he allotteth unto men, according to their wills; whether they be unto salvation or unto destruction. Yea, and I know that good and evil have come before all men; or he that knoweth not good from evil is blameless; but he that knoweth good and evil, to him it is given according to his desires; whether he desireth good or evil, life or death, joy or remorse of conscience. Now seeing that I know these things, why should I desire more than to perform the work to which I have been called? Why should I desire that I was an angel, that I could speak unto all the ends of the earth? For behold, the Lord doth grant unto all nations, of their own nation and tongue, to teach his word; yea, in wisdom, all that he seeth fit that they should have; therefore we see that the Lord doth counsel in wisdom, according to that which is just and true. I know that which the Lord hath commanded me, and I glory in it; I do not glory of myself, but I glory in that which the Lord hath commanded me; yea, and this is my glory, that perhaps I may be an instrument in the hands of God, to bring some soul to repentance; and this is my joy.

I care not, my brethren and sisters, how much opposition comes from without. We meet opposition in the Western States. There are men and women who, in the language that has been quoted by Elder Iverson, used by the reverend gentleman in a discourse in Denver, "with their hell-flamed tongues are poisoning the minds of the people" against this thing that is known as "Mormonism;" but all the powers of darkness and of earth and hell combined cannot stay the onward progress of the work of God. He has set his hand the last time to accomplish his purposes in the earth, to establish the truth, and to bring to pass his righteousness, and there is no power that can stay its progress. It is destined to go on until it fulfills its destiny in the earth. But there is danger when there is internal strife, when there is bitterness in the hearts of the sons of God, that they will destroy our faith, and undermine our lives, and thus we will be servants to sin; and I raise my voice in protest against these practices.

I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, in the testimony of the gospel and in the privilege that I have of lifting my voice in its defense. There is no joy that comes to the soul equal to that joy that comes in declaring the message of salvation. I want to say to you that men and women by the thousands are willing to listen to our message, and I care little for these fellows who oppose us. I want to testify to you that it is a splendid thing that opposition comes into the lives of the missionaries; it puts them on edge, it makes them determined and very anxious to bear witness of the truth that has been restored in this day and age of the world.

Now, may we, my brethren and sisters, go from these gatherings and carry with us the inspiration and the spirit of them, and let us carry it to our various wards and stakes and missions, that the work of God may go on unhindered, and that our brethren and sisters who hold positions of responsibility may receive the sustaining power of the Priesthood of the Son of God, that they may carry on the great latter-day work entrusted to their care, I humbly pray, in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER GEO. F. RICHARDS

It was said by our Savior while he ministered among men, that he spoke as one having authority; and the scriptures tell us that if a man speak, "Let him speak as the oracles of God."

ENDORSEMENT OF THE PREVIOUS SPEAKERS

You, my brethren and sisters, having accepted the principles of the gospel and the ordinances thereof, and having tried as well as you could to keep the commandments of God, in the midst of weakness, you know as well as those who have testified, this afternoon, in your presence, that this is, indeed, the gospel of Jesus Christ, and that it is indeed the power of God unto salvation. I rejoice exceedingly, and join my brethren in adding my testimony to this great truth, and also endorsing that which has been said by those who have preceded me.

THE PURPOSE OF INSTRUCTION

I take it, my brethren and sisters, that in embracing the gospel and coming along thus far in your life's work, you are resolved and determined to be true and faithful unto the end, remembering that the race is not to the swift, neither the battle to the strong, but to those who endure faithful to the end. The instructions which are given are calculated to bring us to a remembrance of the covenants which we have made, of the undertakings which we have entered into, of the aim and objects we have had when, in our thoughtful moments, we have considered the purpose of our existence here, where we came from, and where we are going to; and to remind us of our weaknesses and imperfections, and of the straight and narrow way in which we must travel continuously if we shall reach the goal and aim of our lives.

I hope, dear brethren and sisters, that we will not be deceivers of ourselves, but hearing these things and locking them up in our lives. This is not what is intended, but rather that we shall consider these admonitions, cherish them in our minds, weigh them, and apply them to ourselves, that we may profit by them. For, if after we have been instructed so thoroughly and plainly, in regard to our duties, we still continue to neglect them, we will not be without condemnation in the day of judgment. This gospel is a "savor of life unto life, or of death unto death" unto those to whom it comes. The hearing of the word is just as much our condemnation, if we neglect to accept and live by it, as it is our salvation if we accept and live by the word of the Lord.

IN COMMENDATION OF THE SAINTS

I commend you, my brethren and sisters, for your integrity, faithfulness, and many sacrifices which you are making for the gospel's sake. I know that this is pleasing to our Father in heaven. I know that you know that when you have done that which is right, and tried to live the law in the accomplishment of the Lord's purposes, you know he is pleased with you, and that his Spirit is upon you. You are happy in the work. I know, too, and you know, that if we love the brethren, it is a good index to our love of God, and if we love our Father and his Son Jesus Christ, we will keep the commandments; and if we do that we will obtain eternal life. That is what our heavenly Father has designed that we should do. That is what he has designed that we should attain to; eternal life in his presence. And may God help us to this end, and may none of us be failures, but may the success we will attain be to the advantage and glory of our lives in the world to come, I earnestly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang the anthem, "Inflammatu8," solo by Ada McDonald.

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Joseph S. Lindsay of the Cottonwood stake of Zion.

SECOND OVERFLOW MEETING.

A second overflow meeting was held in the assembly hall of the Bureau of Information at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, October 10.

Elder David A. Smith, of the Presiding Bishopric, presided, and called the congregation to order. The music was furnished by the congregation under the leadership of President Winslow Farr Smith of the Northern States Mission.

The congregation sang, "High on the mountain top."

Prayer was offered by Elder Wallace S. Trowbridge.

Congregation sang, "Israel, Israel, God is calling."

ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

(President of the Central States Mission)

I am reminded very much this morning in our assembly here, of conferences that we frequently hold in the mission field. We usually have just such a place as this in many of the great cities of the country, and just about a gathering of this kind—though sometimes smaller; so I feel quite at home here. I have felt the Spirit of the Lord here. I felt it when our young elder prayed in opening the meeting; and I am reminded of the words of the Savior, that where there are a few gathered together in his name, there he would be also. This is the Lord's work, it is not man's work. Our Father in heaven is at the helm, and he governs and controls, according to the conditions of men. It is true that he can do much better with men and women who are faithful, and true than he can with men and women who are not, but he guides and controls. This life of ours has much to do with our future life and with the destiny of the human family.

When the Lord appeared unto the prophet Joseph Smith, he told him that the creeds of men were an abomination in his sight. Now I am reminded of a word that Brother Talmage gave us by way of instruction yesterday, that it is not recorded that God hated man. I was glad to hear him say that, for we are God's children, no matter whether we belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or to any of the different denominations of the earth, or to none at all—we are the children of our Father in heaven, he is the Father of our spirits. And I am certain that he loves his children—not that he condones their iniquity, any more than a father or a mother here in the flesh condones the wrong-doing of the child that God has given them, but he loves his children. So, when he told Joseph the prophet, in answer to his prayer, that the creeds of men were an abomination in his sight, he had in mind the things that his children were doing and teaching.

There were thousands of ministers, men who professed to have the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ, who had never considered, perhaps, what that authority really was, or what it meant to obtain it; and as a result, they were teaching doctrines that were erroneous. It had been a doctrine of the teachers of religion for centuries that God, our eternal Father, was without body, parts, or passions, that he filled the immensity of space, that he was everywhere present, and yet could dwell in the heart of the smallest child. They had never considered, as someone has said before, that anything without parts could never be a whole. And yet men who professed to act in the name of God and to teach men and women to worship God were teaching that doctrine concerning our Father in heaven. This was an abomination in his sight, because it was untrue, and was leading men and women away from him as fast as they would listen to it. Those professors were undoubtedly corrupt; they drew near unto him with their lips while their hearts were far from him; for we cannot help but conclude that those who were without a guide would surely as the world go into transgression. A man that will teach an erroneous doctrine, and a man that will teach a doctrine merely for a livelihood must fail to be receptive to the impressions which God Almighty has declared should come unto man, and must fall into error. There were thousands of people also who were preaching that God no longer spoke from the heavens above, that he no longer revealed himself. This is at once discovered to be an untrue principle, for it would be robbing God, our eternal Father, of his attributes of love and mercy and justice; for he whose love is greater than the love of any human being, so much so that there can be no comparison, could not forsake his children of the last generation of time when he in former generations walked and talked with men and discussed life and life eternal, until they knew him by the thousands. Do you think that a mother—whose love is greater than any other love on the earth, could in the last portion of her life, so to speak, forsake the children that came to her the last, in preference to those that came to her in the beginning of her life, the elder children, whom she had been careful to teach, as Christ and our Father in heaven were careful to teach the children of men, according to the revelations we find in Holy Writ? If a mother failed to teach the children of her later years, would she be a real mother to them, as she had been to those who had come to her in the former portion of her married life? It is unreasonable to believe a mother would do it—in fact her love would increase, rather than decrease. And so it is with our Father in heaven; for a man to say that he no longer speaks to men and that he has given unto the children of men all that is necessary, would be, as I stated before, to attempt to deprive him of his rights, which no man can do. God has never said that he would not reveal himself, but he has stated that he would reveal himself unto his servants the prophets. But when men failed to kneel down and make an honest appeal unto him, there was nothing sincere about them, the mark of sincerity could not be found in their lives, and so he found they were unreliable, and as a result, the work of God was not found among the children of men.

When the prophet Joseph appealed to him, he came to him and spoke to him, as one man speaks to another; and Joseph saw and bears record, that he had a body of flesh and bones, and that he was able to speak; he saw that the children of men were formed after him, that he was our Father in very deed.

Through that revelation the prophet gives unto the children of men this fact, that God is a man, a man who was once mortal, who had become immortal as a result of his achievements, as a result of the life that he had led in some former world; that we are his children, fashioned after him, and that the Holy Scriptures are true, and that men who profess to teach a doctrine contrary to this were teaching a thing that was abominable in the sight of God. Yet God did not hate those people, but he hated the things which they did, as he does today. There is not any doubt in my mind but that the Lord is very much displeased with the children of men, and especially the children of this Church, who have received the message from him, a testimony of Jesus, when he finds them doing things that are absolutely wrong.

He gave unto the prophet Joseph Smith the testimony that he gave unto Peter, the testimony of the Holy Ghost, which says unto every man who has it, "I know that my Redeemer lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that this is his work here upon the earth." Paul says that no man can say Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost, which comes as a result of obedience to law. Men were not obeying the gospel, they were not obeying the principles taught by the Christ and his apostles, they had drifted entirely away from it, and were teaching doctrines that were untrue and leading the whole world astray, until there were none who were walking in the path which God had decreed the children of men should walk in in order to return to him. You will recall the incident in the life of the apostle Peter at the time when the Christ was about to be crucified. Peter had said to the Christ that he would follow him unto death, and the Savior turned unto him and said, "Before the cock crows, Peter, thou shalt deny me thrice." Why? Because Peter did not at that time have the Holy Ghost. Christ had blessed those apostles, he had breathed the Holy Ghost upon them, but he said, "If I do not go, the Spirit, or the Comforter, will not come." And he told them that they were to go to Jerusalem, and they were to remain there until they should be endued with power from on high, and then they would receive the witness that he was the Christ. There was no need for it while the Christ was there. The miracles that he performed were absolutely genuine, and would prove to any man that desired to know, that he had the truth. So Peter had him as a witness as long as he was there, but when he was separated from him on that night before the crucifixion and was accused of being one who was associated with him, he denied him; when one of those maidens accused him of being one of those associated with Jesus, he said, "No, I am not," and even denied him three times; the scripture says that he cursed, or swore; and then the cock crowed, and Peter wept bitterly. But upon the day of Pentecost, when the apostles were assembled at Jerusalem, as recorded in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, we find that those apostles upon that occasion felt the power of the Holy Ghost. It came upon them in such power that people heard it as it came—according to the description—like a mighty rushing of the wind; and those men, filled with power, spoke, and the people, gathered together from among all nations, heard, each one in his own language. They became pricked in their hearts, and they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Then came the Apostle Peter, that man who God had decreed should be at the head of his Church, to bind on earth and to bind in heaven, and to loose on earth and to loose in heaven, whichever he decreed, according to his judgment—which judgment would be, of course, inspired by that power which God gave unto him as a witness—and he stood there in the majesty of his power and said, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—They had not received it, they had partaken of the influence of it. It was there as a witness unto them, a special occasion; but Peter declared unto them if they would repent, that they would receive the manifestation of it through the gifts as promised in Holy Writ. And so we are told that there were three thousand added to the Church at that time.

Now, coming back to this generation of time; Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet, suffered persecution, yet he bore record that he saw the Father and the Son; both before and after he had received baptism, and the witness of the Holy Ghost, that member of the Godhead, which was placed in the Godhead to be a witness unto you and to me and unto all men that God lives, and that Jesus is the Christ—he declared that he had both seen and heard the voice of the risen Redeemer, that he had heard the voice of his Father in heaven, and he bore witness of it unto his death, he failed not at any time to be the man that God had decreed he should be as a result of his former obedience. The world did not have the light, because they had not walked in the path by which men obtain that light. They had attempted to climb up in some other way. Men could purchase positions in the churches by their money and obtain pews just where they desired them, and if they did not go, their sins could be forgiven anyway—which thing was an abomination in the sight of God, our eternal Father.

Joseph Smith brought again the gospel of Christ, so that there have been here gathered together within the vales of these mountains, a people who do know the Lord; and even if they have not lived as perfectly as they might have done, and are not doing as perfectly as they might do, the testimony of Jesus is in their hearts. When they go among the children of men, they have that power renewed from on high, so to speak, and they speak with power and as one having authority, and they are not afraid. They go into the countries of this earth and bear testimony that God lives, and no man can say that he does live or that Jesus is the Christ without this great witness, which God has decreed should be the heritage of all men and women who desire to have it in their possession by obedience to his laws.

So here has been introduced in the dispensation of time in which we live, a true order of worship, a worship which is not an abomination in the sight of God, but a worship which pleases God, our eternal Father. And there never need be any fear of successful contradiction. The things that Joseph Smith brought into the world by way of principles of intelligence have never been proved to be untrue. Men may say that he was not a prophet of God, but I want to tell you this, that when men say he was not a prophet of God, the burden of proof is always upon the man who doubts and the man who contends, and not on the man who bears a testimony. Joseph Smith brought into the world the gospel of Christ, which binds men and women in the earth and in the heavens above forever, and no man has ever been able to prove it to be untrue. The Book of Mormon itself stands as a monument always before men—that the prophet Joseph saw heavenly beings in the dispensation of time in which we live, men who had died and passed away. They still live, they do not lose their identity, but they are individually real, and possess their faculties. He bears testimony of it, and that book itself, is a revelation to the children of men, and proof that he has spoken the truth.

A man who professed to be a Presbyterian minister approached me not long ago, after one of our street meetings, in one of the Eastern States, and said, "I do not believe the Book of Mormon."

I said, "Have you ever read it?"

He said, "No."

"I did not think you had," I said. "I told you that in order to believe the Book of Mormon, men must be humble, and prayerful, they must be honest and earnest, and must read it for the purpose of finding out whether it be true or whether it be false. You told the truth when you said you did not believe it, for I tell you that it takes work, and it takes faith, and it takes devotion to believe the Book of Mormon and to learn it, and it comes as a result of a declaration and a determination in the heart of man to know whether it is true or whether it is not. There is no gold-brick swindle in the 'Mormon' Church; it is real. You can sort the principles, any one of them, and take them into your church and discuss them, and I tell you everything that you preach which comes through Joseph Smith the prophet will be an enlightenment to the minds of every man and woman who listens to you. Go ahead and do it, and I tell you you will be preaching the word of God, and Presbyterianism and all other 'isms' will disappear."

I said further to him, "Personally I have never desired to attack a man for his religious belief. I do not believe in it. I do not believe in debates. I never saw any good come from them. I never saw any good coming from one man and another getting into a quarrel, a physical quarrel. They never were peaceful friends afterwards, never had confidence in each other. Men and women are not converted through conquest of that sort, they are only converted through intelligent research and discovery; and when men and women do make an actual discovery, it is written in their hearts because they are the children of God and in their hearts dwells the Spirit which emanates from God, our eternal Father, who fashioned it in the world from which we came. And so I say to you, we make no attacks, we would like you to read the scripture, as we do. You do not believe Joseph Smith was a prophet, but if there is anything in the scripture which goes to prove that he was a prophet you ought to learn it. You are a child of God. There will come a time when you will have to stand before the judgment bar of God to give an account of the deeds done in the flesh, and I feel that I would be held accountable, inasmuch as I have come in personal contact with you, if I did not bear my testimony to you and give you something to think about and give you something to read and say unto you, in a friendly way, not in an antagonistic way, that you are in error."

After I had discussed the gospel with him for half an hour he shook hands with me, and said, "I am glad to have had the interview."

I want to tell you, my brethren and sisters, that the time will come when this thing called prejudice will be swerved to one side or the other, and men who are honest and yet who are living an abomination in doctrine and practice before God will accept the truth.—A man who is in adultery cannot accept the truth, a man who lies and a man who bears false witness, and a man who is not true to himself, will not accept the gospel of Christ, and he will not be in tune and in harmony with the Spirit of the Lord. It will be absolutely necessary for him to repent. God does not love him in his iniquity—his heart yearns for him, as the mother's heart yearns for her child; he, with greater power—so much greater than the human mind is capable of understanding—yearns with a yearning that we are not capable at all of appreciating, for the return of one of his sons or daughters, no matter where they may be in the earth.

Men were led by the power of the Adversary, through false preaching for centuries, when no man upon the earth had the power of the Holy Ghost as a witness in him. They were led astray for centuries into believing that God had done it all, that he himself had fought the fight and there was nothing for the children of men to do but bow their heads and worship him and so be saved; it was an easy way to salvation, and thousands and millions of people accepted it. But when the true order of worship came, and it was taught that work, and faith, and intelligent devotion are necessary, there were only a few who found themselves willing and ready to accept the doctrine which God, our Father, had declared should be the way by which men should follow in order to return unto him.

I say unto you, my brethren and sisters, this gospel of the Kingdom of God will purify men and women, it will cause them to repent, and when they repent they are not an abomination, nor will their creeds be, in his sight, for everyone will know the truth, everyone will be a brother in very deed. The name of the prophet Joseph Smith will be revered and written into the hearts of the thousands of men who forsake sin.

But, as was stated yesterday, and as has been written, "God cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, and none need try to reach God—whether they be in the Church or out—when they have in their hearts the spirit of hate, the spirit of iniquity, the spirit of falsity, for those are the creeds which God hates, and which men and women must be relieved of before they can feel that sweet, beautiful influence which emanates from our Father in heaven. May God give you and me the grace and the power to live as we ought to live, I pray in Christ's name. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

"Where no counsel is, the people fall: but in the multitude of counselors there is safety."

This scripture came to my mind and remained with me during Friday and Saturday as I listened to the voices of the inspired servants of God; and especially was it impressed upon my heart during the delivery of that splendid discourse by President Heber J. Grant.

What a beautiful thing it is to forgive and to forget. A poet has said: "To err is human: to forgive is divine."

Israel is blessed with wise counselors and happy is the man and the woman who walks in the path of counsel. The faults we have, the Lord seeks to remove, because thereby our progress in his kingdom is made more rapid. These faults act as a brake on our endeavors and make us fall short of the full measure of success which God has promised to his faithful children.

Unto Joshua, that mighty warrior of old, came God's command to take a certain city. The soldiers were sent against the enemy, but they returned in the confusion of retreat. Upon the ground, upon his face, Joshua prostrated himself and asked God why "Israel turneth their backs before their enemy." The Lord said: "There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Israel: thou canst not stand before thine enemies, until ye take away the accursed thing from among you."

The accursed thing was found in the tent of one of Joshua's soldiers. God had commanded those men that when the city of Jericho was taken they were to keep themselves away from the accursed thing in the city. One of the soldiers disobeyed. He took a garment upon which the curse rested. He also took some of the silver and gold which belonged to the Lord, to be used in the holy sanctuary and hid them in his tent. The man was dealt with according to divine injunction, and then the command was repeated: "Go up to Ai." Joshua did so. The city fell into his hands, because the accursed thing had been removed from Israel.

And when we violate a command of the Lord, when we take anything that is forbidden or keep anything that belongs to our Father, it is an accursed thing: it is a brake on our endeavors, and to get rid of this thing is our first duty, so that we may go on in the path toward eternal perfection.

Someone has said, "Blessed is the man who has found his work." Then thrice blessed are the people of God, for unto them hath been given a great work. The mission of this Church is to preach the gospel unto every nation and kindred and tongue and people. So long as a man will work there is hope for him, but when he sinks in despair and refuses to exert himself, then it is hard to save him. One of the shining and great evidences that we are the people of God is that in our hearts and in our lives is the spirit of service. Look at the magnificent work the Latter-day Saints are doing in the world. At great sacrifice, which is sacred unto the Lord, they are sending their sons and their daughters to preach the gospel. The Book of Mormon is being distributed by the tens of thousands. The word of the Lord is being delivered to the world, to the children of our heavenly Father; and the testimonies of the elders, the discourses they deliver, the books, the tracts that they distribute, the sermons that we have heard during this conference, the testimonies of the servants of God upon the isles of the sea, in the north and the south, the east and the west—all these combine as the loud voice, saying: "Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." That is the mission we are engaged in, and the Lord will bless his people for the sacrifice they are making.

We are a great people. Why? Is it because we are great in ourselves? No. We recognize that the authority which we profess to hold—and which we do hold, I testify unto you—is powerless unless the spirit of service accompanies it. Is not authority, without service, without work, powerless as faith without works? The spirit of service is in our hearts, and this is what is making the people great. It has been said that it is not what we take in this life, but what we give up that makes us rich. And the Latter-day Saints have given, because, in the words of the Savior, it is more blessed to give than to receive; and the great work which the Father has definitely commissioned us to perform is making this people great, through the law of service and of sacrifice, which is the soul of the work in which we are engaged.

If you will permit me, I want to substitute two words in a verse which was written to eulogize the world-famed Yale college. I want to substitute for "old Yale," the words "the Church," and then see if this does not apply to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"Mother of men, grown strong in giving,
Honor to him thy lights have led,
Rich in the toil of thousands living,
Proud of the deeds of thousands dead,
We, who have felt thy power and known thee,
We, in whose lives thy lights avail,
High in our hearts enshrined, enthrone thee,
Mother of men, The Church."

When the Prophet Joseph Smith was going to his martyrdom, he made a declaration, filled with love and charity, that will go ringing down the ages as one of the noblest truths that ever crossed mortal lips. He said, "If my life is of no value to my friends, it is of none to myself." That truth is the soul of the work of the Lord. It is the truth that is in the heart of President Grant and all the leaders of this Church. It is the truth in the heart of every president that has presided over the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Now, brethren and sisters, we are not going about this work blindly. Our vision is clear. The prophet has said, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." But we are blessed with the vision of the Holy Ghost, that guides us into all truth.

On the way to Atlanta from Chattanooga a few weeks ago, I was in conversation with a Baptist minister, a very fine gentleman. He invited me to answer his questions concerning the doctrines of the Church, which I did to the best of my ability, and with a prayer in my heart that the Lord would help me. I said to him, "Do not these great events, this world war, this pestilence, portend some great event such as the second coming of the Son of God?"

"Well," said he, "I think so now, but I did not used to think so; and if any man seven years ago had predicted this world war would fall upon the world in its destructive fury and awful bloodshed, we would have laughed him to scorn, and then crucified him."

I said, "The world did kill him, for the Prophet Joseph Smith did predict this world war. He was laughed to scorn, and the world killed him; and he went to his doom a martyr for the testimony of Jesus Christ."

Brethren and sisters, thank God for this vision, that we may see our duty clearly and thank God for our prophet, seer, and revelator, who by the mercy and the goodness of God, guides his people, and unto whose counsel we will rally—because I know and I bear my testimony that the sons and the daughters of this people love the Church—and will come to her help in the divine mission which God hath commissioned her to perform.

I bear my testimony that we are led by prophets and apostles, wise counselors; and if we will give heed—which we will do, with the help of the Lord—to their teachings and counsels, we shall reap eternal life, which is the greatest gift that God can give to man.

The Lord help us to keep firm and faithful unto death, is my earnest prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER WINSLOW FARR SMITH

(President of the Northern States Mission)

I endorse from the bottom of my heart the words of the previous speakers, for I am engaged, as they are, in the mighty work of preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. And we are not alone in this mighty ministry; there are 1,700 of us sent out from the stakes of Zion to bear the message of the restored gospel. There is joy in this work, for, as President Callis has said, it is the service that we give that brings us happiness.

The missionary work of the Church is progressing. The message that Christ was in very deed the Redeemer of the world, that he gave us a plan of salvation that will save the souls of men, that the gospel, after the ages of darkness, was restored and given to the children of men through the Prophet Joseph—this message is what we are bearing to the world. We go where we are sent. We go gladly. We give our time, we give of our talents, we give the best that is in us, for we know that God's work is paramount, here on the earth, and that ultimately the gospel of our Lord will triumph.

It is true that

High on the mountain top
A banner is unfurled;
Ye nations, now look up;
It waves to all the world;
In Deseret's sweet, peaceful land;
On Zion's Mount behold it stand.

We have gathered this week by the thousands, from the north and the south and the east and the west, many of us from distant parts, to hear the advice and counsel of our leaders; and to sustain them in their high and holy callings. I trust, and I really believe, that all of us who attend these meetings and listen to the words of our leaders, go back to our homes more determined to keep the commandments of God than when we came here.

It is a wonderful thing, this gospel of our Lord. It is not to be absorbed by merely sitting idly by and wondering how we are going to be saved. All of us have an idea of some kind, of salvation. Rarely do you meet a man who does not have some belief in immortality; but when you propound to him the question, "What is the immortality in which you believe? what is the salvation for which you hope?" in most instances you will find that he cannot give you an intelligent answer. To the Latter-day Saint, however, who is living his religion, and who is progressing in a knowledge of his religion, through prayer, faith, and diligent study, there is a pointed, plain, beautiful conception of immortality and eternal life, that gives his life something new, gives him hope, gives him courage, and gives him an understanding that his life here on earth is more than merely gaining the things of this life.

The Savior said, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." And truly the Savior spoke the truth when he made this wonderful statement. It is life eternal to understand the plan of salvation and to order our lives so that we are in accord with its teachings. It is life eternal to find such joy in our lives here, by righteous living, that when the end shall come, we will pass away in peace, not fearing death, but knowing that we have fought a good fight here, and that for having fought this good fight, the reward that awaits us will truly be ours.

Again, the Savior said, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye have eternal life." My brethren and sisters, we, the Latter-day Saints, are blessed above all peoples of the earth in regard to the scriptures that we have to search. We have the holy Bible, that grand old book that has come down through the ages to us. We worship God and we read of him and we search that scripture and we order our lives in a large degree by its teachings—to us the holy Bible is most sacred—but we have more, we have the Book of Mormon, the parallel history, if I may say it, of the inhabitants of this continent. Then we have still more, we have the history or the recorded word of our heavenly Father as it has been given to his children in this day and age; and still more, we have that record, the Pearl of Great Price." These four books we accept as the standard works of the Church, as the divine revelations of our Father, as his law unto his Church.

But, my brethren and sisters, in accepting them and declaring to the world that we believe them, do we know them? Do we search them, do we even read them? Do we study them that we may know the plan of salvation and that we may build up our most holy faith and our determination, by prayerful, consistent research? I fear that far too many of us take this matter of life and this matter of our duty to ourselves in the truth, far too lightly. I fear that far too many of us leave our books dusty on the shelves, rather than taking them down and reading the wonderful words that they contain. We can turn chapter by chapter through the Book of Mormon, and every chapter that we read opens our minds to something new; we can study it phrase by phrase, and our minds will brighten, if we will only do it. How many here today have read the Book of Mormon through? How many have read the other scriptures? Ask yourselves these questions.

We are too prone, my brethren and sisters, to take life easy, to order our lives along the lines of least resistance. We are too prone to read the light, foamy, entertaining things of life, that do not benefit us, and to leave unread the vital works that make us mighty and strong and intelligent for our life's work. We have these four books, the holy scripture, which we should search. We have other works, and we can read and study and none of us will ever master one tithe of the wonderful truths embraced in these books.

I want to read to you just one verse from the Book of Mormon. It is a beautiful verse, and has been published many, many times. I fear that most of us are not yet familiar with it. It is the 13th verse of the second chapter of Second Nephi:

And if ye shall say there is no law, ye shall also say there is no sin. If ye shall say there is no sin, ye shall also say there is no righteousness. And if there be no righteousness, there be no happiness. And if there be no righteousness nor happiness, there be no punishment nor misery. And if these things are not, there is no God. And if there is no God, we are not, neither the earth; for there could have been no creation of things, neither to act nor to be acted upon; wherefore, all things must have vanished away.

In this marvelously philosophical verse that we have in that chapter, there is so much truth to be pondered over and thought about, that if we will take it, read it, study it, analyze it, and pray over it, our minds will be opened and we will have an understanding of the things of God as we never had them before.

As I said a moment ago, we are too prone to follow the lines of the least resistance, and not to strive to search the scriptures and to find out the things of God. The things of God are more than faith, repentance, and baptism, these first principles; the things of God embrace all truths, and if we search the scripture and master these basic truths of our Father, and then go outside and take the works of commentary of the great thinkers, we can day by day grow in an understanding of God and really know him.

"This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent;" and, my brethren and sisters, we cannot hope to know the only true God nor Jesus Christ, if we do not seek them. True, it is within the power of our heavenly Father to bless us with positive knowledge, with no effort on our own part. It is within his power to magnify us so mightily that we could stand up as shining lights so that the world would marvel at our wonderful achievements. But God moves along natural lines; he gives us the intelligence, he gives us the faith, he gives us the wisdom, and if we will utilize these God-given faculties and will exercise them and will study and will seek, then we will know. Frequently do the missionaries come to us in the field with not even an idea of God. They have gone on a mission purely because they have been sent. How much finer, how much more capable would they have been if their parents had trained them in the home, and they had been trained in the schools and in the organizations of the Church, so that they had gone into the mission field positively knowing that the gospel of Christ is true; with no doubt in their minds. While they would not necessarily be wonderful preachers; and while, probably, they could not explain the gospel in detail, yet there would be something burning in their souls that tells them that the gospel is true, that Jesus was the Christ, and that Joseph Smith is indeed a prophet of the living God. This is life eternal to know these things, and in order to know them, we must search, with sincerity, we must be prayerful, and we must be really and truly and genuinely prayerful,—we must go on our knees before our God; he demands it.

Why he instituted prayer, I do not know, but he did it, and it suffices me to know that since he did it, my duty is to bow myself before my God and to appeal to him in prayer. Why the other ordinances were given, I do not know, but they were, and they have a purpose, and he who fails to keep these commandments of our Father cannot hope for the blessings.

There is a remarkable relationship between keeping the commandments of God and enjoying his blessing. God chose in the beginning to give to his children positive commandments, that was his scheme, he laid down the law, and he said, my children must abide by that law if they will have the blessings. The prophet Joseph tells us, as recorded in the 130th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, "There is a law irrevocably decreed in the heavens before the foundations of this earth, upon which all blessings are predicated, and when we obtain any blessings from God, it is by obedience to the law upon which it is predicated." And the opposite of this is true, that when we violate the law, the punishment that God has designed that his children must take, if they violate the law, will be meted out to them. How, then, my brothers and sisters, can we hope to know, can we hope to develop, can we hope for the blessings of God if we do not exercise our God-given faculties. I said there is a relationship between the keeping of the commandments of God and the enjoying of his blessings. We must put ourselves in tune with him. We must keep his commandments. We must obey the law, or we cannot hope for, nor will we receive the blessings which God has in store for his children. In his justice, in his mercy, in his love for his children, he could not give to the sinner the blessing when he failed to keep the law, the same as we would give it to the righteous child who did keep that law.

Now, knowing these things, and knowing that we must know God, that we must find him out, that we must know for ourselves, why is it that we stand by, let the world go on and let the Church go on, while we do nothing toward the salvation of our own souls?

The message of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a wonderful one, it is the message of life and the message of salvation. The doctrines of the Church stand alone, they have borne the acid test of 100 years. The world, the best brains of the world have endeavored to disprove them. This wonderful book from which I have read, the Book of Mormon, has been held up to ridicule but after 100 years it stands unimpeached and unimpeachable, for it is indeed the word of the true and the living God. We have these things, they are ours, we have them in our hearts, most of them; and the books lie on the shelves in far too many cases, dirty and dusty from disuse. Why do we not magnify the intelligence that we have, study and learn, prepare ourselves, so that when the time comes and the opportunity presents itself for us to explain the principles of the gospel, that we will know what the gospel is, and that we will declare it to the people in power and in truth.

The testimony that God lives is a gift to us; it comes to us when we are worthy of it. He blesses us when we strive for that blessing and reach out and try to get it. He is indeed our Father in heaven, to whom we can go and from whom we can ask a blessing. We know that the world gazes on an immaterial something, which they worship, in a way, as God. We know the true and the living God, the God of Israel, and we know that in this day and age he reveals his mind and will to his children. That testimony that the Prophet Joseph gave 100 years ago, rings in the hearts and the ears of the Latter-day Saints today. Hundreds are coming into the fold, the message is bearing fruit, and while he is not accepted generally, his teachings and his principles are being accepted by the world today. Mormonism is going forward, it will triumph; and the message that the missionaries bear by the hundreds and the thousands will bring the honest in heart into the Church, for it has the ring of sincerity. My brothers and sisters, it is life eternal to know God, it is life eternal to know his Son, it is life eternal to know that in this day and age God has revealed himself, his mind and his will to the children of men.

May we be worthy, may our testimonies grow, may we, by righteous living, be so strong and so solid that we will know of ourselves without a doubt that God lives and that this is his Church, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DAVID A. SMITH

(Of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church)

At a gathering in this city, the other day, a prominent railroad man recently from Europe, in making a few remarks, stated that when he applied to the American Consul for a passport to come to America, a number of questions were asked. One of them was, "Are you a Bolshevik?" he answered, "no." Another, "Are you a 'Mormon'?" and he answered, "no."

I volunteered the information that these were the two extremes; and he said, "Yes, I know what Bolshivism is: I have lived with it; but until now, I have not known what 'Mormonism' is; and I want to say to you men here that such a spirit of friendship, I have never seen in Europe."

It was my pleasure to bring that man over here to the temple block; his time being limited I turned him over to Brother Goddard and some of his associates. I called for him again in an hour, in order to get him to his train, and he did not care to leave the block—he stayed here until the very last minute. He said, "Mr. Smith, it is wonderful, it is wonderful, and I want to know more of your people and your doctrine! I understand you have missionaries in Holland. I intend to look them up when I get home."

A few months ago some business men from England, made a tour of the United States. I read a letter day before yesterday from one of those men, saying, "We regret that we considered our stay at Salt Lake City of so little importance that we did not allow more time for it. Of all the visits we made to the cities of the United States, none were so profitable as our visit to your city."

Soon after they were here, a number of Boy Scouts, from New York, called upon us. Their leaders said that they had debated some time as to whether it would be wise to bring those boys to Salt Lake City, but inasmuch as their return trip took them this way, they thought they would stop off for a little while. He said, "We regret that we did not arrange to stay longer; we have not been treated so well in any city of the United States as you have treated us while we have been with you."

A few months ago, Brother Oscar A. Kirkham, our Scout Leader, was chosen as morale officer to go to Europe with the Boy Scouts selected from all over the United States. Some objected to a "Mormon" going for this purpose, but the leaders of that work recognized through their association with his, that he was clean, that he was a leader and in every way qualified to take that responsible position, and look after those young fellows who were going to visit Europe.

My brethren and sisters, "what God hath cleansed that call not thou common." And I want to tell you that in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, we have the gospel in its purity. I am sorry to say that there are some who profess to be laboring for the welfare of God's children who are constantly trying to drag it into the mire and to cover it with filth. O, it is a wonderful work, and those who labor in it unceasingly, in faith, with a desire to be helpful, and to do God's work, receive joy and satisfaction in their work. I want to tell you that I have a testimony that this gospel is true. I know as well as I know anything in this world that President Heber

J. Grant holds his position through the will of God, and that he is influenced through the Holy Spirit which is promised to all who are faithful. I have seen it manifest, through him, time and time again, and I want to say to you that he will be successful in his administration, in just so far as we, his brethren and his sisters, God's children, will support him and uphold him with our means, with our faith, and with our prayers.

All the world is looking upon us as they have never looked in all our history. Are we doing things that will cause them to distrust, now that they are beginning to see the good things? Let us be "swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath."

I get much comfort in the statement made by the Apostle James, a part of which we quote quite often: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." As a rule, we stop here, but I think the most important part of this quotation is that which follows: "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord."

And again we are told, a double minded man is unstable in all his ways. Let us not be double minded; and when we are in doubt, let us go to God in faith, nothing wavering; let our lives be such that our houses are in order, that we are in condition to go to God and ask for his blessings. I know, my brethren and sisters, that if we will do this, with faith, nothing wavering, God will make known unto us, as individuals, his will, as it concerns us, and we will know and understand. He is not forcing his doctrine upon us, nor his blessings, and he is not influencing us through his Spirit, except when we are in condition to be influenced.

May God's choicest blessings rest upon us, I pray, my brethren and sisters, let us uphold the authorities of this Church, every one. They are men of God, who are trying to uphold each other and to accomplish all that God requires of them. So I say again, let us set our houses in order, let us take to our homes the spirit of this conference. O what a wonderful thing it would be for us, as a people, if we could at all times earnestly carry out the instructions of this conference.

O I tell you, while the people of the world are looking upon us more favorably at this time, if we would carry out the instructions we have received during this conference, and especially the text of President Grant, "keep the commandments," it would only be a little time until they would be attracted by the great influence we would have for good.

May God's choicest blessings be with us, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "Praise to the man."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Benjamin Goddard, of the Bureau of Information.

THIRD OVERFLOW MEETING

The third overflow meeting was held in the Assembly Hall, Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, October 10.

Elder Reed Smoot, of the Council of the Twelve, presided.

The music was furnished by the Cottonwood stake choir, under the direction of Elder W. F. Robinson, Miss Bernhett Lindsay, accompanist.

Choir sang, "An angel from on high."

Prayer was offered by Elder Frank B. Cassidy.

The choir sang, "Grant us peace."

ELDER EDWARD J. WOOD

(President of the Alberta Stake of Zion)

I am sure we all appreciate very much the splendid meetings we have enjoyed during this conference and the excellent words and music we have just heard. Singing is a fine accomplishment that our people greatly appreciate, and we have good music in all our communities.

I am pleased to be at conference again, though not altogether with the position that I now occupy. I once heard a man ask another, what a vacuum was. The man was called upon to address a congregation, and answer the question. He said: "A vacuum, I have it in my head, but I can't explain it."

I am wondering if we all believe the statement in the hymn, that "an angel from on high," has visited us, and revealed the gospel in its fulness, so that we might better understand it than we could have done by reading ancient scripture. I speak of this because I come from the far north, Canada.

We have in course of erection a very beautiful temple. Over five thousand people have passed through that unfinished building, thus far this year, from all over the world. I think of that particularly, since I am in the presence of Brother Smoot, of the Council of the Twelve, and our respected senator from Utah. His house in Washington is visited by many strangers who speak of him, (often when he does not hear them) and the good he does by the courage he manifests in always standing before the people as a Latter-day Saint. Only recently some people coming through the country said they attended meeting at his house in Washington. Brother Smoot did not know of this. They did not belong to the Church, but they admired the man who is always an apostle. I thought of that this morning, while reading in the paper that in Washington the members of the Church thought of renting a hall instead of holding meetings in the residence of Brother Smoot. We little know the good we do in entertaining strangers.

Let me read just a little from the Doctrine and Covenants of our mission. I am pleased to see so many of our brethren and sisters here this afternoon. I notice, however, the absence of young people. I believe I address mostly this afternoon the parents, and without desiring to take up much of your time, I wish to draw your attention briefly to our mission here. I with you have spent many years in the mission field, aside from presiding with one of my brethren in one of the stakes in Canada. I believe on us rests very largely the responsibility of the carrying on the work of the Lord; and I believe our sentiments, our true feelings and beliefs are reflected largely in our children; and when we hear the fear expressed that young people are not quite as much interested as they should be, I turn critically to myself, and I hope we will all do the same to ourselves this afternoon. We have had very little trouble, however, in that great country, Canada, where we have some of the finest, most stalwart young men and women in all the land of Zion. I believe that as a child is trained, not necessarily taught, he will be, to a great degree, when he becomes mature. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he grows old he will not depart from it." There is quite a difference between training a child and teaching it. Teaching is telling, training is not only to tell, but to get the child to do, and to know how to do. I read from the first paragraph of Section I of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Hearken, O ye people of my Church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say, hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together.

I think of this in connection with my missionary experiences in the islands of the sea.

For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated. And the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed. And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days. And they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them.

I wish to tell you a short experience of my own. I was called on a third trip to one of the islands, in the days of President Joseph F. Smith. I think of this special prophecy as I remember the many obstacles placed in our way in going to the islands. I was called to take a special mission to Samoa and the South Seas. I am a British subject by naturalization. I could not leave Canada without a passport, but the President of the Church had called me to be in Salt Lake City by an appointed time, and asked if I could come. I should have obtained my passport before answering the letter, but I said, yes, I will be there. Then I set to work to make good my promise by applying through all the means available for my passport. The time approached for my departure, and I could not get across the line without the passport, but it did not come in time for me to leave. I presented the matter to the Lord in prayer. I told him my difficulties, and I felt that I must make good my word, and at least make the attempt to come. So I boarded the train bound for Salt Lake City without any passport. When I arrived at the boundary line, the emigration officers asked for my passport. I thought all the time, "They shall go forth and none shall stay them." I thought of that, and I wished that the emigration officer believed as much as I did of its truth; but he did not. However, I was somewhat acquainted with him. He said, "I will let you go provided you furnish the passport after." "All right," I said, "I shall be pleased to do it." When President Smith set me apart, he told me that I should go. Now he did not know anything about my not having a passport. I knew it would be more difficult to get out of the United States than to get in—leaving the port of San Francisco and getting to an American possession in Samoa. I knew, or thought I did, that I must have my passport. President Smith, laying his hands upon my head, said: "Brother Wood, you shall go upon your mission to perform the business to be attended to, and return in safety." He never mentioned any appointed time. All the time he was blessing me I was wondering about my passport. I did hope it would come. I was promised by our attorney that it should be registered to me in Salt Lake City to be here the day after my arrival. I waited, and the next day it did not come. The time came for us to leave. At the Oregon Short Line office I wired home, to learn if any news had been received from Ottawa, the Washington of Canada. I did not get any reply. But President Smith said I should go; here was the prophecy and revelation that none should stay the disciples from preaching the gospel. As it mentions in the next verse: "Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my preface unto the book of my commandments, which I have given them to publish unto you, O inhabitants of the earth." "And they shall go forth, and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them." The Lord had commanded me, not the emigration officers at all. So, I set out on the train without my passport. But I received a wire at the station that my passport would be in San Francisco before the steamer left. I felt all right again. Well, we arrived in San Francisco, and went down to the emigration office the day before the steamer sailed. I was there without my passport. I expected it would be there that evening, but it did not come. And the steamer was to sail, and I was there without my passport. When the time came to answer at the emigration office, I got in line, and felt fine, knowing it would be all right, but I did not know how. When I saw the official ask the passengers for their passports, and some were refused, some were asked a lot of questions, and I did not have my passport, I stood there just as if I had it, and he did not know anything different. When my time came, he said, "Sit down a little while, Mr. Wood; I will talk to you later." Well, I knew it would be all right. Did you ever feel that way, when you have just had the elders come in to administer to a sick child, and you knew positively that the child would be healed? I felt these promises running through my mind, but how should they be fulfilled? When it came to my turn, the emigration officer said, "Well, the time is up, you must come to the office tomorrow at 9. The steamer sails at 1, and you come up, Mr. Wood." The time arrived for me to meet again, in the morning, and I was in line. I felt all right, though I did not have any passport. The emigration officer finally said, "Let's see, Mr. Wood, you have got your passport, go right on board the steamer." I said, "Thanks," and I did not have any passport at all, though I had the commission from President Smith, which was worth more than all the passports from all the governments in the world. But I had yet a great many difficulties. I thought, "Now, I am on the steamer, how am I to get off?" The most important part of all is to present your documents or passports before you leave. I had three long weeks to wear away before I should land. The Purser takes a kind of genealogy of each of the people. When he came to me, he asked me to sit down; and said, "Of course, you understand you must present your passport, Mr. Wood." I said, "All right, I understand it." "Where did you come from?" I said, "From Canada." He said, "Sit down, Mr. Wood. I am delighted to see you people from Canada so willing to go down and preach the gospel to those natives." And I spoke of the gospel with him; and he asked for no passport at all. Well, I had other difficulties, too, but I felt all right.

When I arrived at Honolulu, I escaped another very difficult situation by making a pleasant gospel conversation with the emigration officer at that port. Then we made two thousand more miles to the south. I knew the most difficult time was yet to come, that is, when we arrived at Tutuila. How in the world to work it there I did not know. But I prayed to the Lord, not only twice every day for those several weeks, but several times every day, that other avenues would be opened up so that no one could stay my passing.

I remember when that steamer entered that most beautiful harbor which Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson named Pago Pago, I went up on land, and many of the natives that I had seen before met me, and made their characteristic salutation. They were glad that I had come. I saw one of our boys from Canada leading a splendid band, and they had come to welcome me. Then again I began to wonder when I would get off again, and yet whenever I would remember these promises, I would take courage again. The steamer only stayed there six hours, and we were lined up again. Now this was the final getting through without a passport, and I had to buoy up my spirit to meet the emergency. They came within one of me, when the emigration officer said, "Sit down, I want to ask you a question." And he said to me, "Mr. Wood, get your passport ready." "All right." I had the missionary appointment from President Smith, I had the promise, and the prophecy in this revelation, that "none shall stay them." When he had called me, and it was my turn to present my passport, he turned to the man next to me and said, "Why, you are a New Yorker." And this officer went over and had a conversation with this man he called the New Yorker. When he came back, he said, "Let me see, Mr. Wood, I have had your passport all right, you may go on."

My fellow parents, we are all just like one large family, regardless of places of residence; we are all Latter-day Saints; we are all interested in one another. What is a success in Canada is courage to you, and what is your success here may make us feel well in Canada, because, not like other peoples of the world, we are all members of one large family. I say to you, that if, as parents, we can win our boys and girls to righteousness around our family hearths, it is far better than to place them in the hands of the Purity League, or even the ward teachers, or any one else. Let me, as the father of my children, and my wife as their mother, win the hearts of our boys and girls at home, win their confidence, and others will have very little trouble over them. I think of it when I see the mothers with their babies on their knees. Why they would not think of letting the little baby fall, not for all the world. They watch over its every movement, fearful that it might fall. Far easier it would be to heal the broken arm of the infant than the injured mentality, the perverted heart of the grown child who often leaves his home with very little concern of his parents. We are not concerned enough as parents over our children. When I think again of the Islands, of how those people there teach their children to respect their parents, it is marvelous in the extreme. You call those natives uncivilized. I have seen a young man wild, almost uncouth in his habits, taken into the council of chiefs, at the death of his father, and at once he becomes dignified, almost majestic, feeling the responsibility of his father upon his shoulders in the council of chiefs. It is because the boy was taught when he was young, aye more, he was trained, how to act when he became a man, how to act the chief that his father was before he died.

O the faith of those natives, if we only had it! If we simply knew, if we had the knowledge (more than faith) of the mission of our Church itself, in which we are taught that when I go into eternity with my wife to whom I am sealed, my joy, our joy, will not be complete until we have in our circle some, yes, every one, of our children. Let us not wait until it is too late.

I remember once a woman on the Islands—to show you how the Lord goes before and with us, his elders and servants, and after us, on those Islands—a lady had a very sick child, and when they are sick they have faith in the power of the Priesthood to restore. We had only been there a few weeks. Nobody knew us there, did not know that we had arrived. A man came up to the house where we were holding service. He did not understand us; he had to speak through an interpreter; and he said to me, "There is a lady on the other Island with a sick child. She wants you three men to go to her, and heal her child." It was right on the verge of the war there. The first edict made by the king under the German government was that a "Mormon" missionary who preached was to be fined $100 for the first sermon, and for the second he was to be banished from the Island. They made that edict, and we thought we were in trouble till this man said, that that woman had asked that we three men go unto her and lay our hands upon her child and the child should recover. We went out to a palm tree and talked to the Lord as I am talking to you, wanting the inspiration of his Spirit. Soon we decided we would go. After going across a strait some three miles in a little canoe, expecting almost every moment that the canoe would be overturned, we arrived. The woman was standing in front of her house. She had her handkerchief to her eyes, and said, "I am glad that you have come. It is all right. Here is my child." And under the sheet was the body of the child. We lifted that up and saw the child, and we said, "the child is already dead, and we covered it up again; and she hastily said, "No, it is not dead at all. You do what I saw you do last night in my dream, and he will be well." We asked the Lord, "suppose we administer to this child, and it does not get well, and they will say you are all evil spirits. They are a superstitious people." We had no faith that the child would recover. But the unprecedented faith of this native woman inspired us to do it. And she said, "Have you authority to do what I saw you do? You anointed that child with oil; you laid your hands upon his head." Yes, we had that authority. And then I thought of that passage that "my servants must go forth, and my authority shall be with them, and none shall stay them." I said, "Yes, we have that authority." Said she, "have you the authority to refuse?" I said, "no." We anointed the child, laid our hands upon it, covered it up, and went away. The cyclone came on, the social condition of the natives was upset; we never heard of the woman and child for a long while. I didn't expect to hear from it, until about a year after when I saw a number of natives under trees, with long knives. I saw them running along beneath the trees in their half-clad condition. Then I thought again that none should stay the preaching of this gospel. So I buoyed myself up as best I could, and marched on. I saw the natives surrounding me on all sides, and as I came to a house in that tropical forest, they commenced to get closer to me, when all at once a woman marched out, and said, "How do you do, Brother Wood?" I rather sank back, and said, "I don't know you." "O yes, you do," and she turned and called a child about nine years of age. She stood the child upon the trunk of a tree, and then she bore this testimony to the great crowd of natives: "This child is a living testimony of the great power of the gospel, and the power and authority held by Brother Wood and his associates. They administered to this child over two years ago. I have never seen them since, but I know they have the power of God with them, and all of you must listen to their message. I am the daughter of the high chief of the island, and you can come to my house and have everything you want."

I went, and the natives followed along, and I sat up nearly all night preaching to them. We had a good spirit. I mention this to you to prove that the divinity and power of the Priesthood is with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints today. But the evil one is ever present.

One morning, on one occasion, when I was dressing, I felt something alive on my neck, and I hit it at once, and I was bitten by a centipede, one of the most deadly of insects on the Islands. My arm commenced to swell. The natives came and said, "Give us your last message; you will die within an hour." I felt excruciating pain. Then up came the woman. The natives had told her that I was killed by the deadly insect, and I was there with them. The woman came up very leisurely. She shook my hand showing she expected consolation. She said, "That is all right, Brother Wood. Have you got any of that oil with you?" I said, "Yes, get my valise. "Now," she said, "Do what you did to my child, and you will be all right." I felt when she said that, that I positively knew it would be so. I anointed my hand, and the swelling left, just like taking a glove off my hand, and she turned to the natives who had gathered around, and said, "As I told you, the Lord is with this young man, and his Church, and his people."

Brethren and sisters, let us inspire this faith, this confidence, in the hearts of our growing children, and never get away from the fact that we are responsible for them in their future life. God bless you. Amen.

ELDER WM. H. MENDENHALL

(President of the Bannock Stake of Zion)

My beloved brethren: It is an inspiration to me to stand before this congregation, to look into your faces, and to listen to the testimony and the teachings of the presiding authorities during this conference. And I have been made to feel that the hand of the Lord is visible, and that he is leading and directing the brethren of the priesthood that preside over us in this Church.

Permit me for a few moments to call your attention again to the revelation contained in the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants, that part that has been read and referred to by President Wood. The Lord inspired the Prophet Joseph Smith in this revelation, given before the organization of the Church, when he declared that this gospel, the word of the Lord, shall be carried as a witness unto all nations by the men and women who may be called in the last day.

When Brother Wood was relating his experience, showing that none should stay the hand of the Lord in carrying out his purposes, it reminded me of an incident in my missionary experience, when I labored on the Sandwich Islands. It was customary at that time, when the missionaries were going from one island to another, to present to the officials their missionary certificate, which we always carried in our pockets. I remember being sent out to one of the islands, when I first lived in that mission, and after I had taken my place on the boat the officer came around inquiring who we were, and asking for our missionary certificates. I presented my missionary certificate to him, but he did not want to accept it, and he told me I would have to go ashore. And I argued with him, that I had been called of the Lord as a missionary, that I had my missionary certificate signed by President Wilford Woodruff, and I was entitled to go where I had been sent by the president of that mission. While we were arguing, the steamer weighed anchor and began to leave the shore; and in our heated argument he saw that was his last chance to get back on to the wharf; so he jumped on to the wharf, and I remained on the boat. It was too far for me to jump, so I went on my mission, as I had been directed by the president of that mission. So I know, my brethren and sisters, that the hand of the Lord is in the ministry of this gospel in the nations of the earth. And the Lord has said in this revelation, that this gospel shall be preached in all the world by his disciples who shall be chosen in the last days. They are gone forth. The gospel has been preached in almost all the nations of the world. Men and women are accepting its principles. They are becoming members of the Church, full of the Spirit of the Lord and a desire to serve him and keep his commandments.

There is a certain responsibility rests upon us, in respect to our attendance at these conferences. I very often wonder in my mind, in my visits to these conferences, why so many people from all over Zion, and from the missions in the world, can spend their time and their means attending these conferences, and I wonder what benefit we derive from the attendance at the conferences. The Lord commanded through the Prophet Joseph Smith that these conferences should be held, that the people might come up to the center place of Zion and hear the word of the Lord from the presiding authorities of his Church, that their faith in the work of the Lord might be strengthened, that our determination may increase to serve the Lord and keep his commandments. So we come up here, and listen to the presiding authorities of the Church, the presidents of missions and brethren who are called upon from time to time to teach us the word of the Lord. It becomes our duty, in order that the purposes of the Lord might be fulfilled in these conference gatherings, that when we shall go to our homes, when we go to the different stakes and wards of Zion, that we shall reflect the spirit, the admonition, the teaching, that we receive at these conferences in our lives, that by so doing the brethren and sisters who are not able to attend these conferences might be benefited in a general way for our having come up to worship the Lord. Thus I understand why so many of us take advantage of this opportunity of gathering together.

There is a great deal of work for us to do in the Church. We make every effort to send our boys into the mission fields to preach the gospel. We make every sacrifice necessary that they may be sustained while in the world preaching the gospel. We rejoice that they have been considered worthy by the presiding authorities of the Church to go out into the world to preach the gospel. Yet right here at home, in the stakes of Zion, in the wards, there is ample missionary work for us all. Among our neighbors, among our associates and friends, an opportunity presents itself for us to labor, to do missionary work. In this connection, I desire to read from the fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants. Joseph Smith, Senior, early in the beginning of this work, in the year 1829, was full of a desire to promote the work of the Lord as in part it had been revealed to his son, Joseph the prophet. Joseph, Senior, accepted the testimony of his son. Desirous of helping in this great work, he went to his son, and he said: "My boy, what can I do to help this work along? What can I do that the same Spirit of the Lord that I possess, that has been manifest in your ministry, might be felt by all the people of the earth? What may I do to help you to accomplish this work?" And the Lord said, through the Prophet Joseph Smith:

Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men; therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that you serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for behold, the field is white already to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work. Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, goodness, charity, humility, diligence. Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you. Amen. (Doc. and Cov. Sec. 4.)

This is the admonition, the instruction, of the Lord through the Prophet Joseph Smith to his father, and it applies to us in our ministry and service in this Church. If we have a desire to serve the Lord, we are called to the ministry, we are called to set examples that will be worthy of imitation. We are called to use our hands and the powers of our minds in the advancement of the work of the Lord among our associates and friends; and the Lord charges us with the responsibility of being kind, full of love, and full of his Spirit in our ministry among the people, that we shall be charitable towards each other, that we shall uphold the authorities of the Church, that we shall in no way find fault with them or tear down their character, but that we shall sustain them in our ministry and labors, with our faith, prayers and determination, to the end that the work of the Lord may grow and increase in the earth, and that it shall fulfil its destiny among the people.

I rejoice in the testimony of the gospel. I know that it is true. I have no doubt in my mind. I am in harmony with the presiding authorities of the Church. I uphold and sustain them in their work. And when I was called upon a mission, a number of years ago, I remember that President Heber J. Grant set me apart to labor as a missionary in the Sandwich Islands; and I remember in blessing me he placed his hands upon my head and said, "Brother Mendenhall, if you will but serve the Lord, do your duty, rely upon him, the Lord will give you a knowledge of his work. The Lord will enable you to do much good while you labor upon the Islands, and you shall come home in safety. The Lord will prosper you so long as you accomplish the duties of your mission, and keep his commandments." I want to testify to you that the words of the prophet upon my head have been fulfilled. The Lord gave me a knowledge of the Hawaiian language. He gave me power and influence among the people, and I believe I was able to do some good; and upon my return home, I have endeavored to devote my services to the work of the Lord, and I thank him for the blessings that I enjoy. This is my testimony in relation to this work that has been established on the earth for the salvation of the children of men.

May the Lord help us to do our duty, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER PETER M. HANSEN

(President of the Bear River Stake of Zion)

My brethren and sisters: I have greatly rejoiced during this conference in the splendid music that we have heard, and in the admonitions and counsel that we have received from the servants of the Lord who have addressed us. The spirit of humility, peace, and love that has actuated the speakers has certainly made me rejoice that we live in this day and age of the world when the gospel has been revealed, and that we have the privilege of living and enjoying the splendid privileges that are ours, as Latter-day Saints. We rejoice in these privileges, my brethren and sisters, and I feel to honor the Lord and to keep his commandments, and feel that our spirits are in tune with the inspiration that we have received from the brethren in authority in the Church. I hope we all feel grateful for these blessings, and that these things will spur us on to live nearer to the Lord in the future than we have in the past.

In our stake of Zion we have been doing some little missionary work the past year among the people. Special missionaries have been called; and in visiting among the Latter-day Saints, we found too many people in our stake of Zion who did not pray in their families, nor teach prayer in their homes, consequently their children were not becoming accustomed to pray. I fear this condition is too prevalent among us as Latter-day Saints, and consequently many of us have not the spirit of humility and love for the gospel of Jesus Christ that we ought to have burning in our souls. We also found too many who were not observing the Word of Wisdom, as we have heard in this conference. We found that too many of our acting teachers in the stake were not observing this commandment. When they went into the homes of the Latter-day Saints they could not teach this principle, because they were not observing it themselves. As a rule we found our young people living nearer up to this principle than many of our older brethren and sisters. Hence we have found it necessary to take up this labor among the people in our stake of Zion. I testify to you that we have met with splendid results. We have talked over the reports received from different wards, two or three times now. We find a little improvement each time these reports come in, and the brethren and sisters will say, "you shall not have to report again that we are not observing this splendid law."

As we have heard during this conference, this is a splendid law for the Latter-day Saints, and it has been preached to us now, as we have heard from Brother Lyman, for eighty years, and yet I fear that we are no nearer, perhaps, in observing this law than we were many years ago. To me it is a glorious principle. It is both our temporal salvation and financial.

I attended the fair last Saturday, and saw a great many blessings that the Lord has showered upon us, in our crops and in our herds; we can almost produce everything that we need here in this state—beautiful fruits and vegetables and everything else that we need. It seems to me that there should not be an excuse for not living well up to the Word of Wisdom. One can always single out a man who is addicted to tobacco. He is not particular about his person, as a general rule. Hence we ought to take heed to this counsel so often received from the brethren and sisters who live in harmony with this law.

I remember Brother Francis M. Lyman came to our stake on one occasion, and said: "Now, Latter-day Saints, come out this afternoon, and I will teach you how to get rich." Well, we had a pretty good turn-out of the people and he told them: "No matter what you make, what you produce, put away 25 cents every day, and you will see how it will amount up, and you will prosper and the Lord will be with you and bless you."

This has been a prosperous year for the Latter-day Saints. We have enjoyed prosperity, and we have enjoyed the blessings of the Lord generally, and the only way that I can feel satisfied is by remembering the Lord and giving unto him that which belongs to him in tithes and offerings.

I feel grateful for the privilege we enjoy as Latter-day Saints. The spirit of peace, love and union, I pray may be increased among us, that we may have a desire to keep the commandments, and live in harmony with the knowledge we have received and the privileges that we enjoy. I pray that the Lord will bless us and inspire our minds, that we may live according to these practical principles of the gospel, which is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The anthem "Hosannah" was rendered by the choir.

ELDER GEORGE W. McCUNE

(President of the Eastern States Mission)

My dear brethren and sisters: I am glad indeed to be with you today, and partake of the wonderful spirit present. A little story comes to my mind. Once upon a time a splendid old couple lived in a community, and had won the respect of all their neighbors; and their neighbors were wont to show their love for this goodly couple on various occasions. And at one time they presented them with a nice jar of peaches, put up in brandy sauce. It seemed that this good couple did not like peaches, and when they acknowledged the token, they wrote a small note like this: "Dear friends, we regret to say that we did not like the peaches, but we did enjoy the spirit in which they were sent."

I earnestly desire that I may speak to you a few minutes under the Spirit of the Lord which my brethren preceding me have enjoyed, so that you will enjoy the spirit with which I speak to you.

I testify to you that the Spirit of God, like a fire, is burning; and if you have failed to enjoy it here this afternoon, it is not the fault of the brethren who have spoken to you, and it is not the fault of the music that has been rendered, for I do know that the Spirit of God is here, and it is the sweetest thing in all the world. There is no place in all the world where I would rather be than here, today—or rather, just a few steps from here, where I expect soon to be.

I bring you greetings from your sons and daughters who are laboring in the Eastern States mission. I am glad to report that they enjoy a wonderful spirit, that God is with them, that they are doing a wonderful work. I feel that we all need the gospel preached unto us, and I know of no one in all the world who can impress you more thoroughly with the need of a genuine repentance and a knowledge of the truth than those splendid sons and daughters whom you have sent out into the world, and I hope you will send back to them a message of good cheer.

I was delighted in hearing President Wood relate some manifestations of God's power, for it is a fact that our Father in heaven has not changed, and he is pleased to bestow his power upon his servants who will serve him. He is the same yesterday, today and forever. We read of the wonderful blessings he poured out upon his people in ancient times, and I testify that he is willing to do the same to us, if we abide by his laws which called down the blessings of heaven upon them. I testify to you that we are enjoying the same gifts and blessings of God, for they do follow them that believe.

We enjoy many manifestations of God's glorious Spirit in the mission field, and we do at home, I realize. We recently had a little controversy—but I wish to stop here and state that we do not contend with the people of the world. We have no contention whatever with the people of the world, but we have a beautiful message of life and salvation to give to them, a message which gives no offense; it is a positive inspiration for all humanity. We do not contend for it, but give it to the world for their acceptance or rejection.

Upon one occasion, lately, a learned gentleman saw fit to challenge our statements while speaking to a splendid congregation, and he got up and raved about the so-called "Mormons" being the richest people in all the world. He also said that we had come out there to get their women to take them back to Utah, but he seemed to feel very bad that the "Mormon" people were the richest people in all the world, and thought that was a terrible crime. I saw fit to answer him. I told him that we came not for their women, but I had to plead guilty to the second charge that our people were the richest people in all the world. He had made the statement that we owned many stocks and bonds, and one thing and another, but he did not state our original riches. I proceeded to tell him that over 85 per cent of our people own their own homes, and the land, not merely the furniture and fixtures in their homes, but the ground on which their homes were erected, and I pleaded guilty to that. They owned many good things of a worldly nature, and I called their attention to them, that their acquirements had been accomplished in the midst of drivings and persecutions, from the time the Church was organized until the time that we reached the valleys of the mountains, and even after that our Church property had been confiscated. And I called his attention to the fact that we had to meet the same taxation as other people, and we had also made the same contributions, fully up to the standard of any of them, in the recent war; and, in addition to these, our young men, to a very large number, had given at least two years of their time in preaching the gospel, and they had borne their expenses while doing so, and that this necessitates taking them away from the various business interests of the community; and in addition to this we had paid one-tenth of all that God had given us, back to him; and in the face of all this we were the richest people in the world.

I then told them how it had been accomplished. I told them that they were not the greatest riches we possessed, but our greatest riches consisted in having a testimony that God lives, that we know that God has spoken in these last days, that we are willing to accept his wonderful revelations; and through that means we had received and accepted the gospel which is the power of God unto salvation, not only a salvation in the far off eternities, but an immediate salvation, so far as we would live it, and we were being saved temporally. In the words of the speaker I was answering, we were the richest people in all the world. We had the power of God unto salvation, not only intellectually but morally. And I rejoiced exceedingly in being able to proclaim these things.

I rejoice in being present here this afternoon. There has been a wonderful spirit present. I hope I have said nothing to detract from what has been said previously. I felt at the conclusion of the brethren's talk that the feeling was almost too sacred to disturb. It is a wonderful thing to be able to come together and partake of the Spirit of the Lord, as we have today, and I hope that we will strive earnestly to take the message that has been given to us, and live it, for I know it has been an inspiration to all of us.

After listening to the key-note speech of President Grant, and the addresses of the other brethren, I was telling some of my folks, at luncheon, that I felt that they were speaking to me personally, and the others responded with the same thought, that they felt that the message was to them directly. I hope we will all go to our homes feeling earnestly the desire in our hearts that we will keep the commandments, that we will strive to manifest the spirit of love and charity in all our walks and talks in life.

In the world, the greatest difficulty we meet is the sense of indifference, and after we have reasoned with people, and tried to explain the plan of salvation to them, they almost universally come back with the saying, "Well, we are all on the road to the same goal; you are taking one road, and we are taking another, but we are all destined to reach the same goal." What a mistake! The scriptures teach nothing of the kind, but the Master said, there is only one way, and he that entereth by another way is to be accounted as a thief and a robber. We have gone in through the narrow gate into the straight and narrow way, and we cannot afford to step to the right to take advantage of our brethren; we cannot step to the left to steal or to lie or to disobey the commandments of God. We must keep on in the straight and narrow way if we want to become partakers of the kingdom of God. I hope that we will strive earnestly; and these exhortations I want to direct to myself even more than to you.

I rejoice exceedingly that I have been accounted worthy to go out and preach the gospel of my Redeemer. I realize that it is an opportunity. It is a blessed privilege to be given the opportunity to go out into the vineyard and work for the kingdom of God. I find that some are doing that at home. I was exceedingly gratified with the work that the father of one of our missionaries is doing in Ogden, and I had heard of it before. He is sending his friends the Liahona tracts, and other literature, as well as his own testimony, and I was glad to find that he has the same sweet joy and satisfaction in doing these things at home that we enjoy out in the world. And I exhort you, brethren and sisters, to live up to this opportunity so far as it is in your power, for it is a privilege and blessing, and we are all enlisted to it.

I do not desire to take more of your time this afternoon. I feel that it would not be right, inasmuch as we have Brother Smoot and others that we would all like to listen to. As for me, I have heard a definition of a good speech that I like. The British premier says there are three fundamentals to a good speech, and I find much consolation in his definition, because it is the only one that I have hopes of applying to myself. He says, the first is to stand up, the second is to speak up, and the third is to shut up. The blessings of the Lord I earnestly pray for us all, my brethren and sisters, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER REED SMOOT

I have enjoyed the spirit of this conference greatly. I thank my heavenly Father for the privilege I have had of listening to the wonderful testimonies that have been borne, and the explanation of the sayings of the Savior, and the revelations of our heavenly Father. And I, like every one who has attended the conference, without a doubt in our minds, feel that the present conference is among the best conferences ever held by the Church.

I have not the time to take up any special subject as the adjournment hour is nearly at hand.

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD

Yesterday I asked Hon. Albert J. Beveridge of Indiana, to attend the afternoon session of our conference. We came into the temple block by the east gate, and as we walked down the path towards the tabernacle, he stopped and looked at the temple. He asked when the "Mormon" people began to build this magnificent structure. I told him the erection of the building was begun in the year 1853, long before there was a railroad in this country, and at a time when the people had very little of this world's goods. I called his attention to the fact that the building of the temple was an evidence of the faithfulness and loyalty of the people to the work established by God in this dispensation. It did not take so much ready money, but it did take a spirit of determination and sacrifice that could only come through a knowledge that they were working in the service of God. Said he, "What do they use the temple for?" I told him of the sacred ordinances of baptism for the dead; I told him of the eternal marriage covenant, and that our people believed in both, and the vicarious work that was preached by the apostles of old was attended to in our temples. He said, "What do you mean by baptism for the dead?" Said I, "Senator Beveridge, we mean this, that we are carrying out the same instructions in regard to this wonderful principle as taught in the days of the Savior and his ancient apostles. I referred him to Paul's letter to the Corinthians. And he said, "That is wonderful. Are there any other churches in all the world today that preach and practice it?" "No." "Well, tell me the operation." I said, "Suppose my great-grandfather had lived at a time (which he did) before the gospel, as revealed in this dispensation, had ever been preached, or a testimony of an elder of the Church had ever been heard; some relative can be baptized for him. And that is a great part of the work that is done in the temple."

IMPRESSIVENESS OF THE LAIE TEMPLE AND GROUNDS

My brethren and sisters, the world will yet understand the work in our temples in carrying out the revelations and teaching of the Master; and sometime in the near future it will be a potent power to bring the people not only to an investigation of the gospel, but it will bring them to a realization that it is of God.

I had an experience upon the boat not long ago in coming from Honolulu. I have not the time to go into it, but it was with a minister of the gospel telling me that I could find nowhere in the Bible that he believed in or taught from a reference to the principle of baptism for the dead. This conversation was the result of his recent visit to the Hawaiian Islands, and in his drive around the Island of Oahu, he had visited the temple grounds at Laie. And, my brethren and sisters, there have been few visitors to that island since the completion of the temple, and I doubt ever will be, but who will stand in front of that magnificent building, that wonderful approach to the house of the Lord, and receive an impression of the sincerity at least, if not the knowledge, of this people, in temple work.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH'S DEDICATION OF THE TEMPLE SITE

Five years ago I had the privilege of going with President Smith and Bishop Nibley to the Hawaiian Islands. Somehow or other, my heart goes out to those people. They are of the blood of Israel, and the faith spoken of by Brother Wood as found in the people of Samoa is enjoyed by the natives of the Hawaiian Islands, where the power and manifestation of God have been shown among that people. I attended a gathering of the people at Laie in honor of President

Smith, in June, 1915. At the close of the exercises, President Smith came to me and said, "Reed, I want you to take a walk with me." And as we went out of the door, he said to Bishop Nibley, "I wish you would accompany us." I never saw a more beautiful night in all my life; the surroundings were perfect. You who have been at Laie know the surroundings; all nature smiles. We walked toward the meetinghouse. Nothing was said of what we were going for until we stood at the back of the meetinghouse, and President Smith then said: "Brethren, this is the birthday of President Brigham Young, June 1, 1915. I feel impressed to dedicate this ground for the erection of a temple to God, for a place where the peoples of the Pacific Isles can come and do their temple work. I have not presented this to the Council of the Twelve or to my counselors; but if you think there would be no objection to it, I think now is the time to dedicate the ground." I have heard President Smith pray hundreds of times. He has thrilled my soul many times with his wonderful spirit of prayer and his supplications to our heavenly Father. But never in all my life did I hear such a prayer. The very ground seemed to be sacred, and he seemed as if he were talking face to face with the Father. I cannot and never will forget it if I lived a thousand years. Five years, and the temple was completed and dedicated, and it is a marvelous building of beauty and loveliness, as every one who will visit it will see.

LOVE OF THE NATIVES FOR PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH

It was on the Island of Maui that God spoke to President George Q. Cannon. Our heavenly Father told him where to go, the very house to enter, and there he would find a man who would receive him. And it was on those islands that he, as a young man, was given the language by the power of God. And it was on those islands that President Joseph F. Smith began his missionary work.

Talk about people loving a man! I do not believe it is possible for human beings to love a man more than did the natives of the islands love President Joseph F. Smith. Five years ago when he landed at Honolulu, on his arrival at the mission house, there stood in the front door President Smith's native "mamma," blind, but oh, what a greeting there was. No mother and son ever met with greater manifestations of love for each other.

Temple building, temple work, salvation for our dead and salvation for ourselves have just begun; the ninth temple is about to be erected in Arizona. I look to see the time when temples will be erected in all parts of the world, and the peoples of the world will understand that this wonderful principle revealed again to the Prophet Joseph is given for the world's salvation.

WHO ARE THE NATIVE HAWAIIANS?

I said these people were of the blood of Israel. I don't think there is any question about that. They are the direct descendants of Lehi. When I was in Honolulu a little while ago, there was a great conference being held considering the question of where the natives of the islands came from and who they were. I have no doubt they drifted from America. We do know this, that not long ago the government of the United States, in order to determine how the trade winds affected navigation took a bottle and outside of the Golden Gate dropped it into the ocean; and inside of the bottle was a note asking the person finding the bottle to notify the government at Washington, the time and place. Twenty days after the dropping of the bottle into the ocean, outside of the Golden Gate, the bottle was picked up on the shores of Laie, the home of the "Mormon" people. Oh, I have heard President Smith tell those people that Laie should forever be a refuge for the natives of those islands. I have heard him dedicate the ground for that purpose, and I believe it was given by our Father to those people for that very purpose.

Strange, folks say, that one hundred years or more ago, when each of those islands had a king, it was definitely understood by every king over the different islands, and it was lived up to strictly, that whenever a native of any of the islands reached Laie, the place of refuge, there was no power that could remove him from there. Laie was the natives' place of refuge in years past, and today it is the home of the natives belonging to our Church.

May God bless us in our labors, I ask, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang, "The sunset glories of the west."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Andrew Jensen, Assistant Church Historian.

FOURTH OVERFLOW MEETING

A fourth overflow meeting was held in the Bureau of Information assembly hall, Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, October 10.

Elder Richard R. Lyman, of the Council of the Twelve, presided.

The music was furnished by the congregation and the Swanee Singers of Granite Stake, under the direction of Elder J. S. Cornwall.

The singers and congregation sang, "Do what is right."

Prayer was offered by Elder Alfred W. Peterson.

The Swanee Singers sang, "Just as God Leads."

ELDER JONATHAN C. CUTLER

(President of the Curlew Stake of Zion)

It is certainly gratifying to see the interest manifested by the Latter-day Saints in attending our conferences. I presume that on the Temple block, at the present time, in the three buildings, and on the grounds, there are not less than twelve to fifteen thousand Latter-day Saints, eager to get inspiration from the servants of the Lord. To me this is very gratifying and pleasing indeed. I feel truly thankful for the title Latter-day Saint which I bear. I am also pleased, and appreciate the honor to be counted worthy, to be a representative of this great Church. While I feel that I am out of place to be called upon to address the Latter-day Saints who come so far to these conferences, and while I feel that the brethren and sisters who attend would rather hear the general authorities than some of the local brethren, yet, obedient to the call, I comply and desire that the Lord will bless me with his Spirit, and if he has anything to say, through me, I would only be too pleased to give utterance, for I desire to do all the good I can, and as little harm as possible.

The Apostle Peter gives us to understand that God is no respecter of persons, but in all nations he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted of him. We are all God's children. We have a perfect right to be equal. We were created equal, and we have a perfect right to remain equal, according to our works and our diligence here in the earth. But it is true we have our agency. We had it in the beginning, when the spirits were organized in the spirit world. God did not see fit to take our agency from us, but in the spirit world we exercised our free agency, and we still have the privilege here of exercising it. Men and women can do as they please. God is not going to compel us to do anything. As the poet says, "He'll call, persuade, direct aright—in countless ways be good and kind—but never force the human mind." We are all acting on our own resources and responsibilities,—upon our own honor and judgment. God does not interfere, but gives all a chance; and he is no respecter of persons, and the call is to all, regardless of creed.

There seems to be at present in the whole world a disregard for law and order. I look back to my younger days—I am still a boy, but I look back to when I was younger than I am today—and I see a marked change in conditions as they now exist. Remember that law and order were observed in heaven. It is true we had the right to exercise our agency, but, at the same time, law and order were prevailing, even in the spirit world, in heaven. The laws of our government are patterned after the laws of God. Law and order at least should prevail here in this great nation of ours; in fact, they should in the whole world. But there is a strong tendency today to disregard both law and order.

Before I arose from my bed this morning I received a thought that I pondered over. At the place that I was stopping, I heard in the hallway a mother say to her child, "Child, don't go down stairs." And the child said, "Why?"—seemed to rebel at once. That seems to be the condition at the present time; we haven't learned the lesson that Adam learned. You remember the Lord told Adam in the beginning to offer sacrifice. There were no whys nor wherefores with Adam; it was the Lord's right to speak and Adam understood it. You remember a little later, when the angel visited him, he put this question to him, "Adam, why do you offer sacrifice?" Adam said, "I know not, only that God has commanded it."

Above all, I believe that Latter-day Saints should learn this lesson. We are beginning to fall into the ways of the world, and we question the authority of God here on the earth, and when we are asked, as the little child was asked this morning, not to go down the stairs, we want to know why. We do not follow the example of Adam. This seems to be the tendency in the Church today. We find that a great many of our people have lost track of the law of order and rule, and want to be a law unto themselves.

It is very true that in cases, when the time is ripe and proper, we have a right to counsel. For instance, we take the body of law-makers that we have. When they go into council, they have a right there to express their opinions, they have a perfect right to discuss matters, give their ideas, and finally come to a conclusion, and it becomes a law. But then it becomes our duty, as subject to that law, to obey, and not to ask the whys and wherefores. They have taken it into council, and have decided upon the law, and I feel that it is the duty of every one to obey such law and order after it has been established.

With Latter-day Saints, I feel that it is more important even than with other citizens of this great nation of ours. It is true that in the beginning, while in the spirit world, there was a council held; and you remember that God called the gods together. They met in council. No doubt they discussed matters pro and con, but finally they decided upon a plan of redemption. That plan was accepted by all who were there. No doubt we were there, according to the words of Job, because he gives us to understand—or the Lord does, in speaking to him, when he puts this question to him, "Job, declare, if thou hast understanding, where wast thou when this earth was created, when the morning stars sang together, and all of the sons of God shouted for joy?" We were present in the spirit world. We gave a voice of utterance to the plan of redemption, and sanctioned it while in the spirit world. But that did not deprive the spirits of their agency. After that council had decided upon a plan, we find that one man arose and rebelled against that great body. Lucifer, the son of the morning, rebelled against that council. He did not see fit to be governed by law and order, and became a law unto himself; and he had such great influence and power, even after that council had decided upon a plan, that he drew away a third of the hosts of heaven, and they followed him, using their agency. We who were valiant had greater blessings pronounced upon us. The blessing was given to all who were valiant, and kept their first estate, that the time would come when they would have the privilege of coming here upon the earth and taking a body, whereby the spirit might be clothed. We had a clear understanding, no doubt, of our second estate, and we are here now as the Lord promised that we should be, all who were valiant in the spirit world.

Now, I believe above all that the Latter-day Saints should be subject to law and order. I believe I am thoroughly converted to the fact that all Latter-day Saints, when the law goes forth, have not the privilege to ask the whys and wherefores, because when we do this, I am sure that we grieve the Spirit of the Lord, and it leaves us. We read in the Doctrine and Covenants, where the Lord says, That it mattereth not whether he speaks by his own voice, or the voice of his servants, it is binding upon the hearer. Amos gives us to understand that "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but that he reveals his secrets unto his servants the prophets." God has never had a people that he acknowledged upon the earth, for whom he did not provide a mouthpiece to lead them. After God had visited the boy prophet, and after the organization of the Church, Joseph was apparently left to himself, and he led the people as a prophet of God. And we are still led by that same authority here today. So it matters not whether the Lord speaks direct, or whether he speaks as he always has spoken, through his mouthpieces here on the earth; and it pains me to see the disrespect for the authority of God here in the earth that we find is being manifest among the Latter-day Saints.

I feel that we are living in the time that the Apostle Paul saw, and many of the other apostles and prophets. We are living in the times that Daniel saw. We are living in the day that John the Revelator saw when he said, "I saw an angel flying through the midst of heaven," etc. We are living in that very day. The angel Moroni has come. He has delivered his message unto mankind, he has delivered the record of the forefathers, the Nephites and the Lamanites, and the work is established again here upon the earth with the promise that no other people have ever enjoyed, and that is this, that it shall never be taken from the earth nor given to another people. This is the knowledge that Latter-day Saints possess today, that this gospel which is here never will be given to another people—though we have no particular promise that you and I will remain faithful; that depends upon our own works, our own acts, whether we remain firm and true or not.

I am reminded of a prediction made by Heber C. Kimball. And I remember quoting this at one time in Summit county when I was there on a Mutual mission, and at the close of the meeting an elderly man came to me, and he corroborated what I said, except that while I put it "half," he said, "You have made a mistake; I heard him make the utterance, that the day would come that two-thirds of the Latter-day Saints would apostatize and leave the Church." I got this from this witness, who heard him say so.

I ponder over this at times, and I wonder what is going to be the outcome. It is true, we are naturally looking after self, but when we take a broad view of the situation of life and the hereafter, we are only one royal family. While, of course, we desire to be saved, with our immediate kin and relatives—and that seems to be the nearest and dearest wish to us—I believe our ambition is stronger, and we are working harder to save our immediate family, which I feel is perfectly right and well. I believe we are just a little bit too selfish along this line. I have often thought this that I would not be fortunate if my family were saved or exalted and all of my neighbors and associates were not enjoying the same blessing that I enjoy. I accept life as a reality. I accept life after we leave here as a reality. I believe the way I am living here I will want to live after I leave here. I believe the company that I enjoy here I will want to enjoy after I leave here; and for that reason the communities that I live in and the good people that I get acquainted with and want to associate with here, I believe I will want to associate with when I get on the other side. And so I take a broad view of the situation, and the reality of life here and hereafter; I have the same interest for my neighbor, for my fellow man that I have for myself.

I feel, then, that we should mete out charity to one another. I feel that we should live here as we desire to live when we go on the other side. I have heard a great many people express themselves that when we get on the other side there will be an awful change, that the separation that we call death is going to bring about a wonderful change—habits that we have formed here, things that we have been accustomed to here will leave us, that we will not be bothered with these bodies when we leave here. This is not the doctrine taught by Alma, by any means. It is just the reverse. And I believe that as Ecclesiastes says, "As we lay the body down, so shall we take it up again." I believe that if we have formed an evil habit, that habit will stay with us until we overcome it. If it would not, there would be no justice; mercy would take the place of justice, which God says is not going to be—for mercy will claim its own, justice will demand its own—and if the change which we call death is going to make us perfect, I see no use of the extra exertion to be what we should be here in the flesh. But I am converted to the fact that when we leave here we will find ourselves in the condition just where we left this life.

For an illustration, I am going to tell of an instance that occurred while I was laboring in Summit county, to show to you that the appetites which we have here go with us, and we only get rid of them by sacrifice. And I am converted that it is easier to get rid of these things here than it is after we leave here. I called at the home of a good brother and his wife and family. In our discussion, I found he had been a strong, heavy tobacco user. He told me of his experience in quitting this habit. He told me that his brother had died some two years before, and that he also was a heavy tobacco user.

After he had been dead two or three months, he appeared to his brother and his brother's wife, at their bedside, and said, "John, get up and roll me a smoke." His brother obeyed and got up and rolled him a smoke and offered it to him, and he appeared to sit down on a chair, and his brother sat down by the side of him: and he said, "You inhale it;" and he obeyed. His brother held the third draw and he said, "That will do; now I can leave the earth."

This coincides with what Parley P. Pratt gives us in the Key to Theology. Here was a man who had been dead two or three long months, and according to his own testimony, he had not been able to leave the earth and go to the spirit world, but had been hovering around the earth. Parley P. Pratt tells us in the Key to Theology that at the place where the evil deeds are committed, the spirits linger in wretched loneliness for months. Now, according to the statement of this good brother, which I could not deny after questioning him, his brother came to him. I tried to make him think that it was imaginary, but he turned to his good wife and said, "Mother, did we imagine that my brother came, or was it real?" She said, "We were as wide awake as we are at the present time; we walked to him and conversed with him, and on leaving us, he went into the other room and awoke our elder son and he talked with him."

I bring this up as an illustration, because I have heard some of our good old brethren and sisters, and some of our younger ones say, I will take the extra stripe, I will satisfy the appetite while I am here, and take my chances on the other side. Now, this good brother, who had formed that habit, after the visitation of his brother to him, said, "If this is the condition of my brother, who left with that appetite, I am going to make the sacrifice and quit." He bore his testimony to me that it had been two long years since he had touched tobacco.

Now I want to say to you, my brethren and sisters, in all candor, that life is a reality here, and I believe as we live here we will live after we leave here. I believe if I do not want to associate with a man here, he would be very repulsive to me on the other side. If I could not make him a congenial companion here, I do not believe I would want to on the other side, until some differences had been adjusted.

Do we find conditions of this kind in our neighborhood today? I believe we do. We find neighbors who will not speak to neighbors. We find enmity exists, even in the settlements, and in some cases, in the immediate homes of the Latter-day Saints. It is entirely wrong, and this should be eradicated from the heart of every Latter-day Saint.

I want to leave my witness that this body of Latter-day Saints may know the gospel is true. I know that God lives. I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet, raised up in these the last days to bring about God's purposes before the second coming of Christ here to reign in the earth. The living oracles are here, handed down from Presidents Young, Taylor, Woodruff, Snow, down to President Smith—and today Heber J. Grant stands as a mouthpiece to us, and I say, God bless him, bless his associates, his counselors and the apostles, and all of the presiding authorities; and I would exhort you, my brothers and sisters, to pray for them, sustain them, and uphold them, and if we will do it, God will sustain and uphold us, but if we do not, I am afraid we will be left to ourselves, and we will apostatize and leave the Church, as was predicted by Brother Kimball.

May the Lord bless you, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MCGREGOR

(President of the Beaver Stake of Zion)

I have been very much impressed, my brethren and sisters, at this conference with the necessity of doing something, impressed with the fact that this gospel is a gospel of service, and that in order to get the blessings of eternal life, we have something to do upon our part other than merely assent to the divinity of the mission of Jesus Christ.

I recall when in the east at one time—I think Brother Lyman was there at Ann Arbor—the Reverend E. Fay Mills held a protracted meeting there, and he showed us the necessity, in his way, of accepting Jesus Christ, and the results if we failed to do this while we were sojourning here in mortality; and he told a little story about a young lady who had been in the choir and who had not confessed the Savior. After his meeting, she had taken suddenly ill with pneumonia, and died within a few days. In the hymn book she had used she had written, "Almost persuaded." He showed the terrible condition of that young lady—if she had just been a little more zealous, she would have been persuaded, and therefore would have received the blessings of eternal life—as it was, she would go to hell, and remain there in torment throughout the countless ages of eternity!

Now we do not believe any such rubbish. We believe that whatever we get, we get through obedience to the laws and commandments of the gospel. John the Revelator, saw the books opened, and another book, which was the book of life, and the dead were judged out of the things that were written in the book, according to their works; and we believe that we will get just what we merit, and not go to just the one place or the other.

You know the old darkey in the south was preaching, and he was telling the people that they would either go to hell fire or else damnation, when they died—either one place or the other; and one of the congregation said, "What is that you say?"

And he said, "Yes, that is right, you will go either one place or the other."

Then the darkey in the congregation said, "Then this darkey will take to the woods."

And many of us would have to take to the woods, were it not for the provision that our heavenly Father has made for us that we will get what we earn and work for here, during this probation.

I think one of the most beautiful sections in the Doctrine and Covenants is what is commonly termed the "Vision." You know the Lord showed Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery that there was more than one place, and made it clear to them that there were many mansions in the Father's kingdom, and that we would not all go to the same place. Prior to this time, of course, it was believed that there was no half-way house—we went either to heaven or to hell.

I will not take your time to read this section—you are all more or less conversant with it—but you remember the great blessings that the Lord has in store for those who go to the celestial kingdom. Those are the ones who are faithful, who are valiant here in this life for the gospel and for the principles of truth that have been laid down for our guidance by the Savior of the world.

Then we have another class, who were not so valiant, who got into the terrestrial kingdom. And I wish you to notice there that among them are those to whom the Savior went and preached in the spirit world, those to whom he went and unlocked the prison door, that they might accept the gospel. Why should not they get into the celestial kingdom? Why should they be shut out, if they then would accept it, and do the works? They have had the privilege, brethren and sisters, of accepting the gospel here on earth. It had been preached to them, and they had refused to accept it in mortality; and therefore they were not in a position to get all the blessings that the Lord has in store for his faithful children.

You will recall that Alma, in preaching to the Zoramites, told them to repent and turn unto the Lord ere it be too late. And many have said, "Why has Alma spoken in this way?" Because we believe that there is a chance hereafter; and talk about the night coming when no work can be done—we think we will do a great deal of work hereafter, and that those who have not accepted the gospel here in mortality will do so on the other side. But, mind you, Alma was speaking to those people, the Zoramites, who were apostates. They had once accepted the gospel and then rejected it, and therefore they could not then have the opportunity that they might have had if they had not heard the gospel. It would have been better for them if they never had heard it than to have heard it and rejected it here.

And so we find that among those in the terrestrial kingdom are those to whom the Savior went, those people who had had the opportunity here while they were in mortality of accepting the gospel, and rejected it; and therefore they did not get a celestial glory, they were not valiant. There were some honest hearted people among them, but they had been blinded by the worldly things, and while they might accept the Savior as a divine being and as the Redeemer of the world, yet they had not with full purpose of heart accepted the gospel and done the works that the Savior required at their hands. Therefore they could not get the blessings.

So it rests upon this point, my brethren and sisters, to be valiant, valiant in the cause of our heavenly Father. What are we to do in order to be valiant? Why, keep the commandments, not one or two or three, or any stated number, but all the commandments that our heavenly Father has given us. You know the erroneous idea that the young man was working under who came to the Savior and wanted to know what good thing he might do in order to obtain eternal life. He seemed to think that by doing one good, great thing, he would get all the blessings that our heavenly Father has in store for his faithful children; but the Savior disillusioned his mind; he explained to him that he should keep the commandments, and that it was not one. In fact he told the Jews, on one occasion, that they took tithes of mint and anise, and so on, but neglected the weightier matters of the law—the first they ought to do, but not to leave the other undone.

We must keep all the commandments; and so, today, I believe it is a splendid thing for us to take stock of ourselves and find out where we stand. If we are in business, we often take stock—we take stock each year—and find out our assets and liabilities, and just where we stand financially. Isn't it a good thing to take stock of ourselves religiously, and find out just where we stand? Are we keeping the commandments of our heavenly Father, so far as we know them? Do we pay our tithes and offerings honestly before the Lord, from month to month? If not, then let us wake up and do those things. Are we attending our sacrament meetings? Are we responding to the calls of those who are over us in authority and performing every labor and duty required at our hands? Are we keeping up our communications with the heavens? Are we thanking the Lord, and not being guilty of the sin of ingratitude in not thanking him for his goodness to us from day to day—and asking for the things that we need? I do not think we all ask for just what we ought to have. In many instances, perhaps, we are praying for those things that would not be good for us, if we got them. Let us be careful not to ask the Lord for anything we ought not to have, and then when we do ask for his blessings and ask for things that will be beneficial for us to have, we can do it in sincerity, in faith, believing that he will hear and answer us. I believe that oftentimes we think the Lord ought to respond the moment we ask him; and if he does not, we think that our prayers have not been answered and he has turned a deaf ear to us, and that there is no efficacy in prayer.

It is a little, as I remember, like an incident that occurred some time ago. I had an uncle who was an apostate, and he was talking about this revelation on war. He said that Joseph Smith was a far-sighted man, and of course, he could see what was coming, and that there was a clash coming between the north and the south. And I said, "Why was it that he could see that other nations would step in, even the nation of Great Britain, and that they would be asked for help by the south, and they would grant it?"

He said, "That shows that he was wrong, because it says they would call upon other nations, and other nations upon others, until all nations of the earth should be involved—that was not fulfilled, and therefore it is like the old adage of the law 'false in one thing, false in all,' and therefore we can throw it all away."

I did not know how to answer him then, but now we can answer him. We can see how Great Britain and other nations have been involved in war; and we have taken these things in too small a compass, and have not been broad enough to realize that the Lord often requires time to perform his work.

It reminds me of a little story I have heard of a little boy who wanted a baby in the home, and finally he asked his father if he might pray for one. His father told him yes, he might, if he wished; and so for some months, whenever he said his prayers at night, he would ask the Lord to send a baby to their home. But no baby came, and he got tired and he quit asking for one. Finally one morning when he came downstairs, the nurse took him into the bedroom, and there were twins! He said, "Pa, it is a good thing I stopped praying when I did." So, I think it is a splendid thing for us to exercise a little patience and he will hear our pleadings. I am sure that he will. But do not let us neglect any of the duties that are incumbent upon us.

I am thankful to the Lord that he has made provision for his children, and that very, very few of them will be lost, that even in the telestial, the lowest degree of glory, where all the wicked people and those who fail to get the terrestrial or the celestial glory will go (except the sons of perdition), the joy is beyond our ability to understand, it is so great and glorious. Is not this a grand idea, to think the Lord has made such provision for his children? Is it not worth the effort, my brethren and sisters, to ask to obtain the blessings that he has prepared for his children here upon the earth. And yet we ought not to be satisfied with anything but the highest, because the terrestrial is so grand that the prophet says that he could not explain it to the people, it was so grand. We do not wish to be satisfied with that—we do not want to be left without our companions, our wives, or our children—we want to work for a higher degree of glory. We may not be able to become great jurists or great scientists—our mental capacity may prevent us from being such—but we can be true Latter-day Saints. We have the ability, each and all of us, to do that, and the Lord does not require anything at our hands, save he provides ways and means for us to perform the commandment that he has given us, as Nephi has told us. So that, if we try, he just judges us by the intents of our hearts, and not always by what we do. I am very thankful for that.

When it comes to the sons of perdition—they are those who sinned, wilfully, knowingly, after having tasted the good word of God and had been partakers of the gifts and powers of the world to come, and then threw it all away, rejected the Savior, crucified him, put him to an open shame—they are, as the prophet has said, like men standing and seeing the sunshine and yet declaring it does not shine. They are those who wilfully and deliberately cast themselves overboard on the sea of life. They alone will be lost, and thank the Lord they are very few.

I pray the Lord to bless us, my brethren and sisters, and help us that we may work and see the necessity of work. You know when you go out into the world, very often people will open their Bibles to the passage in which Paul says, "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."

And I was glad the other day to hear Brother Richards explain, that "God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever should believe in him, should not perish," etc., and then go on and explain that works as well are necessary, that we have something to do on our part.

When we hear the teachings of this conference, let us not be like the man who built his house on the sand, but like the man who built his house upon the rock. Let us be doers of the word, and not hearers only. In order that we may get the blessings, we must do the works, and if we do, we are as sure of our pay as anyone can be.

I think it was Cardinal Wolsey who, at his death, had been deprived by the king of all his emoluments, and who said:

Had I but served my God with half the zeal I served my king, he would not, in mine age, have left me naked to mine enemies.

If we will keep the commandments of the Lord, we can be sure that we will get our reward. God help us all to do it, I ask, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER NELSON D. HOGAN

(President of the Idaho Stake of Zion)

My brethren and sisters: I can say that I have been delighted with the splendid counsel that we have received at this and all the sessions of this conference; and if we can take some of the things home that we learn here, and put them into practice in our every day life, we will get something out of coming to conference; but, on the other hand, if we go home and pay no more attention to what we have heard here, and do not put it into our lives, I do not think we will get very much good out of it. So, I trust, my brethren and sisters, that what we have heard in the different sessions of this conference, we will try to take home and practice so that we will be benefited by meeting together.

I believe, my brethren and sisters, that we will get everything we earn. If we are faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord and that which he asks us to do, we will get the blessings for these things; and, on the other hand, if we are neglectful and careless and indifferent, and do not the things that the Lord has required of us, we cannot expect to get something for nothing. I often think of it this way, that if we start to work for a man, we generally know what we are to get out of it. We know just about what the wages will be, and if we are faithful in performing our duty, we will get a full pay. On the other hand, if we are careless, indifferent, lie around part of the time, when we come to get our pay, we will only get a part pay, and that is all we will ask for. I believe it is the same with the gospel. We know what we will get out of it, if we are faithful.

So, it is up to us to be faithful and try to do everything we can for the cause and for ourselves. This is an individual work. I can not work out your salvation, nor can you work out mine; we have each to work out our own, and work together and in harmony one with another. And if we can do this, our reward will be great.

I was very much surprised when I was called to take a part in this meeting, thinking perhaps they had made a mistake in calling upon me to come here to talk to the people; but if I should relate some of the circumstances in my life, you would say I should have no reason to stand back. I was reared in the Church, but I am sorry to say that quite a lot of my life I did not improve the opportunities as I should have done. Still, I have acted as a bishop for fourteen years, and obtained some experiences out of this work. I have acted in the capacity of a stake president for three or four years. I am thankful, my brethren and sisters, that I have been counted worthy of these responsible positions, and I trust that I may live worthy, so that I can claim the blessings in store for the faithful.

I ask the Lord to bless us, and cause that the things that we have heard at this splendid conference, will be taken home and incorporated into the practices of our lives; they will then be of benefit to us. I ask the Lord to help us, that we may continue faithful to the end; and I ask it in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER THOMAS D. REESE

(President of the Juab Stake of Zion)

I have been delighted with the spirit of the conference. It has thrilled me with the idea that our people are up-to-date in meeting the issues that stand before us. I have been impressed with the spirit that we, as a people, should be careful in our utterances, that we should use discretion and judgment in these days of feverish political excitement, and not stand at our back fence and quarrel with our neighbor over some things that probably little concern us. I have seen neighbors sometimes disputing and quarreling over men whom they will never see on this earth, save it be in the magazines, whose hand they will never clasp, and yet their brother across the fence, by some untimely misjudged statement, they offend, and there will be then in their hearts anger and sadness, and the Spirit of the Lord will not find free place in which to thrive.

In our stake, when I see men that become excited over politics, I have said that they are like some patients that I have had—when the fever gets to 105, I look for them to be delirious, and I pull out my thermometer and test their temperature. When it is 105 they oftentimes say things that they do not know that they are saying. So when I meet a brother who is radical and talking upon the street too loud, I reach for my thermometer, and if his political temperature is 105, I say, "Brother, you are delirious, you ought to go home for fear that somebody else will catch the contagion."

I was very much impressed with the remarks of Brother Lyman this morning, when he spoke of the tobacco question. He said that as a people we should hold out our hands and stay the evil, or any other evils that may be in our midst. I have thought of this very much in connection with a lesson that I learned in life when I was a young man attending college in the east.

In one of the big cities I had the privilege of studying in the anatomy room of the university with a great number of other students of the subject, and I was working along, doing some of the extra work to earn a little money to remain at college, and I had the duty of going down to the morgue and there looking over the bodies that were unclaimed, that no one knew, and from those unclaimed bodies the state in that section gave the college the permission to take for scientific investigation or into the anatomy room.

On one occasion, I stood there as the police force brought into the morgue a beautiful girl, seemingly, to look at her, and one of the men said, "This lady is a graduate from the slum, and we found her lifeless in the gutter."

That so impressed me that I became immediately interested in that lady, and letters were sent out all over the country, asking people to come and identify her, and it was not long before the advertisements from papers were being answered and letters were being answered from different police headquarters, asking about that young lady, and many a mother and many a father, and many a brother walked through that morgue to see if it were their daughter or sister, and O the expressions of sadness!

On one occasion there came an old lady, tottering upon her cane, and she was repeating as she came in the door, "Little Mary, I have found you; little Mary, I have found you." Some of the men escorted her up to the casket, but as she looked upon it she said, "No, no, not my little Mary—but somebody else's little Mary."

The words so impressed me that I thought, would it not have been right if some hand could have reached out and prevented this girl from destroying that beautiful body—because there was every mark upon it of dissipation, her arms had been pitted where she had used some of the vile and serious drugs that some people get in the habit of using. And I thought to myself, what right did that girl have to cause probably the sorrow that she must have caused somewhere to some home? And I thought of the words of the old lady, "Somebody's little Mary." There must have been hundreds of little Marys who had wandered away from their homes and forgotten to write back to father and mother, and caused them sorrow and anguish; had destroyed the body that they had received and that should have given to this earth again bodies.

And why are we so anxious to say to the boy, we are going to stop you from using tobacco, stop you from destroying your body? That is one of our missions, because, boy, your soul is greater, far greater, probably, than you understand. As Latter-day Saints, we understand that our boys and girls, who stand by our sides are our greatest wealth in this world and in the eternities. They will stand in the presence of God with us, as the riches above all riches that can be thought of in this earth, because we expect from that boy and girl that they will join in the perfection of godliness, and we expect, if they reach the perfection that the Savior spoke about, that they can in time stand out in the universe and create worlds like the one that we stand upon, with all the mountains and the valleys and the seas and the wealth that are in them. We hold that our boys' and our girls' souls are greater than the combined wealth of the world, if we can save them in godliness to our Father in heaven; and therefore we have a right to stay anything that will destroy their bodies, or lead them away from this, the work of the Lord.

And may God bless us, that we will understand this duty toward our boys and our girls and our neighbors, and that vile thoughts and anger and bitterness will not be a part of our lives, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Swanee Singers sang, "The Americans come."

ELDER ALFRED L. BOOTH

(Of the Fourth Ward of Provo)

(Bishop Booth was standing up in the congregation, when Elder Lyman called him directly from the audience to speak.)

I think that you can perhaps sympathize with me, because I had no more idea of this than you have that you will be next.

I have enjoyed the remarks of the brethren, in the meeting, and I have been thinking how Zion is growing. We attempted to go to the tabernacle, at half-past one, and were told that the seats were all taken, so that presidents of stakes were being turned away that early. And if that is the case, at half-past one, it appears that we may have to arrange after a while so that only the presidents of stakes shall come to the conference, because, as I understand it, they ought to be there in order to get the instructions, to give to their congregations in the various stakes of Zion. I remember when my father, who was a cripple, came to conference, that he always remained in the tabernacle, in a good seat, during the noon hour, going without his dinner, for fear that he could not get back to listen to the instructions of the brethren; but in those days I am certain they did not have overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall and Bureau of Information building.

Another thing I have been impressed with, too, as a difference between those days and these. As I remember it, in the days of President Young, he said that they had only one honest doctor in the Church, and that was Dr. Riggs, of Provo, and he did not know enough to kill a man. You have listened to two of the doctors this afternoon. It seems that they have learned how not to kill people, but how to save them. President McGregor and President Reese, to whom you have listened in this meeting this afternoon, are both practicing physicians, both reputable men of the community, and both presidents of stakes—so you can see that Zion is growing. In those days I do not know what would have been said if they had made a doctor a president of a stake.

Not only that, but it is not long since that we had one of our most prominent presidents of stakes die, who was a member of that other despised class, the lawyers, President Richard W. Young; and in the early days they looked upon the lawyers as even worse than the doctors. [Elder Lyman said: "He happens to be a lawyer himself."] It seems that either the doctors and the lawyers must be getting better, or else the people are getting more liberal in their attitude toward some of these things.

But I have been taught all my life, however, that the gospel which we believe in embraces the whole truth of the universe; and if there is anything virtuous, or lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy, our Articles of Faith say, we seek after these things; so that it is the cry of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that we shall go onward and upward until we become perfected, even as our Father in heaven is perfect. Amen.

The Swance Singers sang, "Sextette from Lucia."

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

As some others have already said, it is gratifying to see what progress we are making. Latter-day Saints are not satisfied with preaching and hearing sermons, or with praying and hearing prayers. These do not bring salvation.

PEOPLE ARE TO BE JUDGED BY THEIR WORKS

Those who are merciful, charitable, industrious, studious, those who are struggling to overcome shortcomings, weaknesses and imperfections, are those who are really Saints. These are they who are truly Christians. In these important respects, we are getting better all the time.

I was gratified with the keynote speech sounded by President Heber J. Grant in the first part of our conference session, in which he instructed us to keep the commandments. He repeated a portion of a poem:

And in self-judgment, if you find
Your deeds to others are superior;
To you has Providence been kind,
As you should be to those inferior;
Example sheds a genial ray
Of light, which men are apt to borrow;
So first improve yourself today,
And then improve your friends tomorrow.

Such sentiments are a part of the genuine gospel of Jesus Christ. Those who live such teachings are really Saints.

This quotation, as President Grant explained, was from a poem that was sung to him by Francis M. Lyman about forty years ago.

As his son, let me say to you that I have known no other human being who lived more strictly in accord with what he himself thought to be right than did Francis M. Lyman. He has been called by many the great teacher of the Church. No one ever saw him or heard him teach a lesson in accordance with which he himself did not live. He never asked another to do more than he himself was doing.

FAVORITE HYMN OF THE LATE PRESIDENT FRANCIS M. LYMAN

President Penrose, in his opening remarks, quoted from one of his own hymns—the favorite hymn of the late President Francis M. Lyman. I am going to read all of it:

School thy feelings, O my brother,
Train thy warm, impulsive soul;
Do not its emotions smother,
But let wisdom's voice control.
School thy feelings, there is power
In the cool, collected mind;

Passion shatters reason's tower,
Makes the clearest vision blind.

School thy feelings; condemnation
Never pass on friend or foe,
Though the tide of accusation
Like a flood of truth may flow.

Hear defense before deciding,
And a ray of light may gleam,
Showing thee what filth is hiding
Underneath the shallow stream.

Should affliction's acrid vial
Burst o'er thy unsheltered head,
Shool thy feelings to the trial,
Half its bitterness hath fled.

Art thou falsely, basely slandered?
Does the world begin to frown?
Gauge thy wrath by wisdom's standard,
Keep thy rising anger down.

Rest thyself on this assurance:
Time's a friend to innocence,
And the patient, calm endurance
Wins respect and aids defense.

Noblest minds have finest feelings
Quiv'ring strings a breath can move,
And the gospel's sweet revealings,
Tune them with the key of love.

Hearts so sensitively moulded,
Strongly fortified should be,
Trained to firmness and enfolded
In a calm tranquility.

Wound not wilfully another;
Conquer haste with reason's might;
School thy feelings, sister, brother,
Train them in the path of right.

The intense feelings of some who are engaged in the present political campaign, I think, prompted the words of President Heber J. Grant on the subject of charity. Every word in this hymn applies to that same subject, and to the more or less serious general condition now existing.

Ours is the gospel of Jesus Christ. It has been revealed—the heavens were opened more than a hundred years ago—and we ought to put forth our best efforts to live as the Savior himself lived, thus overcoming our shortcomings.

THE HOME THE BEST MEASURE OF RELIGION

We are measured best with respect to our religion in our own homes. Are we kind? Are we generous? Are we thoughtful? Are we loving? Or are we unfair, are we unkind, are we dishonest?

It is so easy to retaliate, it is so easy to exhibit temper, it is so easy to speak harshly, it is so satisfying, momentarily, to get revenge. On these points we have one glorious, one divine example. The great Master himself was persecuted, he himself was hated, this Divine One was crucified. During the agony of his crucifixion came that matchless, that divine example. In that moment of greatest distress, in the anguish of his broken heart, and just before his spirit fled, he crowned his perfect life with a perfect crown, when he exclaimed, "O, Father, forgive them," I beg of thee, "for they know not what they do."

That is the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ. That is the lesson we are trying to teach in this great conference. May this spirit go into every quarter of the Church, that we may be made happier and better, I humbly pray, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The singers and congregation sang, "High on the mountain top."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder David R. Lyon of the Ensign Ward and Stake of Zion.

CLOSING SESSION

Conference was called to order in the Tabernacle, at 2 o'clock by President Heber J. Grant who presided.

The choir sang, "God is my refuge and strength."

Prayer was offered by Elder Wm. H. Richards, President of the Malad Stake of Zion.

Wm. Worley sang a solo entitled, "If with all your hearts you truly seek me."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I am inclined to think that we will have to arrange, in the future, to have four days for conference. It seems that we can't get through in three days.

A LETTER FROM ELDER GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I have a letter from the absent member of the Council of the Twelve, Brother George Albert Smith. I would like to read it all to you—some four or five pages—but I shall read only a very few words:

Owen Woodruff is making good. He is a splendid man, and I hope to give him every opportunity and encouragement that lies within my power.

Owen Woodruff is a grandson of President Wilford Woodruff, and the son of the late Elder Abram O. Woodruff, of the Council of the Twelve:

President Angus J. Cannon is doing a wonderful work, and in my judgment ought not to be released until next spring, unless you have somebody to take his place who is thoroughly familiar with conditions in Switzerland and Germany. President Cannon has endeared himself to the members of the Church all over. He loves them and they love him, and his heart is in the work. But for his mother and son I am sure he would be pleased to remain here indefinitely. His wife is doing a noble work, she stands by him and does her best all the time. I visited, as far as my time would permit, the various conferences of Switzerland and Germany. President Cannon has nine men working full time in Switzerland, and thirty-eight giving full time in Germany, in addition to the five elders who have come from Utah. These men are all expecting to perform missions of two years or more. Many of them are traveling without purse or scrip and it is a real joy to see the faith that they manifest and to hear how the Lord blesses them.

We held a meeting with the German missionaries at Leipzig. There were thirty-three present. As neat and fine a class of missionaries as I have ever seen. I was sorry to be compelled to leave them. We held conferences in different parts of Germany, the largest being at Chemnitz where more than seven hundred people assembled. We had a joyful time. * * *

From present indications the Swiss and German mission will be the big end of the European mission, so that in selecting a successor for President Cannon, I hope you will choose a strong man who understands the people and can do the work.

I wrote Brother Smith that we had chosen just that kind of a man; no better; and I believe you can all testify to that fact, after hearing Brother Ballif here today:

The New Home in Basel is all that could be desired. It is a commodious place that will be a credit to the Church, and there is plenty of room to build a chapel sufficiently large to take care of all our people who assemble there. I feel to compliment President Cannon on the purchase that he has made.

ELDER HYRUM G. SMITH

(Presiding Patriarch of the Church)

I think I am duly sensitive of the position to which I have been called, and I am very grateful indeed that the Lord permitted me to come into this sphere of action, through that wonderful and blessed lineage spoken of here this morning by the president of the Church. It has been made known to us that we are direct descendants of that Joseph who was sold by his brothers, who dared to stand for that wonderful principle which gave him his standing before his fellowmen, that principle of virtue which has made him and his posterity blessed in all the land, which has been given him by blessing through the patriarch that was blest of the Lord to have such a noble son.

"There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated; and when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated." During this conference we have been admonished to keep the commandments of the Lord. Therefore, we must first learn them, and from this quotation which I have just read we learn that we must obey the law upon which our blessings are predicated, if we get our blessings.

While my brethren have been speaking to you in plainness, and inspired of the Lord, my heart has burned with enthusiasm and with that testimony which has been born in me of the truth of the work and of the importance of it; and oh, how I have wondered why we are not more faithful. But then the thought comes, well, we are just mortals. We are weak, and wonderfully weak sometimes. We need the encouragement of one another. We need the support of one another as brothers and sisters in very deed. We need the prayers of one another. And when I see my brethren stand up in public and pray for the president of the Church and his counselors and the members of the Twelve Apostles and then all the rest of the brethren who are called to hold positions of responsibility in the Church, I always come in for my share of the blessings because I need it. And therefore I would like to admonish my brethren and sisters to think of one another when we pray in our homes, think of those who need the blessings of the Lord. And I testify that the prayers of the Saints do prevail for good. I think we have a wonderful testimony in this direction, in the sustaining blessings that have come to those who have spoken in this conference. Everyone has spoken under the influence and power of the Holy Spirit in answer to the prayers of the Saints; those who have gathered here in this great conference and the many hundreds, who are unable to meet with us, many of them scattered throughout the nations of the world, who know of this occasion and are earnestly praying that the blessings of the Lord be upon this conference and upon those who are called to direct and preside in Israel.

I testify unto my brethren and sisters, that the Lord lives, that he is blessing the land for our benefit. I have gone through many stakes of Zion during the past summer. I have seen the products of the earth in bounteous harvests in all the land that I have visited; and oh, I do pray that the Saints will remember the Lord, in their harvests, for he has abundantly blest them. Water has been secured in the many wonderful canals and rivers that thread this country, the land has been blest, the homes of the peoples have been blest. We have been wonderfully provided for; and through all the stress of the high cost of living, none of us are particularly suffering. We can turn to the Lord and thank him abundantly, and as a humble servant, of the Lord, I do petition him in your behalf (and with you I wish to be numbered) to give unto you faith to acknowledge his hand in your blessings, temporally and spiritually, and faith to remember him in your tithes and offerings, and when you humble yourselves in prayer around the family altar, remember those whom the Lord has called to hold positions of responsibility, each and all in their callings, as they may labor either at home or abroad. And oh, brethren and sisters, let us not be compelled to keep the commandments of the Lord. Let us love the Lord in such a way that we may not have to be compelled by the governments, either local or general, to keep our Father's biddings. Shame on us, if we have to be compelled. For then we are looked upon as slothful in very deed.

I bless you, my brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord Jesus, that through your faithfulness and obedience to the laws and commandments of the Lord you may not be looked upon as slothful, nor forgetful of your privileges, your blessings, or your birthrights, but that you may acknowledge the hand of God, and learn and love to live and keep his commandments in your homes, and in your labors, whether directly or indirectly, in his service. I bless you, my brethren and sisters, that you may have strength of memory sufficient to take home with you the spirit and teaching of this conference, and that you may not be forgetful of the kernels of truth and light, and that you may not be so burdened with the numerous teachings that you will lose sight of the important things, but remember them and put them into practice, and teach them to the many hundreds of our number who are not able to attend this conference.

I bless you, my brethren and sisters, that you may be Saints in very deed, through your faithfulness and your devotion to the teachings which have been given in this conference, and may God be ever honored and glorified for his manifold mercies unto us as his children, I pray, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JAMES N. LAMBERT

(Recently Returned President of the New Zealand Mission)

I am indeed surprised, my brethren and sisters, to be called to occupy this position, but, nevertheless, I feel honored; and I trust that the few remarks I may make on this occasion may be dictated by the Spirit of the Lord.

As stated by President Grant, I have just returned from a mission to New Zealand, where for upwards of four years I presided over the work of the Lord. I am happy indeed to report that the New Zealand mission is progressing, that the Lord is at the helm, that he has sustained us in our efforts to preach the gospel to the people living on those islands. We have had considerable trouble in securing missionaries to go there to preach the gospel, but through the prayers of the Saints and the efforts that have been put forth, a way has been opened up for us to continue our work there. The people are anxious to hear the gospel, the natives particularly who take to it very readily, and I believe the reason is because of the blood of Israel that is in their veins. It was my privilege and blessing, acting under instruction from President Grant and his counselors, to bring a company of Maori Saints to the Hawaiian Islands to perform labors in the temple. While there it was demonstrated beyond any question of doubt that the people who now inhabit the New Zealand islands, and are known as Maoris, were at one time connected with the people living on the Hawaiian islands, known as Kanakas, or natives of that place. For a great number of years efforts have been put forth by people who have written the history of the New Zealand people to connect them in some way with the people who have come from the West; and when the statement has been put forth by a "Mormon" elder, that the Maoris at one time came from the north, or particularly from the Hawaiian Islands, they have been laughed to scorn. When directing this company to the Hawaiian Islands, in connecting up their genealogy, sixty-five generations back, with the genealogy of the Hawaiian people, it has been demonstrated clearly that they are one and the same people, or were at one time.

It was my good fortune to witness a great number of the leading men of Honolulu, both whites and Hawaiians, who joined together in honoring the Maori people who had come there and who had demonstrated that they were connected with the Hawaiians. Never in my life have I seen people who were more anxious to show honor to native people than the people of Honolulu were on that occasion. Something like three thousand or more gathered at the armory hall and, as President Woolley remarked to me, it would have done President Smith's heart good indeed to have seen such an outpouring, such a desire on the part of the leading men there, to welcome our Maori Saints, as well as the Hawaiian Saints, because it was left to the Hawaiian Saints, not to the Hawaiian people generally, but to the Hawaiian Saints, to acknowledge that the connection that was made on that occasion was true.

I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, for the privilege that has come to me in going to New Zealand to preside over that mission. I bring back to you, the parents, the fathers and the mothers of the elders who are laboring there, their best wishes. They are happy, they are contented in their work, they are desirous of spreading the gospel, of being equal in every way to the demand that is made upon them as representatives of the Lord Jesus Christ. They are doing a good work. The additions that are made, from year to year, show that our Church in that land is in a healthy condition. We are not dying out but on the other hand the principles of the gospel that we have taught the natives ever since the Church has been opened up in that land, ever since the gospel has been preached to that people, has demonstrated that we are preaching a gospel of temperance, a gospel that is doing them good, a gospel that is being felt, not only by the people who are obeying it, but by the people who represent the government. Doctor Pomare, a prominent native, a man who has spent years in this land and was educated here and in Germany, stated in Parliament, a short time ago, that in all his visits in the various parts of New Zealand he had never seen a place that would compare with Nuhaka, a place that is composed of ninety-eight per cent "Mormons," and when questioned further as to why it appealed to him, he said it was because of the cleanliness of the Latter-day Saints, because of their teaching, sobriety, temperance, because of their teaching the people to be industrious and to attend to their own business. The members of Parliament were astounded. He was questioned over and over again in regard to it, and yet he claimed that it was the truth in every way, as he had demonstrated it while he was an officer in the health department, later when he was a representative in Parliament, and then as a member of the Prime Minister's cabinet.

I pray, my brethren and sisters, that the Lord will ever make us appreciative, make other people appreciate us, and that our light may shine before all people, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Elder James H. Nielson and quartette sang, "Oh, give me back my prophet dear."

ELDER SEYMOUR B. YOUNG

(Senior President of the First Council of Seventy)

I have great pleasure, my brothers and sisters, in standing before you this afternoon, to lift up my voice in testimony of the goodness of the Lord unto me and to my brethren and sisters of this great organization of which we form a part. The spirit of this conference has been one of divine acceptance, I believe to every Latter-day Saint. The Spirit of the Lord has been with our brethren, our leaders in all they have said and done during the sessions of this great conference.

I had recently the pleasure of visiting Independence, Mo., the headquarters of our Central States mission. President Bennion had already started for the west to be present at this gathering. I had the pleasure of visiting at his home, at the mission headquarters, where I was royally entertained by the young missionaries, brethren and sisters who have charge of the home. I also visited further afield, out into the state in a northeast direction from Independence, one hundred miles away to the scene of the Haun's Mill Massacre, which occurred on the 28th of September, 1838, according to the records of the state and county. In visiting this sacred spot, I tried to realize the sorrows of those who were at that time subject to the evil powers by which they were surrounded. Just a few weeks previous to this terrible event, a little band of Latter-day Saints, my father and mother among them, twenty-five families in all, had left the town of Kirtland, wending their way across the state of Missouri and had stopped by the way-side to recuperate and earn some provisions at a mill kept by Mr. Haun. This little band of devoted Saints were attacked on the evening of the day above mentioned by a mob of two hundred men armed with guns and eighteen of the brethren were shot and killed, and several others were seriously wounded. I am reciting this to recall to you this great fact: the devotion of that little band of emigrants that were on their way westward to find a home.

The Prophet Joseph Smith, with five of his brethren were at this time imprisoned in a dungeon in Liberty jail, subjected to the insults and abuse of an unrelenting guard during their term of confinement in the Liberty jail. The old cell in which they were confined is still standing near the center of the town of Liberty, and that is the only remains of the old jail.

After the massacre of the brethren, and on the following day, my father and four others that were left alive gathered up these bodies and placed them, by consent of Mr. Haun, in the circle of an old dry well which they prepared by enlarging the circle sufficiently to receive the bodies of the sixteen brethren and the one little boy, Sardius Smith, and there they were tenderly laid, and covered with mother earth; and today this is their mausoleum. I recite this to show the faith of that devoted company of Latter-day Saints. The brethren left alive gathered up the families that had been bereaved, including the wounded and the widows and orphans, and helped them on their journey across the state till they reached the Mississippi river. After crossing the river they landed in the town of Quincy, where they were kindly received during their short stay in that city. In relating this incident, I am reminded of the early Christians who were compelled to enter the coliseum to make a spectacle for those more savage than the beasts, these were no doubt entreated to give up their faith and thus save their lives, but kneeling in the center of the arena they prayed and sang until they were devoured. How helpless they seemed, and, measured by every human rule, how hopeless was their cause; and yet within a few decades the power which they invoked proved mightier than the legions of the emperor. Like history might be recorded concerning the Latter-day Saints. From the imprisonment of the prophet in Liberty jail, from the horrible and cruel massacre at Haun's Mill, from the martyrdom at Carthage jail, the faith of the Latter-day Saints and power with God has increased. The faith of the Latter-day Saints induced them to continue their journey to these mountain valleys where they were led by an inspired prophet who succeeded the martyr, Joseph Smith, as their leader. Those composing this great gathering, at this conference, are an evidence that they were led by the inspiration of Almighty God to these mountain valleys.

I rejoice because I can say at this time, as Nephi said of old: "I was born of goodly parents," and the faith of my father and mother has always been an encouragement to their children. I re-joyce today that this gospel came to them in the early part of their lives, and that they were among the pioneers of this great work. Though witnessing the terrible scenes of slaughter in the very beginning of their Church experience, they never turned from the faith, but deep down in their hearts cherished a love for the principles advocated by the Prophet Joseph Smith. Today this gathering is a credit to the Latter-day Saints, and in the remarks that have been made by our leaders, the Prophet Joseph Smith is recognized as the leader of the dispensation of the fulness of times, the prophet of God in very deed. He was faithful and true even unto death, and those who have followed him in his ministry, in the presidency of the Church, have exemplified to the world, to all the people who have listened to the gospel sound, that they, too, have been inspired with the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

After seventy years of experience in the Church, as a Church members, and as a laborer in this great work, responding to every call, I testify today that I know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, that Joseph Smith was indeed God's prophet inspired to bring before the world these great truths, and to plant the gospel again upon the earth, and to say to the world, God has again spoken from the heavens.

May the spirit of this conference go with us to our homes, and continue with you brethren and sisters who are visitors, and with you presiding brethren, to every stake and ward in Zion, that all may be blessed with the spirit and teachings that we have received from the presiding brethren of the Church, that the Saints may continue to grow and increase in the knowledge of the truth, till they shall arise to a perfect knowledge, is my humble prayer through Jesus Christ. our Lord. Amen.

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

I have been impressed, as doubtless you all have been, with the large appeal that has been made during this conference to the written scriptures. This large use of them is a testimony of their value, and certainly justifies the eulogy pronounced upon them by the Apostle Paul who said that "all scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good work."

I do not feel adequate to undertake the formulation of my own thoughts that have been inspired by my attendance upon this conference, and so I, also, will appeal to the written word to assist me in discharging the duty I have to perform on this occasion. I think, however, that my appeal to the scriptures may be a little different from other appeals that have been made. Someone has said that when we read the scriptures God speaks to us; and when we pray, we speak to the Lord. So in a sense I give way, for the brief time that I am to occupy, in order to permit the Lord to deliver a message to you, a message of comfort, a message that should bring great encouragement to the Latter-day Saints. And first a testimony of the majesty and glory of God, and then his message:

"Hear, O ye heavens, and give ear, O earth, and rejoice ye inhabitants thereof; for the Lord is God, and beside him there is no Savior. Great is his wisdom, marvelous his ways, and the extent of his doings none can find out. His purposes fail not; neither are there any who can stay his hand. From eternity to eternity he is the same, and his years never fail."

At this point I recall a sweet message in a rather popular hymn, namely:

Change and decay in all around I see,
Oh, thou who changeth not, abide with me.

And now for the message:

Thus saith the Lord: I the Lord am merciful and gracious unto those who fear me, and delight to honor those who serve me in righteousness and in truth to the end. Great shall be their reward and eternal shall be their glory, and to them I will reveal all mysteries, yea, all the hidden mysteries of my kingdom from days of old, and for ages to come will I make known unto them the good pleasure of my will concerning all things pertaining to my kingdom. Yea, even the wonders of eternity shall they know, and things to come will I show them, even the things of many generations, and their wisdom shall be great and their understanding reach to heaven. And before them the wisdom of the wise shall perish and the understanding of the prudent shall come to naught. For by my spirit will I enlighten them, by my power will I make known unto them the secrets of my will, yea, even those things which eye hath not seen nor ear heard, nor yet entered into the heart of man." (Doc. and Cov. Sec. 76.)

Such is the message of the Lord, such his word of encouragement and uplifting power to you.

Now, I think perhaps we have time to speak a word to the Lord, and in speaking that word to him by use of the scripture, Jesus the Christ may be our mouthpiece. I pray you make what we now do an act of worship and prayer unto God:

"Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen."

ELDER CHARLES W. NIBLEY

(Presiding Bishop of the Church)

I am always awed in my spirit when I stand before this wonderful congregation. My soul is subdued. I have felt in my heart that we have had a time of rejoicing together this conference. I know with a certainty and a surety that this is the work of God.

"MORMONISM" OF SPECIAL PLANTING

This thing called "Mormonism" is of his special planting and nurturing and bringing to pass. As was read in our hearing by President Grant this forenoon, "a great and a marvelous work is about to come forth." It is coming forth. We are only, it is true, at the beginning of it, but it is growing marvelously; and it has gathered, by the Spirit of the Lord, the inspiration of his Spirit in the hearts of our parents who received the gospel in the old countries and in this country, and brought us of the younger generation, to this choice and favored land. It has grown to such an extent, through his blessing, that we ourselves are not apprised of the influence and power that it exerts in this nation and in the world; but it is his work that is doing it, it is he that hath made us and not we ourselves. So all honor and glory be given unto him through his beloved Son. I rejoice to be connected with such a work and such a people, the best people that the Lord has in all the world. There are many good people, many millions of good people, all over the earth, in many respects as good as we are; but of all the world, of all those who dwell on the earth, this people up to this hour are the only ones, after all, who have been willing to listen to the call of the elders and the voice of the Spirit, who have sought him sufficiently so that they know in their hearts and souls, as well as you know, as well as the Latter-day Saints everywhere know, that this is the work of the Lord, that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ; not only so, but that he is our Father, that he is the only true and living God. Dead gods—there may be false gods, plenty on every hand, but our Eternal Father is the only true and living God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent. We worship him and he has revealed himself to this Church. He it is who has built up this Church; Christ, our Redeemer and Savior. He it is who is guiding it now. It is not President Heber J. Grant; it is not in his wisdom or power to guide this Church aright as a man, not at all, nor in Anthon H. Lund, nor C. W. Penrose. It is the Lord God Almighty that guides this Church, that has founded it, that has placed it where it is, and he will magnify it, lead it, bless it, and prosper it in the earth; and I say that the Lord has chosen a good people. They are the best, since they are the only ones, yet, who have been willing to listen to his call. Many more will come as the gospel is preached, and the gospel is to be preached in all the world, as a witness before the end comes, and there is an abundance of preaching to do.

A GOOD MISSIONARY WORK

I rejoiced in the priesthood meeting the other night to hear of the organization in some of the different stakes, Liberty stake, Granite stake especially, and probably in other stakes, missionary laborers, brethren called, sisters called, set apart by the power of the holy Priesthood to proclaim the gospel to their neighbors here at home, to visit from house to house; a good work, very best kind of work! Where is there any work that brings the joy that the preaching of the gospel brings, the reaching out to save a soul? There is no other joy like it.

SAVING AND THRIFT ENJOINED

I want to say a word or two upon another subject. We have been blest greatly as a people; and during the late years, the years of the war, means have flowed in upon us in rich abundance. These conditions will not always continue. If we are in debt I think we ought to try to get out of debt. I think we ought to observe thrift. A good many people have forgotten what that word means. Thrift, saving, not necessarily being stingy, but save your means, economize. We have grown in the expenditure of our means to be extravagant and a good many of us are in debt heavily. We ought to make every effort this fall, and from now on, to free ourselves from debt. Then we will be free to go and preach the gospel if we are called to go. I know I try to economize, although I have plenty to live upon, yet if I may be pardoned for being a little personal, I haven't bought a pair of shoes for more than a year; I never had but two pairs of shoes at any one time in my life. I have had my old shoes patched up. I have felt it was my duty to economize, and to practice thrift, to be careful of expenditure; and so, brethren and sisters, for the sisters also can help in this just as much as the brethren, let us try to practice old-time thrift and economy. I don't think it matters a great deal whether the feather in your wife's hat is just about six inches longer than the feather in my wife's hat. I don't think it makes such an awful difference. And that is about all there is in these foolish and extravagant expenditures.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE ARIZONA TEMPLE

I rejoice to know that the Latter-day Saints are remembering the Lord. I can testify to you, it is my privilege to do so, that the Latter-day Saints are a good people, notwithstanding all their weaknesses—and we have a good many weaknesses, I have, oh, so many, doing foolish things, uttering foolish words. I need the Spirit of the Lord every minute to guide me and to direct me aright; and yet, the Lord has blest the Saints, so that they are remembering him in their tithes and in their offerings. I want to praise this people, notwithstanding a wave of criticism, a wave that carries us sometimes off our feet in this direction or the other. If we will only be a little patient, that will all pass by, and in thirty days probably we can say with McCarty, who, I think, was the author of If I were King—"Where are the woes of yesterday? The wind has blown them all away."

A little while ago the Presidency sent out a notice which was printed in our newspapers, asking for those who felt like contributing to the building of the Arizona Temple, to send such offerings to the Presiding Bishop's Office. There has been reported something over five hundred wards out of nearly nine hundred wards and branches and missions, and more than seventy-seven thousand dollars has been received at the Presiding Bishop's Office up to this date. More than three hundred wards have not yet reported. Some missions have not yet reported. In all there will pretty surely be received from the Saints for the building of the Arizona Temple more than one hundred thousand dollars. Now when you consider what the people are doing, sending out missionaries, doing so many things, building meetinghouses, engaged in so many Church activities that take means, and then this added contribution, I say it is a testimony that the Latter-day Saints, after all, are a mighty good people, and I believe the Lord in the main is pleased with us.

THE CHURCH IN BUSINESS

One other item, and I am through: I hear a very considerable criticism among our people here at home about the Church being in business. What right has the Church to be in business? they ask. It is not fair. Other churches are not in business. No, that is true. Other churches experience considerable difficulty in raising funds enough to pay their ministers. So they are trying to combine the different Protestant churches and thereby save considerable expense. And, since there is no special difference in doctrine, no special, positive point for them to stand for, one church would be just as good as a dozen of that kind. But I want to tell you my brethren and sisters, that this is not that kind of a church. The Lord has established this Church. The time was when these Protestant churches had a very definite and positive principle and ground to stand upon and to stand for, to live and die for, if necessary, and they did die for it by the thousands and tens of thousands, and that principle was the principle of liberty, liberty to worship God as they pleased, liberty to give if they pleased, liberty to believe in indulgences being sold, if they wanted to believe in them, and liberty to disbelieve in it; and for this definite principle of liberty they fought and died that we might inherit the liberty that they purchased with their blood. I recall returning from Europe on one trip with President Smith, and I secured on the boat for him to read, because he didn't have much time to read except when at sea, Motley's Rise of the Dutch Republic, and after he had read it he made this observation: "Why the persecutions and trials that we have suffered as a people are nothing to what those Holland people, those Dutch people, have gone through in their eighty years' war." Liberty came to this nation, liberty has been established here. All honor to Protestantism. I take off my hat to the work that Protestantism has done for the world in bringing liberty, with its Luther and all who followed him. That having been accomplished, there seems to be little, so far as I can see—and I am not judging or criticising—of any definite purpose in Protestantism to stand for. But this Church is different, this Church is established to be in business. That is what it is here for, so that it has means to help in this direction and the other. Why what would it amount to without the ability to do things, to accomplish results? Do you need help in this direction, or the other, in colonizing, in building up towns and cities, in establishing this industry or the other, that will be for the benefit of the people? If so, the Church is here to help. That is what it is here for.

THE CHURCH WILL GROW MORE AND MORE HELPFUL

And it will grow more and more helpful all the time. Do not forget that, as Elder Ballard told us this forenoon, the Lord in his mercy, after he had revealed the law of consecration, and when we were not able, and we are not able yet by a long way, to accept that law, the Lord then revealed a lesser law, the law of tithing. The time will come when the law of consecration will be in force and instead of the Church being in business in a small way, it will be in business in the greatest possible way, because it will control all our means. That is what it is here for. That is what it will accomplish ultimately, but now we are not able, we are not far enough along to even consecrate ten per cent as tithing, so we need not clamor for the united order, or the law of consecration, not yet, until more of us—and I include myself in that number—until more of us are able to accomplish the consecration of ten per cent of what he gives us. So I raise my voice in protest against this criticism about the Church being in business, this or the other. As the years roll on it will be ten times more in business than it is now. The very thing that is criticised is largely what gives it power and influence in the world.

I pray that the blessings of the Lord may be upon this people, continue upon them. I know they are a good people. This people shall be my people; their God my God; where they go or stay, I go or stay, because there is none like them in all the world. God bless you. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I regret to say that Brother J. Golden Kimball, who came from California to be present at our conference, on account of ill health is unable to be with us.

ELDER RULON S. WELLS

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

"If any man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar, and the truth is not in him."

I have been greatly pleased in listening to the expounding of the law of God, the weightier matters of the law, which have been the theme of this great conference: judgment, mercy, love of God and love of our fellowmen. A great appeal has been made to the Latter-day Saints not to pass judgment upon their brethren, but to be charitable unto all men, and particularly to the household of faith. No greater commandment has ever been given; it is the greatest of all, that we should love God with all our hearts; and the one that is like unto it, that we should love our neighbor as ourselves. These constitute the law and the prophets. If we do these things we will yield obedience to the commandments of God. "If you love me, keep my commandments."

It devolves upon Latter-day Saints to cultivate the spirit of charity, good will and brotherly love toward the members of the household of faith, that we may be united, even as the heart and voice of one man, in all the things pertaining to the upbuilding of the Church and kingdom of God upon the earth; and inasmuch as we ourselves are not perfect, we should not be too eager to pass judgment upon those who perchance may be less perfect than ourselves. Again, let no man boast of his own virtue or of his own righteousness; nor say in his heart or otherwise: "I am holier than thou," for let it be known, there are none righteous. "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." But if we have in our hearts the love of God and the love of our fellow men, notwithstanding our weaknesses, there is hope for us; we may be redeemed from sin and be brought to a knowledge of the truth; we may be exalted and brought back into the presence of our Father. But, if we have not this love, neither for God nor man, there is no hope. Let no one think that because he may be in his outward life a little superior to some others, that he therefore is assured of his salvation and exaltation; he may be wanting in many virtues which may be hidden in the hearts of those whom he condemns.

Instead of being so ready to judge others let us sit in judgment upon ourselves. Let us take an introspective view and perhaps we shall see that we are full of weaknesses and imperfections—a little selfish—not always true, hard-hearted, greedy, envious, or perhaps our thoughts are not always pure. I am appalled when I take an inventory of my own shortcomings and overwhelmed with the gigantic task that lies before me in my effort to overcome the world of sin. Then comes to my mind the comforting words of the Apostle Peter: "Charity shall cover a multitude of sins."

Let us then cultivate charity for the sinner. How beautifully did Brother Talmage differentiate between sin and the sinner. There are all grades of sinners, from those whose sins are slight to those who sin unto death; but we are all sinners for "all have fallen short of the glory of God." If we can only appreciate this one truth, that we are all sinners and have need of repentance, and will let our hearts go out in love and charity towards all men, we will not be quite so ready to condemn them. When we bow the knee before the Lord in humble prayer and ask that he "forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those that trespass against us." I think that our prayers will have greater weight with the Lord if we ourselves have charity and harbor no bitterness in our hearts, forgiving those who trespass against us. All men and all women are, to some extent, under the bondage of sin, and in order that we might be redeemed, in order that we might be cleansed and purified from sin, the Lord in his mercy has revealed his glorious gospel, and happy are those who will receive the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and through obedience make it effectual for the salvation of their own souls.

If we see some others who are not so ready to lay hold on eternal life, through their obedience, as perhaps we have been, let our hearts go out in sympathy for them and let us manifest that sympathy by lending a helping hand. Let us endeavor to lift them up and bring them to a knowledge of the truth. Those that have no love of God and none of the milk of human kindness, have little chance to gain the presence of God. Greater by far are the opportunities of those who are still living a life of sin, if, at the same time, there is something of the love of God and of their fellow men remaining in their hearts. I would rather be a pauper and eke out an existence in the slums of Liverpool, if I may yet have something of the love of God and human kindness still lingering in my heart—than to dwell in a palace and in luxury without it. I would rather be a drunkard and die in the gutter having charity and love for my fellow men in my soul than to occupy a high station among men and be honored by the world and yet be wanting in this principle. The gospel has been revealed for your benefit, for mine, for those who sin but a little, and for those who sin a great deal; and the effect of it is, if we yield obedience to it, that we shall be cleansed from our sins, yea, though they are as scarlet yet shall we be made as white as wool. The very purpose of living upon this earth, at least one of the great purposes, is that we might repent of sin. We are a fallen humanity, fallen from the grace of God, full of weakness and imperfection; but through the atoning blood of Christ we can be cleansed and purified through obedience to his glorious gospel.

Let us then practice the principles of eternal life. Let our hearts be full of charity towards all men, and let us garnish our thoughts with virtue unceasingly. Then we are promised that "our faith shall wax strong in the presence of God, and the doctrine of the Priesthood shall distil upon our souls as the dews from heaven; the Holy Ghost shall be our constant guide and companion, and our scepter shall be a scepter of righteousness and truth; our dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, which without compulsory means shall flow unto us forever and ever." God grant that we may attain these blessings, my brethren and sisters, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES H. HART

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

There has been a passage of scripture upon my mind today, one given to the Prophet Joseph Smith, to this effect:

Therefore strengthen your brethren in all your conversation, and in all your prayers, and in all your exhortations, and in all your doings.

I feel that we have been strengthened during this conference by the prayers and by the exhortations of the brethren. It has been a source of continuing satisfaction to me that the spirit and teachings of this conference have been in accord with my own spirit and feelings. This text goes farther than the mere praying or preaching in a meeting. It goes, you will observe, to our daily walk and conversation—to our doings. A sociologist of national repute, in a friendly spirit of constructive criticism, pointed out to me sometime ago, as I was preaching the gospel to him, some weaknesses which he had observed in communities largely made up of Latter-day Saints. I feel that the instructions of this conference will correct, or tend to correct in the fullest, the weaknesses which he pointed out.

One of Tennyson's characters, "wearing the white flower of a blameless life," was one "who spake no slander, no, nor listened to it." Slander and the receiving of slander are condemned not only by the Holy Scriptures as presented in this conference, but by other writings, and by the laws that have been formulated against wrongdoing. The Talmud of old is strong against it, perhaps too strong. It says: "He that slanders, he who receives slander, and he who bears false witness against his neighbor, deserves to be cast to the dogs." Again, "All animals will one day remonstrate with the serpent and say: 'the lion treads upon his prey and devours it; the wolf tears and eats it; but thou, what profit hast thou in biting?' The serpent will reply, (Ecclesiastes 8:2) 'I am no worse than a slanderer.'" The same writings represent Deity (I think it is a misrepresentation) as saying to the prince of hell: "I from above and thou from below shall judge and condemn the slanderer." I accept the idea so far as it represents even the prince of evil as condemning slander. One of the things about slander is the difficulty of correcting it, although the defamer may be penitent. Someone has given us the suggestion of one standing upon a tower, in a wind-storm, scattering feathers by the pound and then after becoming penitent, undertaking to gather the scattered feathers. So, a poet has said:

Boys flying kites haul in their white-winged birds,
But remember, you can't do that way when you're sailing words.
Thoughts unexpressed may sometimes fall back dead,
But God himself can't kill them when they're said.

I may add: unless he works a miracle, which he may not be willing to do for our benefit, although we become penitent.

The slogan or keynote of this conference correlates nicely with the course of instruction given to the parents of the Church through the Sabbath Schools, an elaboration upon the ten commandments. Months of time have already been spent upon a single command: "Thou shalt honor thy father and thy mother," and so forth; and in view of the fact that the other commandments which will be studied later are so largely negative in form, it is very timely that the instructions of this conference should be given.

There is modern revelation teaching the spirit of forgiveness and tolerance. My time is very brief and I shall read only a few of these verses given in connection with the Lord pointing out the weaknesses of his people at Kirtland, just as, at a later time, the shortcomings of the Saints in Missouri were declared to them:

Now I speak unto you concerning your families; if men will smite you, or your families, once, and ye bear it patiently and revile not against them, neither seek revenge, ye shall be rewarded;

But if ye bear it not patiently, it shall be accounted unto you as being meted out a just measure unto you.

And again, if your enemy shall smite you the second time, and you revile not against your enemy, and bear it patiently, your reward shall be an hundred fold.

And again, if he shall smite you the third time, and ye bear it patiently, your reward shall be doubled unto you four fold;

And these three testimonies shall stand against your enemy if he repent not, and shall not be blotted out.

And further:

And again, verily I say unto you, if after thine enemy has come upon thee the first time, he repent and come unto thee praying thy forgiveness, thou shalt forgive him, and shall hold it no more as a testimony against thine enemy,

And so on unto the second and third time; and as oft as thine enemy repenteth of the trespass wherewith he has trespassed against thee, thou shalt forgive him, until seventy times seven;

And if he trespass against thee and repent not the first time, nevertheless thou shalt forgive him;

And if he trespass against thee the second time, and repent not, nevertheless thou shalt forgive him;

And if he trespass against thee the third time and repent not, thou shalt also forgive him;

But if ye bear it not patiently, it shall be accounted unto you as him, but shalt bring these testimonies before the Lord, and they shall not be blotted out until he repent and reward thee four fold in all things wherewith he has trespassed against thee.

Some of us are less tolerant with our brethren than the custodians of the law are with the condemned criminal. In the first place, he is not convicted until either eight men or twelve men after hearing all the evidence, and arguments and instructions, have an abiding conviction to a moral certainty that he is guilty. Then, when he is imprisoned in modern times, he is treated as a human being, and not as an unforgivable outlaw. These are some of the facts developed by our social committee in the recent course of instruction at Provo. They found that the old regime of punishment is being done away with, and that men are treated as human beings in our penal institutions; that some offenses that used to be severely punished—the taking of a piece of bread from the table or the indulgence in conversation at the table, are no longer made punishable and the men, as they go to their work now, go singing and joyous with the humane treatment and the hope they have of redeeming themselves. They are not escorted to their road-work by an armed guard as formerly, but by an unarmed foreman. When these men are strengthened by their custodians, by conversation, by exhortations and by the fair treatment they receive, they are reformed and graduated. They look upon the prison as a school graduate does upon his Alma Mater, and they write back kind letters of appreciation for the consideration shown them and for the opportunity given to redeem themselves. The thought is that surely we can be as generous and as charitable to our brethren and to our sisters as the law is, and as the custodians of the law are, to those whom they may have in hand for correction.

May the Lord bless the proceedings of this conference and may we all be able “to strengthen our brethren in all our conversation and in all our prayers, and in all our exhortations and in all our doings,” is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

I have been interested in everything that has been said at this conference. May we all give our faith and prayers to the work of the Church in the missionary field of all the world, for the gospel of Jesus Christ must be taught to the children of God in every nation and clime. We have heard the humble testimony of Elder Serge Ballif who is leaving for Germany and Switzerland to preside over that great mission. Brother Ballif is a man of few words but wonderful spirituality, and he will do a good work in spreading the word of the Lord in Europe. I had the honor and pleasure at one time of presiding over the Swiss and German mission, and I want to add my testimony here that those Germanic peoples will accept the truth, for they are intelligent and have developed a wonderful civilization. The German people of the Empire of Germany will rise and accept freedom and truth and be saved. They are a good people, those Germans, and we as the Church of Christ as well as the government of the United States must approach them with the spirit of love and not of revenge and hate. No lasting peace can come to this world until a peace is based on the love of God for all peoples.

I remember going once to the home of a German peasant in the little city of Gotha, when a man opened the door and went to strike me with a hammer. I turned to him and said: "Please read this little tract. It is the word of God to his children in these last days." He lowered his hammer, took the tract, and looked at the cover. I said to him: "Come, let us pray to God to help us see the truth as contained in this book." We knelt down together and prayed, and today, that man who received me in anger, is now a member of the Church, and is here in Zion. Love conquered him. Those German people are the children of God, and they must hear us in the Spirit of God's love.

This has been a conference of good and mighty words inspired of the Lord. The subject of thrift and industry; of government and learning; and the divinity of the family life as well as the sanctity of the Church of Christ, all have been spoken about with great power. These are the institutions of civilization, and we as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints stand for them in all their meaning to life. The great central theme of this conference, however, has been to know God and to keep his commandments. But we cannot know him without the spirit of love; for now abideth faith, hope, love—these three, but the greatest of these is love.

Let us stand for God and his work. He has spoken to us; he has made himself known. His prophets are upon the earth today. The great work is being carried on. Let us place our faith in him as never before, and go forth hand in hand, and heart to heart toward the perfect day which God is preparing for his children. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

Before the close of this conference I desire to express to our heavenly Father, on behalf of myself and associates, the deep gratitude of our hearts for the rich outpouring of his Holy Spirit that has been with all those who have addressed the conference since the first opening remarks. I pray God to bless the Latter-day Saints, to fill their hearts full of charity and love and long-suffering, to give them a love of God and of their fellows that they may, in very deed, remember the teachings of the Savior. May the people of Christ love God with all their might, mind, and strength, and may they love their brother as themselves. May the peace of heaven attend the Latter-day Saints. May the Lord bless their flocks, their herds, all their possessions, and all that pertaineth unto them. May they grow in a love of the gospel, in a love of truth, in a love of their fellows; and I, as the mouthpiece of the Lord here upon the earth, bless all the Latter-day Saints and the honest the world over, and pray God to confound the wicked and to bring their schemes to naught, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Lorinda Brewerton and the tabernacle Choir sang, "Inflammatius."

The conference was adjourned for six months.

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Adolph Mertz, President of the North Sanpete Stake of Zion.

Professor Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing in the tabernacle. Professor J. J. McClellan played the accompaniments and interludes, etc., on the great organ, assisted by Edward P. Kimball and Tracy Y. Cannon. The stenographic reports of the discourses were made in the tabernacle by Franklin W. Otterstrom, assisted by Clyde Rasmussen; in the assembly hall, by Frederick E. Barker and Fred J. Barker.

We Meet the Demand

For Sanitation and Cleanliness in Schools and Churches

As important as the cultivation of the mind is the safeguarding and promotion of health in the schools. Physical culture is now recognized as basic to mental growth.

Without sound health, students cannot make the right progress with their studies. And without a clean and sanitary environment, every student's health is in jeopardy.

Hence the war on filth and dirt that is now being waged by boards of education, teachers and parents. A sweet, clean school room is recognized as the heritage of every American boy and girl.

We are lined up, too, in the fight for cleanliness and sanitation in the schools—ready with the best lines of janitorial equipment that the market now affords. Exclusive agents of the Banner Chemical Co., we are in a position to equip schools with—

Disinfectants, Liquid Soaps, Liquid Soap Dispensers, Deodorants, Toilet Disinfectors, Drip Fluid, Paint Cleaner, Metal Polish, Furniture Polish, Automatic Floor Oiler, Sweeping Compound, Door Mats, Rubber Matting, Chemical Fire Extinguishers, Floor Brushes, etc, etc.

Prophecies by Joseph Smith and Their Fulfillment

A Valuable Book, by Nephi L. Morris

Was Joseph Smith a Prophet? What answers come from the century that has rolled by since he beheld his first vision? Have the Latter-day Saints misplaced faith in him? After the progress of a hundred years, what has Time done with his claims to the title of a Prophet,

In order to make plain the outcome of Time the author has dug up old and forgotten manuscripts and prints which he lays before the readers.

Did you know that Joseph Smith foretold the War of the Rebellion, stating exactly where it should begin? Did you know that he foretold in the same prophecy exactly when the World War should occur?

Did you know that he foretold the fate of Judge Stephen A. Douglas, the man who contended with Lincoln for the presidential chair?

Did you know that he prophesied that this great Intermountain Empire should arise here as a result of the persecutions of the Saints at the hands of their enemies?

Did you know that he placed the Garden of Eden in America and that today many great scientists agree with him?

Did you know that he placed the date of the birth of the Savior as April 6th and probably the date of His crucifixion as the same date?

Does the Book of Mormon chronology of these events agree with his statements?

Did you know that the United States has faithfully pursued the path pointed out for her by the Book of Mormon Prophets thousands of years ago?

Did you know that Apostle Orson Hyde foretold the part that England should take in the restoring of Jerusalem to the Jews and that his prophecy was published in 1842—seventy-five years before the event transpired?

Read this interesting book for the answers to these questions.

being led captive by the will of the devil.

14. Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked, yea, in 'darkness, and a state of awful, fearful looking for the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in 'paradise, until the time of their resurrection.

15. Now, there are some that have understood that this state of happiness and this state of misery of the soul, before the resurrection, was a first resurrection. Yea, I admit it may be termed a resurrection, the 'raising of the spirit or the soul and their consignment to happiness or misery, according to the words which have been spoken.

16. And behold, again it hath been spoken, that there is a 'first resurrection, a resurrection of all those who have been, or who are, or who shall be, down to the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

17. Now, we do not suppose that this first resurrection, which is spoken of in this manner, can be the resurrection 'of the souls and their consignment to happiness or misery. Ye cannot suppose that this is what it meaneth.

18. Behold, I say unto you, Nay; but it meaneth the 'reuniting of the soul with the body of those "from the days of Adam down to the resurrection of Christ.

19. Now, whether the souls and the bodies of those of whom has been spoken shall all be reunited at once, the wicked as well as the righteous, I do not say; let it suffice, that I say that they all come forth; or, in other words, their resurrection cometh to pass 'before the resurrection of those who die after the resurrection of Christ.

20. Now, my son, I do not say that their resurrection cometh at the resurrection of Christ; but behold, I give it as my opinion, that the souls and the bodies are 'reunited, of the righteous, at the resurrection of Christ, and his ascension into heaven.

21. But whether it be at his resurrection or after, I do not say; but this much I say, that there is a 'space between death and the resurrection of the body, and a state of the soul in happiness or in misery until the time which is appointed of God that the dead shall come forth, and be reunited, both soul and body, and be brought to stand before God, and be judged according to their works.

22. Yea, this bringeth about the restoration of those things of which has been spoken by the mouths of the prophets.

23. The 'soul shall be restored to the body, and the body to the soul; yea, and every limb and joint shall be restored to its body; yea, even a hair of the head shall not be lost; but all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame.

24. And now, my son, this is the restoration of which has been spoken by the mouths of the prophets—

25. And then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of God.

26. But behold, an awful 'death cometh upon the wicked; for they die as to things pertaining to things of righteousness; for they are unclean, and 'no unclean thing

HEBER J. GRANT,
ANTHONY H. LUND,
CHARLES W. PENROSE, First Presidency.

NINETY-FIRST ANNUAL CONFERENCE

Of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

FIRST DAY

The Ninety-First annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, at 10 a. m., Sunday, April 3, 1921.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

AUTHORITIES PRESENT

Of the First Presidency: Heber J. Grant, Charles W. Penrose, and Anthony W. Ivins; of the Council of the Twelve Apostles: Rudger Clawson¹, George F. Richards, Orson F. Whitney², Joseph Fielding Smith, James E. Talmage, Stephen L. Richards, Richard R. Lyman, Melvin J. Ballard, and John A. Widtsoe; Presiding Patriarch Hyrum G. Smith; of the First Council of Seventy: Seymour B. Young, B. H. Roberts, J. Golden Kimball, Rulon S. Wells, Joseph W. McMurrin, Charles H. Hart and Levi Edgar Young; of the Presiding Bishopric: Charles W. Nibley, David A. Smith, and John Wells; Assistant Historian A. William Lund.³

There were many Presidents of stakes with their counselors, patriarchs, bishops of wards, and numerous other prominent officers, men and women, representing various quorums and organizations of the Church.

The following mission presidents were in attendance: Winslow Farr Smith, Northern States; Samuel O. Bennion, Central States; Charles A. Callis, Southern States; John M. Knight, Western States; Joseph W. McMurrin, California; Heber C. Iverson, Northwestern States; Rey L. Pratt, Mexican; Nephi Jensen, Canada, and Benjamin Goddard, Bureau of Information, Temple Block, Salt Lake City.

President Heber J. Grant called the assembly to order. The great auditorium and galleries were overfilled; every available seating and standing space being occupied by people from all parts of the Church;

(1) Reed Smoot was absent in Washington; and George Albert Smith, presiding over the British Mission.

(2) David D. McKay was absent on a world tour of the missions.

(3) Andrew Jensen was absent on a tour of the missions in the United States.

and there were, besides, overflow meetings in the Assembly Hall, and at the Bureau of Information.

The choir and congregation sang, "Zion stands with hills surrounded."

Prayer was offered by Elder Wm. A. Hyde, President of the Pocatello stake of Zion.

"Behold the Lily" was sung by the choir and the Misses Catherine and Louise Watson as soloists, the music being by Tracy Y. Cannon.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I am indeed delighted to see such a wonderful audience here this morning. It is gratifying to note the interest that has been manifested by the Latter-day Saints in their assembling together, throughout the various stakes of Zion, during the past six months, in fact, during the past year, in their houses of worship, to render thanks to the Lord for his goodness and mercy to them, and to testify of the blessings they have received.

I have prepared some items that I believe will be of interest to this conference. It has been usual, in the opening address, to give some items regarding the condition of the Church.

INCREASED ATTENDANCE AT SACRAMENT MEETINGS.

Our reports show that there has been an increased attendance at our sacrament meetings and fast meetings, all over the Church. I never listen to the revealed prayers that came from God, to be used in our sacrament meetings, wherein we, through those who administer the sacrament, express our determination to remember our Lord and Redeemer, Jesus Christ, and to express our willingness to obey him and to keep the commandments which he has given us but what I rejoice in the inspiration of Joseph Smith, in translating the Book of Mormon, and giving to us those two wonderful sacramental prayers, those two marvelous covenants that all Latter-day Saints make when they assemble together and partake of the sacrament. I rejoice in knowing that there has been an increase in the attendance at these meetings, and also at our fast meetings, where we are able to testify of the many blessings of God to us as a people. I am grateful to our young people for adopting the slogan that they were in favor of developing spiritual growth by attendance at our sacrament meetings. The attendance has increased, and therefore there has been a spiritual growth.

LOCAL MISSIONARY LABORS.

The missionary work which was outlined in our general Priesthood meeting at the last October Conference, has been successfully conducted in most of the stakes and has been the means of doing a great deal of good. This labor is twice blessed. It blesses him that gives and him that receives. Some of the choicest meetings that I have been permitted to attend, during the last six months, have been gatherings of those who are engaged in missionary work in the various stakes of Zion; and I rejoice to know that many people who have heard the word of God, through these missionaries, have been baptized into the Church. I believe that in proportion to the amount of labor that has been put forth in the various stakes of Zion, of a missionary character, among those who are in our midst, but who know not the gospel, there have been as many, if not more, baptisms than there have been in the missionary fields throughout the different parts of the world.

TEMPLE WORK.

The work in our temples is progressing very satisfactorily; the attendance has been increased, and the great interest throughout the Church in temple work is very encouraging. We are now having four companies daily in the Salt Lake Temple. I think that it was a very wonderful example of the faith of the Latter-day Saints in temple work, when a fast-day was declared and the people were requested, last September, to make donations to aid in the erection of the temple in Arizona, that over one hundred eighteen thousand dollars was collected without one cent of expense, by donation upon the special fast-day set apart for that purpose. Nothing could more conclusively show the loyalty of the Latter-day Saints to that principle of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, revealed again to the earth, namely, the right and the privilege to perform labors in the holy temples of God for those of our ancestors who have passed beyond the veil than to have upon a single fast day throughout this Church one hundred eighteen thousands dollars contributed by the people for the erection of the Arizona Temple.

TEMPLE BLOCK LABORS.

I wish to commend the splendid missionary work done on the Temple Block, under the direction of the Bureau of Information, together with the free organ recitals which are given to the public. The amount of good done by this excellent labor can hardly be estimated. I have met people who have visited the Temple Block, from Salt Lake City to the Hawaiian Islands, and from Salt Lake City to New York, and to San Francisco, and in Canada and other places, and I know from my conversation with them of the splendid impression that has been made upon their minds by coming in contact with those devoted men and women who are working upon the Temple Block here as missionaries.

CHANGES OF OFFICERS IN STAKES AND MISSIONS.

There has been a slight increase in the payment of fast offerings, although there is still room for much improvement in this matter. Since our last Conference there have been two new Stakes organized—North Sevier stake, with Moroni Lazenby as president and South Sevier stake, with John E. Magleby president. Since our last Conference, John N. Henrie, President of the Panguitch stake, has passed away. He was a faithful, diligent president of that stake of Zion.

Since our last Conference the following bishops have passed away: Bishop Herbert Beck, of Centerfield ward, South Sanpete stake; Bishop Godfrey Fuhrman, of Providence First ward, Logan stake; Bishop Walter Roberts, of Sutherland ward, Deseret stake, and Bishop Clyde A. Hammond, of Moab ward, San Juan stake. We extend the blessings of the General Authorities to the families of these our brethren, who have been called from us since our last Conference.

The following changes in stake presidencies have been made since our last Conference: Albert Choules has succeeded Don C. Driggs as President of the Teton stake, William J. Henderson has succeeded the late John N. Henrie, as president of the Panguitch stake. Brother Driggs was released with the love and confidence and blessing of his brethren, as the President of the Teton stake.

In the Netherlands mission, John T. Lillywhite has been appointed president, to succeed John A. Butterworth. Mark Coombs has been appointed as President of the Tonga mission to succeed Willard L. Smith. J. Wiley Sessions has been appointed president of the South African mission to succeed Nicholas G. Smith. I have received a letter from Brother Sessions announcing his arrival in South Africa. Brother Sessions had been trying for nearly a year to get to South Africa, but on account of the obstructions put in the way by officials, who refused to vise passports and to allow him to go there, we have been under the necessity of keeping Brother Nicholas Groesbeck Smith in that mission another year after we felt that he should have been released. Brother Smith has filled a splendid mission in South Africa and will return with the love and blessings of all the authorities of the Church.

VITAL AND EDUCATIONAL STATISTICS.

Seventy-five per cent of the families of the Church in the Stakes of Zion own their homes. The birth rate of the Church is now 38 per 1,000. The death rate is 9 per 1,000. The marriage rate is 15.5 per 1,000. There has been expended for educational purposes $718,497.19. There has been expended for tabernacle, meeting houses and amusement halls, $346,203.17.

MISSIONARY ACTIVITIES.

There has been expended for missionary activities $511,709.97. This does not take into account the amount expended by the individuals who go upon missions, nor the amount that they lose by giving up their employment to go upon missions. This, I am sure, would be more than two million dollars a year, in addition to this half million dollars. So that the Latter-day Saints, as a people, are giving to the world an object lesson, such as I believe no other people upon the face of the earth are giving of their love of God, that first great commandment given to us, and also the second commandment to love our neighbor as ourselves. When we stop to reflect that a handful of people, numbering in all parts of the world only five hundred thousand men, women, children and babies, that they are expending $2,500,000 a year in time and means to proclaim the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, with no hope of earthly reward, we find an object lesson of the love of our fellows that I believe cannot be matched, in fact I know it cannot be matched, in all the wide world.

HELP FOR THE POOR.

There has been expended for assistance rendered to the poor, $450,000, of which $110,000 was raised during a single fast day for the relief of the sufferers in Europe, in Armenia and other places. There has been expended for Temple purposes $158,715.29.

I received a splendid letter from the Near East Relief Committee, in New York, which I failed to find this morning; but a day or two ago the following letter was received from Herbert L. Gutterson:

"New York City, March 21st, 1921.

"Mr. Heber J. Grant,
47 E. South Temple St.,
Salt Lake City, Utah.

"Dear Mr. Grant: We are in receipt of your letter of the 16th, addressed to Mr. Hoover, which we wish to acknowledge in his behalf.

"The contribution of $68,318.21 from your Church is a most splendid testimonial to the cause, which was the basis for the formation of the European Relief Council.

"Please accept in the name of the European Relief Council as a body, our most sincere, heartfelt thanks for the contribution from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; and we beg that you will express to them this sentiment and gratitude for their co-operation.

"With kindest wishes, we are,

"Very sincerely yours,

"CONTROL COMMITTEE.

"By Herbert L. Gutterson."

DEATH OF PRESIDENT ANTHON H. LUND.

Since our last Conference we have suffered the sorrow of parting with one of the Presidency of the Church, President Anthon H. Lund, than whom, from the day of his baptism as a boy in Scandinavia, to the day of his death, no more faithful, diligent, energetic, painstaking, conscientious and intelligent worker have I known in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. President Lund was a man beloved by all. I never heard one soul in my life say anything but good of the late President Anthon H. Lund. His ability and capacity were known to all the General Authorities as that of a great and noble and a true man, a Latter-day Saint to the very core. We mourn his loss. But in the providences of the Lord we feel that he will raise up others to assist in the rolling on of this great work. We had here a most wonderful audience at his funeral, the house being crowded to overflowing, thus showing the love and confidence and the respect of the people for President Lund.

CHANGES IN THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

I believe that in the promotion of Brother Penrose to be First Counselor in the First Presidency after he has labored from the time that he was a boy, nineteen years of age, for ten long years in his native land, proclaiming the gospel, and returned to that land to fulfil three more missions, a total of over twenty years of missionary work, and then labored here at home constantly with pen and tongue to proclaim the gospel; after his having accomplished all this, I feel sure that the Latter-day Saints rejoice in the promotion of this aged man, now in his ninetieth year, to be the First Counselor in the Presidency of the Church.

I believe that the Latter-day Saints generally have approved in their hearts of the selection of Anthony W. Ivins to be my Second Counselor, to become a member of the Presidency of the Church. We have not yet presented these names but they will be presented before the Conference adjourns.

CHOICE OF A NEW APOSTLE.

I am convinced in my own heart that if President Anthon H. Lund had had the privilege of nominating a man to fill the vacancy caused in the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, through his death, and through the promotion of Brother Ivins, that he would have named Brother John A. Widtsoe. The gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ has gathered from the British Isles and from the Scandinavian countries many thousands upon thousands of honest, energetic, faithful, loyal, true Latter-day Saints. Scandinavia, second only to the British Isles, has furnished great numbers of converts to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I believe that the Saints generally approve of those who have been called to these positions. I am convinced beyond a shadow of a doubt that the Presidency and the Apostles, under the inspiration of the Lord, nominated the proper man to fill the vacancy in the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and I have absolutely no doubt but what the Latter-day Saints will sanction our having set apart and ordained to the Apostleship Brother John A. Widtsoe.

HEARTY RESPONSE TO INSTRUCTIONS AT LAST CONFERENCE.

I rejoice in what I believe has been a response to the speeches made here six months ago. The keynote of our Conference at that time was to obey the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ, to have in our hearts a love of God, a love of our fellows, to have in our hearts the spirit of forgiveness and of long-suffering, to have in our hearts a desire to do those things that would be pleasing and acceptable to our heavenly Father; and I feel grateful that, during the past six months, there has been a spiritual growth. I believe that there has been a better feeling, that some of the animosities that were existing six months ago, because of political differences, have disappeared, now that men have had time, figuratively speaking, to "cool off." I would rejoice beyond all the power which God has given me to express my feelings, if the Latter-day Saints could express their opinions in times of political campaigns without animosity, without vindictiveness, that they could simply proclaim those principles in which they believe, without indulging in personalities.

CHANGE OF SENTIMENT FAVORING THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

I think that we as a people have very great cause to rejoice in the era of good will and fellowship that is existing today for us as a people, among those not of our faith, in comparison with the conditions that existed some years ago. I do not know of any single thing that has happened in my experience, during the long time that I have been one of the General Authorities of the Church, that has impressed me more profoundly with the change of sentiment towards the latter-day Saints than the reception that was accorded to me December last when I went to Kansas City and delivered a speech upon the accomplishments of "Mormonism." When I reflect upon the fact that in the leading hotel in that wonderful and progressive city—(I don't know that all of the people here, in fact I feel sure that perhaps the majority of those here are not aware of the fact that although that city is only one-half as large as St. Louis, its bank clearings are larger than those of St. Louis, that in some particular items they stand first, in commerce, among all the cities of the United States; and I do not know whether you are aware of the fact that they have one paper there that is conceded to be one of the six leading newspapers of the United States, the Kansas City Star)—I was permitted to stand up within ten miles of Independence, the place from which the Latter-day Saints were expelled, by an expulsion and exterminating order of the Governor of the State, Governor Boggs, and to proclaim the accomplishments of the Latter-day Saints; to relate the prophecies of Joseph Smith, to give to those men that were there assembled—over three hundred of the leading influential business men of the city—the testimony of Josiah Quincy regarding the Prophet Joseph Smith; to repeat to them the great Pioneer hymn, "Come, come, ye Saints;" to relate the hardships, the drivings and the persecutions of the Latter-day Saints and to have that body of representative men receive that address with approval, applaud it in many places, and many of them come to me after the meeting and shake hands and congratulate me upon the address; and to have some of the members of the Board of Directors of that great club—the Knife and Fork Club of Kansas City—(which I have been informed is the second greatest dinner club in the United States, the Gridiron of Washington standing first) to have them say that they hoped for a return date so that they could hear more of our people; and then stop to reflect upon the fact that the Prophet and his followers, in the early days, were expelled from

Missouri; that many of them were murdered; that all kinds of crimes were committed upon the people; that their property was confiscated; that we have never received anything for our property that belonged to us in that section, that today some of the valuable country that we traveled over there is the very property that our people owned, (for when you follow up many abstracts of valuable property you will find that the title centers in the bishop of the "Mormon" Church, and only because of lapse of time have people secured a proper title to these lands, and not because it was ever paid for)—I say to stop and reflect that the drivings and the persecutions of the Latter-day Saints, of which no tongue can tell and no pen can paint the conditions; and then to realize that there is a feeling in that community now, among the people residing in the very place, so to speak, from which President Joseph Smith, the Prophet of the living God, and others were driven out; to be invited to go there and be asked to talk of the accomplishments of "Mormonism," and to have that talk received, with open arms, shows the most wonderful change of sentiment.

A short time ago the editor and publisher of the Coast Banker a paper that has a circulation all over the Twelfth Federal Reserve banking district, asked me to write an article on the accomplishments of our people. I did not have time to write the article, but I sent him my speech delivered before the Knife and Fork Club, and told him if that would fill the bill, I would be very glad indeed to have him publish it. Of course, I realized it was a very long speech, because I talked pretty rapidly and I talked for fifty-seven minutes, but he published all that I said. He published, besides, an introduction of such a character that I am very proud of it. I thanked him kindly, when I met him, for this introduction to my speech.

Now, I pray the Lord to bless the Latter-day Saints. I pray the Lord that we may remember that same keynote that was given here six months ago—keep the commandments of the Lord. Why, you know, if we can just remember those first two great things, to love the Lord our God with all our hearts, with all our might, with all our mind, with all our strength, and to love our neighbor as ourselves, we are sure to walk in that straight and narrow path that shall lead us to life eternal. God bless you one and all, and all Israel, and all the honest, the world over, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The Choir sang, "The Lord's Prayer," music by B. Cecil Gates.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I feel grateful to the Lord for the inspiration of his Spirit to so many of our people in the writing of the beautiful music that we have for our hymns, and for selections such as this that we have just listened to. May God bless our composers and our poets who have given us such inspired words and such inspiring, sweet music.

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. PENROSE

It is a great pleasure to me to behold this vast congregation, composed chiefly of Latter-day Saints, gathered from different portions of the Church, also to listen to the remarks that have been made by our President. I was in hopes that he would have continued his remarks and taken up the time of our first session of this Conference, for several reasons. One of them is that I was doubtful, this morning, when I arose from my bed, whether I would be able to get here. I experienced a violent vertigo, attack of swimming of the head. In these troublous times and in the great and swift changes that are taking place, there is enough to turn anybody's head, bigger heads than mine a great deal. But I have been able, since coming into this congregation, to compose myself and to listen to the inspired utterances of our President, and they have had a splendid effect upon me, physically as well as mentally and spiritually.

REJOICES IN CHANGES OF SENTIMENT IN FAVOR OF THE SAINTS.

I rejoice in these changes which he has spoken of, that have taken place among the people who are not of our faith. So many are now beginning to understand a little about "Mormonism," that it does not consist of one peculiarity which has been proclaimed throughout the world as our chief tenet. They are beginning to understand that the Latter-day Saints, the "Mormons," are a practical people, that they have a practical faith, and that they do things, and the knowledge of this is coming to the nations of the earth more rapidly than I ever expected it to come. I always had faith, from the time that I was a boy and joined the Church—the only one of my family who did so, that "Mormonism," as it is called, would prevail, that the kingdom of God, which it was and is to me, would overcome all things, and that the name of the true and the living God would be brought before the world ultimately for their adoration and their obedience. I never had a doubt about the triumph of this great organization, established by the Almighty, by the personal action of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost; and today I rejoice in my soul to see the evidence of the progress of this work, here on these tabernacle grounds, where people have assembled at our first session in such numbers that the Assembly Hall has to be used for an overflow meeting and the grounds themselves for another, at the beginning of our Conference. Thank the Lord, praises and blessings be to his Holy Name!

GOD OUR ETERNAL FATHER AND HIS SON JESUS CHRIST,

The beautiful music we have just listened to called "The Lord's Prayer," brings before our attention that prayer which Jesus uttered; not that people were always to repeat it, although it is a mighty good thing that so many people do so, even if they do not realize what it means. Ever since I was a little boy, I have heard that prayer repeated in the churches in the world, before I ever knew anything of this work. It begins with a truth that all people ought to understand, and that is that God is our Father, that he dwells in heaven; that he is not and cannot be personally omnipresent, as is taught in the heathen and so-called Christian churches of the world; that he is a divine being, a personage, a perfect and perfected man so to speak. We do not say that God is a man; he is a perfected man; he is exalted above all mankind, and he is our Father. He begat us in our original being, as his sons and daughters, verily and literally and truly. Jesus Christ who uttered that prayer is his Son just as we are, in the spirit, only he was the first-born. There is a truth connected with that principle which we should all understand, for Jesus Christ himself has declared it. He says to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints: "I also was in the beginning with the Father, and am the first-born. Ye also were in the beginning with the Father, that which is spirit." That part of mankind which is spirit was in the eternal world with the Father, before this world began, as we read in the first and second chapters of the Epistle to the Hebrews, which I commend to your attention, my brethren and sisters. We learn a little of this fact:

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets,

"Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds;

"Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high."

He was the firstborn in this great family of the Almighty, the Creator of the worlds, and they were made by him, through and by Jesus Christ, his Son. Some of our brethren get the idea that he could not have been the creator of this world, as is declared in the latter-day revelations, that he was with the Father in this work, and that "all things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made," as we read in the opening chapter of the writings of John his beloved disciple and apostle.

JESUS CHRIST THE ONLY BEGOTTEN OF THE FATHER IN THE FLESH.

We should understand this, that Jesus the Christ came into the world, in the meridian of time, to be the Only Begotten Son of God in the flesh. That is a doctrine established in this Church, and we have received it by revelation, so we can put aside any doubts or speculations or contentions in regard to it. That was when he came and tabernacled, being in the image of his Father, the "express" image of his Father before he came into the world; and with power, as the heir of all things, God honored him and loved him, and he knew the faithfulness in all the work entrusted to him, and knew beforehand what he would do when he came on the earth to be the Redeemer of mankind. This is a subject that I do not want to dwell upon now, because I do not want to take up too much time, but it is a most important thing in the progress and development of the purposes of the Almighty. Jesus, as we call him, the Nazarene, the son of Mary, of the offspring of David—therefore the Son of man—was the Son of God, who is the Father of his spirit. So, in the beginning he was with God and was the firstborn of this great family, and on the earth he was the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh. He lived and died as a Son of God in all things, and was raised from the dead and appeared to his disciples. In these last days he appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith, in his boyhood, and has manifested himself personally several times, on several occasions, and he lives as the Son of God and our eldest brother in the spirit. The declaration of the doctrines of the Church in that remarkable condensation of principles which are called The Latter-day Saint's faith, begins with: "We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost."

THE HOLY GHOST, A PERSONAGE OF SPIRIT.

In regard to the Holy Ghost, I want to say a few words this morning, since I have this grand opportunity, in reply to questions and letters that come to us, in the President's office, concerning this matter. There seems, in spite of all the preachings and writings and explanations and expoundings of the Church, some confusion of mind in regard to this question about the Holy Ghost. "Is the Holy Ghost a personage?" So we are told in the 130th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants, which contains several grand principles uttered by the Prophet Joseph Smith. One is that God is a personage of tabernacle, the Son also, but the Holy Ghost is "a personage of spirit." This seems to create great wonderment among some of our people, because they confound the two terms "Holy Spirit" and "Holy Ghost" and think that there is a difference in their meaning. There is a difference in one sense of the word. We attach the words "the Holy Ghost" to the personage of spirit; and we attach the name "Holy Spirit" to that universal means by which God and Jesus Christ are omnipresent. That divine, beginningless and boundless essence is called the Holy Spirit; but the two terms really mean the same thing, so far as language is concerned. Brother Lund used to talk a good deal about the one German word which means the Holy Ghost as well as the Holy Spirit. The word means "Ghost" but it attaches to the influence which we call spirit, the spirit of man, and to the Holy Ghost the Comforter. Now let me say just two or three words on that point, to settle this question. In the fifth chapter of the first epistle of John, the beloved disciple, we read this:

"There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word,"—that is the name that John generally attached to the Savior—

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." That is applied to the Son, the first born in the spirit and the only begotten in the flesh—"There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one." Some people get very much confused in regard to that oneness or unity. There are three persons united as one God, one Deity, and it takes three of them to bear record in heaven; or rather, as the Prophet Joseph Smith explained very fully, that in all the presidencies that are divine, there are three. The Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost are three personages. Two are persons of tabernacle. Now, questions arise as to whether the Holy Ghost will ever get a body. I do not know anything about that, because the Lord has not revealed it; and if our brethren, while trying to be wise when they are not always so, would leave out of their preachings and their speculations that which they think may be in the future, but do not know, there will be a good deal of contention avoided.

The Holy Ghost is a personage of spirit, as Jesus Christ was when he was Jehovah. He was Jehovah from the beginning of the world, according to the history we have in the Old Testament scriptures. He was a personage of spirit, and he came here to the earth that he might be exactly like his brethren and like his Father, and have a body made out of the lower elements of the universe. The elements of his body are eternal, and the elements of the spirit are eternal, without beginning; but there was a beginning to his body, when he was born of the virgin Mary, and God was his Father. His power overshadowed the virgin and, as she was told by the angel Gabriel, the offspring was the Son of God. Jesus Christ taught that doctrine to his apostles and made it very plain, I think, as it stands in the New Testament: "Our Father which art in Heaven"—not our Father who personally is throughout all space, without center and without circumference; but his dwelling place is in heaven. The Lord says: "Heaven is my throne; the earth is my footstool;" and to the ancient Jews he cried: "Where is the house that ye build unto me, and where is the place of my rest?" Our Father is a personage of tabernacle. He has a spiritual body, as well as a spiritual existence besides the physical body; the elements in him are joined inseparably. One of the revelations of God, the 88th Section in the Doctrine and Covenants, declares that "the elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fulness of joy; and when separated man cannot obtain a fulness of joy."

The spirit of man is the offspring of God. It has affinity with spiritual things. In its spiritual being and nature it is above earthly things, but when tabernacled in a body, it becomes, to a great extent, subject to the laws that govern earthly things. When death comes as we call it, the separation of the spirit and the body, as we learn in the Scriptures, "the body without the spirit is dead," when that separation comes, then the spirit goes back to its former condition, to this extent, that it is without the natural body until the resurrection. But the necessity for the resurrection is shown, very plainly, when we understand that only by these affinities can we obtain a fulness of joy. That which is spirit in our nature has affinity with things that are above. The natural body has affinity with the things that are grosser or beneath. But when the two, spirit and element, are inseparably connected—quickened by the Holy Spirit—and I mean by that the spirit which is called the spirit of life and light, then perfection can come to the individual, and without that union there cannot be obtained a fulness of joy.

Now the pattern of it all is in the life and service and devotion and death of Jesus our Redeemer, and his resurrection from the dead, his return into the presence of God, where he sits with him on the everlasting throne. But about the Holy Ghost, what about that? Why, he is a personage of spirit, an individual, a being, and he bears witness of the Father and of the Son and makes them plain to man. He is called by the Savior, the "Comforter." If you read the writings of John, the 15th, 16th and 17th chapters, there you will see that he is called the Comforter. He is a personage. "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, he will teach you all things and he will show you things to come." John calls him "He" and "Him." He is a person. "If I go not away," said Jesus to his disciples, "the Comforter will not come, but if I go away, I will send him to you, and he shall bear witness of me and of the Father;" for that is his office and calling. The understanding we have is that the Holy Ghost, as a personage, came on the day of Pentecost, and that he was manifested in the sign of the cloven tongues, as he was to John the Baptist by the sign of the dove, when the Savior was baptized in the river Jordan. Now then, understand that the personage spoken of there, the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, is an individual, the third person in the trinity, and it takes the Father and the Word and the Holy Ghost to make a complete record in the heavens; but the apostle John goes on to say, "there are three that bear witness, on the earth—the spirit, and the water, and the blood, and these three agree in one. Now as to the oneness I was just touching upon, it is clearly explained in the prayer of the Savior, offered to the Father before he went to the garden of Gethsemane. He prayed for his apostles:

I pray "for them * * * which thou has given me; for they are thine. And all mine are thine, and thine are mine; and I am glorified in them. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me; and the glory which thou gavest me I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one." (John 17:9, 20, 23.)

There is the oneness of Deity, the three in one; not as some preachers try to expound it, in the doctrines of the outside world, in the Article of Faith that they have, making them one immaterial spirit—no body, no real personage, no substance. On the contrary, they are three individuals, one in spirit, one in mind, one in intelligence, united in all things that they do, and it takes the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, to make the perfect Trinity in one, three persons and one God or Deity, one Godhead.

THE HOLY GHOST BESTOWED IN CONFIRMATION.

Now about the Holy Ghost bestowed in confirmation. It is required of people who are baptized in water, to be baptized with "the Holy Ghost and with fire." Of course, the word "fire" does not mean a literal blaze to burn you up; it is a divine fire, and all people know, who have been baptized with fire and the Holy Ghost, bearing witness of the Father and the Son, (and in these times, to the divine mission of the Latter-day Prophet, Joseph Smith) that this Spirit is in the Church, and each individual member receives it as a gift. The Holy Spirit or Holy Ghost if you please, is "the true light that enlighteneth every man that comes into the world." So John teaches in that fine treatise that he wrote, called the Gospel of St. John. Now then, the light that is in the stars, that light that shines dimly in these lamps here this morning—what is it? Why, it is one manifestation of that divine essence called the Holy Spirit, and it permeates all things, not only on this globe, but in all the worlds that have been made. For we read in the Doctrine and Covenants, take the 29th Section and read it carefully, that God created all things by that Spirit, firstly spiritual and afterwards that which is temporal. That Holy Spirit, so we read in the 88th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, "is in all things, and through all things, and round about all things, and is the law by which all things are governed. It is the light of Christ, and it is in the sun, and the moon and the stars, and the earth on which ye stand." It permeates all things throughout the vast domain of space, which has no bounds. It is the spirit that gives life, it is the spirit that gives light; and when we came into the world and breathed the breath of life we became "living souls."

There is no time now to talk about this creation, as we read of it in the book of Genesis. However, when man was formed out of the dust, and afterwards by eating the products of the earth and becoming earthly thereby, when he came into his being on the earth, he breathed the breath of life, and "man became a living soul," thereby. So we, you and the rest of us, when we were born into this world, when we came to the condition that we could breathe the breath of life and be quickened by it in our mortal being, we were living souls; and when we are resurrected from the dead we will still be living souls, but in a more perfect state. If we are worthy of the celestial glory we shall be quickened thereby when we are raised. As Paul puts it, "the body is sown in dishonor, it is raised in power; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in strength; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." So, when we are raised from the dead, the body that is sown in the grave, in weakness, is raised in power, glorified like the glorious body of the Son of God. These are simple things taught in the Scriptures, and when we go beyond them and make theories of our own, we get into the dark.

The Holy Ghost, spoken of in the 88th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants is in all things, round about all things, throughout the immensity of space. What is it? Why it is a spiritual essence which gives life and light to all things, to animals and vegetables as well as to human beings; but that is not the Comforter that Jesus said he would send, because it was here already, and is the light that enlighteneth every person that comes into the world. It is the essence of ordinary life; it is the very essence of life in the fulness of its manifestations around the personality of God the Father and Jesus Christ his Son; in heaven, where they dwell. Therein is the glory of God.

In its smaller or lesser manifestations, it is the same Spirit but not to the same degree. When we are born by water baptism into the Church, born of God, then we are baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost, we have an additional manifestation of light and power in that Holy Spirit which is given to us in the confirmation—"Receive ye the Holy Ghost"—as a gift from God, as a light to your feet, a lamp to your path, as a perpetual witness, an additional gift of light and truth. Don't I know in my own being that I received that gift? I certainly do, as well as I know that I see things naturally by those manifestations of light that come from the sun and the moon and the stars and the lamps that we light, and the electric light that we bring forth by touching the button. We do not create that light, we do not bring it into being, we only bring it into action. It is governed by law, and when the laws are fully understood and we live by them, and we are quickened by that power to the full, in body and in spirit, we will be like our Father and like Jesus Christ his beloved Son: "Beloved," says the Apostle John, "now are we the Sons of God. It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he appears we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is, and every man that has this hope purifieth himself even as he is pure."

By keeping the commandments of God, as we were exhorted to do six month ago, and today also, by keeping the commandments of God and walking in his ways, that spirit is developed in us. Its light is clearer and plainer and it shines out and reveals the things of God. "No man knoweth the things of man but the spirit of man that is in him, and no man knoweth the things of God but the Spirit of God, and the Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God." That is good plain scripture.

Now my brethren and sisters do not get into confusion about this matter. The Holy Ghost is an individual, is a personage of spirit, one of the great Three that the Prophet Joseph Smith spoke so plainly about so many times just before his death.

PERTAINING TO THE STATEMENT IN THE LECTURES ON FAITH.

There is one little point in regard to that which I will mention: In the book of Doctrine and Covenants we have a number of lectures inserted in the first part; which are not revelations. There are seven lectures, and in the fifth lecture, particularly, we are told that there are two personages in heaven, the Father and the Son, and that the holy spirit is the mind of God. That is true, so far as it goes. But the revelation through the Prophet Joseph Smith as to the personality of the Holy Ghost came many years after; it was given in 1843. In that revelation we are clearly instructed concerning the third personage in the Trinity. Now, as far as Sidney Rigdon, and some others who delivered those lectures, went, they spoke the truth. There are two persons in the heavens, the Father and the Son, but the Holy Spirit is passed by almost, as the "mind of God." It is true that the Holy Spirit conveys the mind of God; that is, I am speaking now of this universal spirit which is the life and the light of all things, which is in and through and round about all things, and God says he made the world by the power of that spirit. That is his agent; but the personage, the Comforter, which Jesus Christ said he would send when he went away, that was a personage of the Trinity. He promised to send this Comforter to reveal the things of the Father and to bear witness of the Father and the Son.

When Joseph the Prophet saw the Father and the Son in the grove where he was praying, the Holy Spirit made them manifest. When he commenced to pray, or tried to pray, he could not say anything. He was seized upon by an opposing power which seemed to almost overcome him, but he struggled against it and continued to pray, until a light came, a pillar of light, the manifestation and presence of the Holy Spirit, and by the power of that Spirit, which quickened his spiritual vision, he saw two personages in that cloud of glory, and they conversed with him, or rather one did. The Father does not converse much with mankind individually. He said: "This is my beloved Son, hear him;" and he is the person we want to hear and to obey as representing the Father. As we read in the Book of Mormon he is, in some respects, both the Father and the Son. He represents the Father to the full. We are in the image of God, but the Christ, the great Jehovah, is the express image of the Father's person, God manifest in the flesh, and he has gone into his glory. We will follow him to that glory if we will keep his commandments. He is the resurrection and the life. God has entrusted that to him, given him that power and made him heir of all things, in the heavens and in the earth. "All power is given to me, in heaven and upon the earth. Tarry ye at Jerusalem, until ye are endowed with power from on high." That is what he told his apostles.

THE LIGHT OF GOD MANIFESTS THE THINGS OF GOD.

I hope, in what I have said on this subject, I have made this matter clear. All I want to do when I get up to talk before my brethren and sisters, is to make the things that are clear in my own mind, clear also to them, if I can. It is the light of the Lord that manifests the things of God, and if we live in that light and walk in its rays we will keep the commandments of God. That is the tendency of it. In the operations of natural light, displayed by the spectrum, there are seven different colors or rays, as I remember being taught, when I was a boy at school—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo and violet; they are all one in a pencil of light, and that is a manifestation of the Spirit of God. In that there are, as in the higher revealings, various operations, as the apostle teaches in the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians:

"For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another knowledge by the same Spirit;

"To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healings by the same Spirit;

"To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues;

"But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will."

So, my brethren, if we receive that gift, when hands are laid upon us, after we have been baptized into the Church and it is said unto us: "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," that gift is sealed upon us. The gift is ours whether we act upon it or receive it or not, the gift is given to us by the Holy Ghost, which explains and manifests and enlightens our souls in regard to these things that are divine. It searches all things, yea, even the deep things of God. I know it in my own being and have known it ever since I was baptized into the Church. That gift was sealed upon me, and in all my labors and duties, spoken of by the President this morning, it has only been by the power of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of the living God, the light of the Almighty, through Jesus Christ his Son, that I have been able to bring people to an understanding of and obedience to the truth, and to conduct affairs with wisdom and in the light that I have received from God.

A TESTIMONY.

I know that God lives, I know that he is my Father, I know he has guided me on land and sea, that he has been with me in all my travelings at home and abroad, and that his Spirit is with me today. Thanks and praise be to his holy name. All I care for, of position or office in this Church, is to build up the work of the Father through Jesus Christ his Son, by the power of the Holy Ghost. Truly we believe in God, the Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost; and to God the Father, to Jesus Christ his Son, and the Holy Ghost, be honor, praise, glory, and dominion forever, Amen.

The choir sang the hymn, "Thanks be to God," by Mendelssohn.

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

I do not remember, my brethren and sisters, a period in my life's experience in the Church when I felt my dependence upon the Lord to a degree greater than I do this morning. Should I follow my own inclinations, I would not attempt to make remarks at all, but to gain wisdom and knowledge and understanding by listening to the remarks of my brethren and communing with the Spirit of the Lord which is here this morning. I feel the necessity of wisdom, of sound judgment, of the help of the Lord in expounding the scriptures, and teaching the Latter-day Saints, and in discharging the responsibility which has come to me, as I have never felt it before.

THE CHURCH AFTER NEARLY ONE HUNDRED YEARS.

We are here to review the condition of the Church, after nearly an hundred years of its existence. We are here that we may determine whether or not progress is being made, to hear the scripture expounded, and the order of the Church explained, that we may determine whether or not in the administration of its affairs, we are adhering closely to the word of the Lord. The Lord has declared to us that all scripture is given by inspiration from God, that it is of great value to us as a means of proper exhortation, a means of reproof and of correction where correction may be necessary, and he has reminded us that it must always be expounded and explained in a spirit of righteousness. The Lord has admonished us to search the scripture, because in it we think we have everlasting life, and that it is the scripture which testifies of him. I have been thinking, my brethren and sisters, while listening to the remarks made, that it was through obedience to this latter admonition of the Lord, that Joseph Smith found the key which opened this gospel dispensation. He searched the scriptures and in them found the path which leads to everlasting life, to all of those who care to enter in through faith in God our Father, and in Jesus Christ, his Son.

OPENING OF THE LAST DISPENSATION.

At the time that Joseph Smith went to the written words for light, the scripture which I have quoted was understood to apply, and he undoubtedly so understood it, to the Bible, this book which I hold in my hand. It was the only book which was accepted by the world as containing the fundamentals of Christianity, and of the hand-dealings of the Father, as they applied to his children who were here upon earth. Through the prayer which he offered, and to which reference has been made by President Penrose, the faith which he exercised in obedience to this admonition of the Lord, he received that first glorious manifestation, when the Father and the Son appeared to him, now more than a hundred years ago, at which time he was not yet fifteen years of age. This glorious manifestation, with the great importance which attaches to it, carried with it no authority to act in the name of the Lord, neither in the opening of this gospel dispensation, the organization of the Church, nor in the administration in the ordinances thereof. As time passed and the boy gradually approached manhood, he waited and, undoubtedly, wondered when the time would come for the accomplishment of the greater work which had been outlined in this first manifestation which came to him from the Lord. On the night of September 21, 1823, after he had engaged in prayer and retired for the night, Joseph Smith states that he observed that light began gradually to appear in his room, which increased in brilliancy until the room was lighter than at noon day, when a personage appeared at his bed side, who declared that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God and that his name was Moroni. He declared to Joseph Smith that the Lord had a great work for him to perform, a work which would make his name known among all nations and people, that among some it would be held in honor, among others it would be held in reproach. He declared many important things to Joseph Smith, but the principal purpose of his visit appears to have been to announce to him that there was a book deposited, written upon gold plates, which contained the history of the ancient inhabitants of this continent, and the source from which they came, and that it contained the fulness of the everlasting gospel, as it was delivered to the ancient inhabitants of this continent by the Redeemer of the world, and that means had been provided by which the inscriptions upon the plates might be translated into the English language. Joseph Smith visited the locality and readily recognized the place where the plates were deposited but was not permitted to take possession of them until four years later, at which time he was in his twenty-second year, when the plates were entrusted to his care by the same messenger who had first appeared to him. [The work of translation was commenced and continued until completed, when the plates were returned to the messenger from whom he had received them, and Joseph Smith proceeded to publish their contents to the world in the form known as the Book of Mormon.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

The first edition of the Book of Mormon was issued in the year 1830, under the circumstances and in the style which the time justified, a style which would not be considered appropriate at present. From time to time other editions were issued, the arrangement slightly changed to make the book more appropriate, with chapters, index, footnotes and references added. The existing edition having become exhausted, it recently became necessary to issue a new one, and the suggestion was made that the style of the book, which still adhered closely to the original, might be so changed that it would be better adapted to the use for which it was intended. A committee was chosen from among the Council of Twelve, who carefully examined all editions, including the original, compared them carefully, compared and checked the footnotes and references, and after making some slight changes in arrangement, we have issued a new edition of the Book of Mormon, which I hold in my hand. The text remains as heretofore, but the book has been printed in double columns instead of single, a change which has resulted in a reduction in size of one hundred pages. The frontispiece remains as heretofore, but there has been added a brief synopsis of the contents of the book and the story of its origin as related by Joseph Smith. The testimony of the witnesses remains as heretofore, and then follows the general text. The name and order of the books contained in the volume are also given; chapter headings have been added; the footnotes have been carefully compared and revised, where revision was necessary; a pronouncing vocabulary has also been added; and a brief synopsis of chapters and a very greatly improved index which facilitates the study of the book. So we have brought out a new edition of this book which is of such great interest to the Church and its members, which we commend to you, my brethren and sisters, and to all other people for study.

The Book of Mormon is the scripture of the American continent, preserved and brought forth by the power of the Lord, that his decrees and purposes might be made known to the people who were to occupy this continent in this the dispensation of the fulness of times, the greatest dispensation which the world has ever known, for in it the Lord has said that he will consummate the work commenced in all other dispensations which have gone before it. This book is the strongest corroborative evidence to the divinity of the things contained in the Bible, that there is in the world. It is the strongest evidence of the divinity of the mission of the Redeemer of the world, that can be found, the Bible alone excepted. It contains the fulness of the everlasting gospel, in simplicity, easy to be understood, as it was taught to the people by the Redeemer who established his Church among the Nephites. The code of morals which it teaches is beyond criticism, and if adhered to would redeem the world from the condition of moral degeneracy which now prevails. It teaches ethics in civil government which, if adhered to, would solve the perplexing political questions which bewilder the world today, would remove the burdens of taxation from the backs of the struggling masses, and bring peace to the earth and fraternity among all mankind. It declares the redemption of the remnant of Judah, the gathering of the Ten Tribes, the restoration of scattered Israel, and the fulfilment of the words of the prophets, both ancient and modern. While it strongly denounces wickedness, it holds out great hope to the righteous, and forgiveness and redemption to the repentant sinner; it unfolds the hitherto unknown past, and outlines to us events of the great future upon the threshold of which we stand. It has been before the world now for nearly one hundred years, during which period it has been subjected to the criticism of the learned and to the ridicule of the ignorant. Not one line in it, not one doctrine which it teaches, not one truth which it sets forth, has been found to be out of harmony with the word of the Lord, as contained in the Bible, and as it has come to us through his inspired servants—a thing which can be said of no other book in the world. It should be an evidence of its truth, that with the closest scrutiny given it by this committee, in the light of the present, with the past behind us, not one single instance was found where it needed correction or amendment.

So, my brethren and sisters, we commend the Book of Mormon to you and to the people, particularly of this country in which we live; for this record is of special and transcendent importance to them. It declares in plainness that this is a land choice above all other lands, that it is dedicated to the service of the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ, and it warns the people who occupy this land that whenever the time shall come that they are lifted up in pride above all other nations, when the time shall come that they are full of all manner of iniquity, of secret abominations, of whoredom, and priestcraft, and of all manner of wickedness, that at that time, except they repent and turn to the Lord, destruction shall come to them, as it has come to other nations and people who have occupied the land before them. We ask you, and particularly the people of the United States, to become familiar with its contents. If we will do so and be governed by the doctrines it teaches, we will be redeemed from the sins of the world, will understand the purposes of the Almighty as they apply to us, his purposes in the opening of this great gospel dispensation, the great accomplishments of the past and the immediate future which is before us. It will redeem us from the sins of the world and enable us to live clean and spotless before the Lord, regardless of our surroundings. It is the word of the Lord brought forth through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith for the redemption of mankind, to go with the Bible as an additional evidence and witness to the people of the world that the decrees of the Father are unchangeable, that the words of the prophets will be fulfilled, that Israel will be gathered, and that redemption will come to the covenant people of the Lord. Search the Scriptures, my brethren and sisters, for in them we have eternal life, and they are they which testify of God and of the truth of these things which I have said to you. I pray that we may all become familiar with them, that we may all, through adherence to their tenets, attain to everlasting life, through Jesus Christ, Amen.

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Samuel W. Parkinson, President of the Franklin stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION

President Heber J. Grant presided and called the congregation to order at 2 o'clock. The building, both in auditorium and galleries, was filled to capacity.

The choir and congregation sang, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

Prayer was offered by Elder Joseph B. White, President of the Hyrum stake of Zion.

The choir and Mrs. Francesca Parkinson sang the sacred song, "The Almighty," by Schubert.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

CHANGES IN CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS

We announced here at the last conference, the changes in the Australian, New Zealand and the Swiss and German missions. At that time Brother James N. Lambert who had been to New Zealand was with us and spoke to the congregation. Since then, Brother Arnold G. Miller, from the Australian mission, and Brother Angus J. Cannon from the Swiss and German mission have arrived home. We welcome them and tender them our sincere thanks for the very splendid, long and arduous labors that they have performed in those missions.

INCREASE IN PAYMENTS OF TITHING

In reading a number of items this morning, I read what became of several millions of dollars of the funds of the Church during the last year, and lo and behold, I skipped the all-important item of tithing. The Saints have done remarkably well, during the past year, in the payment of tithes, especially when we consider the hard times through which we are passing. I wish to commend the bishops, and other officers of the Church, as well as the membership of the Church, in general, for the faithfulness exhibited by the Saints in payment of their tithes. I think that it is nothing less than wonderful in view of the great hardships financially, through which all sections of the country have been passing, during the year that is just closed, that there should be no falling off at all in the tithes of the Latter-day Saints. The tithes for the past year have been slightly in advance of those for the previous year, which was one of the largest years for the payment of tithes in the history of the Church.

AN EDITORIAL IN THE "COAST BANKER."

Elder Joseph W. McMurrin, President of the California Mission, came up and suggested that I should waive my insurance modesty, and that I should read the introduction to my speech, as written by the editor of the Coast Banker; and I shall do so. One of my insurance friends in San Francisco, president of one of the greatest companies in the United States, remarking on the photo of myself that is printed with the article, stated that he would pay a great deal if he could only have a picture taken of him that would flatter him as much as this picture flatters me.

(The editorial, which was here read by President Grant, and the speech in full may be found at the close of this record.—Clerk.)

THE CANTATA "THE MARTYRS," BY EVAN STEPHANS

The sacred cantata, "The Martyrs," by Evan Stephens, and a chorus of 400 will be presented in the Tabernacle, Monday evening, April 4. I read an editorial in The News, last night, and felt that Brother Stephens was entitled to have this splendid editorial read to you here today:

"Among other events of the approaching Conference season claiming th: attention of both residents and visitors the rendition of Evan Stephens' sacred cantata, "The Martyrs," in the Tabernacle, on Monday evening next, is deserving of special notice. A year ago this gifted home composer fairly electrified a mammoth audience in the Tabernacle with "The Vision"—an appropriate precursor of the present work; and those who are in a position to speak with intelligence and authority on the question, affirm with enthusiasm that 'The Martyrs' is in all respects the equal of, and in some respects is superior to, the earlier masterpiece. Certainly in the matter of attention to detail in presentation, Mr. Stephens has allowed nothing to be overlooked—a fact upon which those who know his artistic and indefatigable nature will need no assurance. He has in conspicuous degree the talent of infusing into his performers a measure of his own zeal, so that to the most exacting demands of practice and rehearsal they yield without demur. The result is that when at length the hour for the public performance arrives, all those who have been engaged upon it are prepared to give it a rendition as nearly faultless as is humanly possible. Apart from the fame of the soloists, the heavier choral work of the great chorus of four hundred voices should prove at once a mighty attraction and inspiration. In short, it is to be hoped, and it is the probability, that, vast as is the auditorium where the performance will be given, the demand for seats will be so great that not all can gain admission, for it promises to be in all respects a stupendous and memorable occasion."

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

My dear brethren and sisters: We had a glorious meeting this morning, and now are gathered again in this building, a great assembly of Latter-day Saints, members of the Church of Jesus Christ, the only Church under the heavens that bears the name of the Savior. It is true that he is not here with us in person, but he is here by the power of his Spirit and his authority. His authority, is called the Priesthood, the holy Priesthood after the order of the Son of God, and this authority is held by the prophet, seer and revelator and the president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Not only does it rest upon him, but it is widely distributed throughout the Church, and rests in some degree upon every worthy man in the Church.

WOMEN AND THE PRIESTHOOD.

The Priesthood is not received, or held, or exercised in any degree, by the women of the Church; but, nevertheless, the women of the Church enjoy the blessings of the Priesthood through their husbands. This emphasizes very strongly the importance of marriage. Every woman in the Church, of mature age, and worthiness, who is ambitious to attain to exaltation and glory hereafter should be married, should be sealed to a man for time and all eternity; and we trust that the young women of the Church as well as the young men of the Church realize the responsibility of this important ordinance.

THE POWER AND AUTHORITY OF THE HOLY PRIESTHOOD.

The Priesthood, my brethren and sisters, is complete in itself. Nevertheless, we know that there are two great divisions in it, namely the Melchizedek, or higher Priesthood, and the Aaronic, or lesser Priesthood, which lesser Priesthood is an appendage to the higher Priesthood. The Melchizedek Priesthood administers the gospel and holds the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God. Therefore, in its ordinances the power of God and of godliness is manifest, and without the ordinances and the holy Priesthood the power of godliness is not manifest among men. Therefore, wherever the holy Priesthood of God is not found in a Church, such a church cannot be the Church of Christ.

Moses very well understood this great principle. He held the higher Priesthood. He was a great prophet of God and he sought diligently to sanctify the children of Israel, that they might behold the face of God. But it is said in the revelation that they hardened their hearts and could not endure his presence and therefore the Lord in his wrath—for his anger was kindled against them—swore that they should not enter into his rest while in the wilderness, which rest is a fulness of the glory of God. In consequence of this, the holy Melchizedek Priesthood was taken from their midst. But the lesser Priesthood—the Priesthood that holds the keys of the administering of angels and the preparatory gospel—was continued in Israel down to the time of the Savior. We learn a great lesson from this incident, for we perceive that because of the hardness of their hearts and their unbelief and rebellion, at times, Moses and the holy Priesthood were taken away from the children of Israel. But it is not so with the Latter-day Saints, because you will find the authority of the holy Priesthood, the high Priesthood as well as the lesser Priesthood, throughout all the stakes of Zion and in every ward. In this is shown the mercy and the loving kindness and generosity of our Father in heaven, because it is seen that God is no respecter of persons, and that the right to the Priesthood belongs to every faithful man in the Church—I think I may say it is his by right divine. So it is.

Now, brethren and sisters, we say to all Israel, beware of hardness of heart, and the spirit of rebellion, and the sin of idolatry, for these sins are great evils in the sight of the Lord. He requires humility of heart and diligence and faithfulness and submission to his authority. I think that there is nothing in the scriptures or in the revelations of God that emphasizes the greatness of the power of the holy Priesthood as the words which occur in Doctrine and Covenants, section 84, a revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith. Latter-day Saints, give ear to these words and ponder them in your hearts, for the Lord said:

"For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two Priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies;

"They become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom, and the elect of God;

"And also all they who receive this Priesthood receiveth me, saith the Lord;

"For he that receiveth my servants receiveth me;

"And he that receiveth me receiveth my Father;

"And he that receiveth my Father, receiveth my Father's kingdom; therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him;

"And this is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the Priesthood.

"Therefore, all those who receive the Priesthood, receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he cannot break, neither can it be moved."

But now, mark you, there is a proviso, and it is significant. It is highly important:

"But whoso breaketh this covenant, after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come."

This is the reservation, that is the proviso. Now if we shall attain to these great blessings we must be humble, faithful, consistent Latter-day Saints.

SOME PERTINENT QUESTIONS TO THOSE WHO HOLD THE PRIESTHOOD.

Now, brethren and sisters—and I say sisters because, as I have said, the sisters participate in the blessings of the Priesthood through their husbands—do we appreciate the Priesthood of God, this divine authority? Do we honor it in our lives? Do we honor it in our file leaders? Do we teach our boys at home the importance and value of the Priesthood? Are they receiving this instruction in the various organizations? Because, I take it that the Priesthood of God is about the greatest gift unto man, for it represents divine authority. Let us give heed to this matter. Oh, I pray that the responsibility of it may rest down mightily upon the authorities in the stakes of Zion, and that they will see to it that proper and full instruction is given in respect to this matter.

Now may the Lord bless you, the Lord bless our President, who has spoken so beautifully and so powerfully to us today, and Presidents Penrose and Ivins. We have had rich instructions already. Oh, if we could only fully receive it into our hearts, and carry it out in our lives, how blest we would be! May the spirit of the Lord continue to be upon this people and in the congregations of the Saints, and may it rest upon the authorities of the Church, and all the speakers at this Conference, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus, Amen.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

I have rejoiced with you, my brethren and sisters, in this general conference as far as it has progressed. I feel in my soul to endorse what has been said. I feel that the Spirit of the Lord is with us, and was with us very richly in the opening session. I desire to contribute something, through the help of the Lord, that will be of profit to some of us, if we will listen and hear, and be doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving ourselves.

EVIDENCES OF THE FAITHFULNESS OF THE SAINTS.

The key-word of our Conference, six months ago, was given us by President Grant, to keep the commandments of the Lord. If I understand the key-word given to us in this Conference, it is to continue our faithfulness in keeping the commandments of the Lord. We have abundance of evidence of faithfulness on the part of the great majority of the Latter-day Saints. The very fact that, under existing financial conditions, the tithing of the people has increased, during the past year, is an evidence of their faithfulness in keeping the commandments. The reports we have of the increased attendance at sacrament meetings and of stake conference meetings is an additional evidence of faithfulness on the part of the people in keeping the commandments of the Lord; also, the increased attendance and membership in the auxiliary associations of the Church, is an evidence of faithfulness on the part of the young as well as the older people of the Church. I have the utmost confidence in the Latter-day Saints including Zion's young people. I have the utmost confidence in the ultimate triumph of God's work in the earth. No power can stay the progress. Zion is to arise and shine and become the glory of the whole earth, and we can see her brightness already. Those who are not of us, and among us, and those of the world whose eyes have been turned toward us, are also mindful of this fact. A friendly feeling toward the Latter-day Saints and the doctrines which we have for the world is growing up wherever the gospel is being preached. There are, of course, some exceptions. In our travels in the Stakes of Zion we have abundance of evidence of devotion on the part of leading men and women to their callings in this great work. I feel in my heart to commend them for their faithfulness and for their devotion and to pray God's choicest blessings to rest upon them, that they may be abundantly rewarded of him in time and in eternity for the sacrifices which they are making, of time and means, in the carrying on this great latter-day work. These matters of which I have been speaking, of which we know by records which are kept and reports which are made, indicate to me that the Latter-day Saints are making improvement in other ways, where we are unable to check them up so completely as on some of these matters, such as attendance at meetings and the payment of their tithes and offerings. The tithing is an index of the faithfulness of the individual. I am sure that the Lord manifests his pleasure to the individual who is making the required sacrifice for the onward progress of his work, and for the salvation of his children and such is the character and the work being done by the Latter-day Saints.

CARING FOR THE FATHERLESS, AND KEEPING OURSELVES UNSPOTTED FROM THE WORLD.

The Apostle James said: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

We should not overlook this latter part of the definition. I believe that the Latter-day Saints are improving in that respect in keeping themselves unspotted from the sins of the world. We are visiting the widows and the fatherless, we are feeding the hungry; we are clothing the naked; we are visiting the sick and the afflicted; and we are taking care of the stranger and feeding him the bread of life, as opportunity is afforded. I do believe, Latter-day Saints, that when we pay our tithing in full, conscientiously before the Lord, and are generous in the giving of our offerings, that we are answering the requirement of the law, and there will be none to suffer. The widow and the orphan will be well taken care of in the Church, if we all attend to these particular duties in faithfulness; and the Lord will reward us amply for our efforts and our sacrifices in this direction. I believe that the people today, the Latter-day Saints, answer the call to leave their homes and go into the nations of the earth to preach the gospel among strangers as readily as they ever have done, notwithstanding the individual expense of the elders is almost double what it was a few years ago. This is another evidence of faithfulness which inspires confidence in the Latter-day Saints. It is the young people in the main—our sons and our daughters, who are called to bear this responsibility and to make this sacrifice. They are answering the calls in a generous and satisfactory manner and the Lord takes these weak men and women and with them threshes the nations, and the wisdom of the wise does perish before their humble, truthful testimonies.

SERIOUS CONSEQUENCES OF THE SIN OF NEGLECT.

This is the time, my brethren and sisters, for our planting, this period of our eternal progression, while we are here in mortal life. If in the season of the planting of our crop, the planting be neglected, there will be no time of reaping. I do hope that we will bear this thought in mind and make every preparation that is necessary while we are here and have the opportunity; that when we go beyond we will find peace, we will be satisfied with that which we have to reap as a result of our life's work here. The Savior gave us a parable that is very impressive upon this point—at least to my mind. It refers to the rich man who dressed in fine apparel and fared sumptuous every day. The poor man lay at the gate of the rich man; the dogs licked his sores, and he fain would have taken the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table. After a time the poor man died, and the angels bore his spirit to the paradise of heaven. The rich man died also, and went to hell; and in hell he lifted up his eyes in torment. Seeing Lazarus afar off and in Abraham's bosom he cried to Abraham: "Father Abraham, send Lazarus that he may dip his finger in water and touch my parched tongue, for I am in torment." You know the answer. That was impossible. Then the next request was to send Lazarus or somebody else from the dead, that they might go down to earth and visit his five brothers that they might be specially warned that they might not come to his fate. But that was impossible. The answer was: "They have Moses and the prophets. If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither would they be persuaded though one were sent from the dead." There are several important lessons to be learned from this parable; but the one I wish to bring to your attention is the serious consequence of the sin of neglect. There does not seem to have been any other charge made against this rich man than that he had the means to do with, the opportunity was laid before him, his responsibility he clearly saw, and ignored it.

OUR DUTY TO FEED THE SPIRIT AS WELL AS THE BODY.

Now it is a blessing to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked. That is a part of pure religion and undefiled; but I have thought and I do feel, my brethren and sisters, that it is better to feed the soul of a man or woman than to feed the body, to minister unto their spiritual and eternal needs and welfare rather than to their physical. The body must perish soon anyway. There are those among us who are starving for the word of God. They are wandering from sea to sea, and from the north even unto the east, running to and fro, seeking the word of God and cannot find it. They do not hope to find it among the Latter-day Saints. They are blinded to the truth which we have received, but we know we have received the responsibility to preach it in all the world as a witness unto all nations before the end shall come. This is the food of which the world of mankind are so much in need today, and with which we are so bountifully blest. It is that kind of food that we can give to those who are in need, generously, and they become the happy recipients and are blest through it, and we will not be impoverished. Indeed, as we undertake to minister unto the spiritual needs of men and women, our souls grow and enlarge, our love for our fellow men increases; our love for our Father in heaven and our Savior increases; our love and appreciation of the truth also increase, and we are even more blest than they. The very anticipation and desire to do good brings happiness and peace to our souls. On the other hand, if we, having the abundance of this spiritual food, and knowing those about us who are in a starving condition, if we fail to minister unto their needs we are likely to experience in the life beyond, a disappointment corresponding with that of the rich man who neglected to minister unto the needs of his poor neighbor. As it is more blessed to feed the soul, so is it a greater neglect, a greater sin, and I believe will be attended by a greater penalty to neglect to feed the souls of men and women.

NOW IS OUR OPPORTUNITY TO BLESS BOTH THE LIVING AND THE DEAD.

The work for our dead, brethren and sisters, we have not been organized in the past to do, as we have been organized, as a Church, to preach the gospel abroad. We have been left to our individual initiative largely, in this matter of searching for the genealogies of our ancestors and going up to the temples of the Lord and doing the work for them. This responsibility rests heavily upon us, and some of us do not realize it. If we neglect our dead, when we go to the other side, they will reproach us, and that will be hell and torment. We may desire to come back to have another opportunity, but it will not be afforded us. Now is the time; this is our opportunity to bless mankind, both the living and the dead, and to prepare an eternity beyond that will be one of peace, contentment and all that our hearts can desire.

In conclusion, let me recite you a few lines impressive of this principle. It is entitled "A Little Parable," and reads like this:

"I made the cross myself, whose weight was later laid on me,
This thought is torture as I climb up life's steep Calvary.
To think my own hands drove the nails!
I sang a merry song,
And chose the heaviest wood I had,
To make it firm and strong.

If I had guessed,
If I had dreamed its weight was made for me,
I would have made a lighter cross to bear up Calvary."

May the Lord add his blessings, I pray in Jesus name, Amen.

The Elite Male Quartet sang, "Jesus, I my cross have taken."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

You perhaps have noticed from the announcement in the paper, that Elder Whitney will go to Europe to preside over the European mission, succeeding Elder George Albert Smith; so this will probably be the last time that we can hear from Brother Whitney for some months at least.

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEY

For the past fifteen years I have been preaching the Gospel in the Stakes of Zion, and after living on "stakes" all that length of time, I need, and it seems I am to have, a change of diet. If you wish to know how I feel about the call that has come to me, I will tell you: I rejoice in it. I am going with a glad heart and a cheerful countenance to do my duty—as I have done it here—on the other side of the world.

EARLY MISSIONS AND APPOINTMENTS.

This will not be my first mission as an Elder of the Church. My first mission of all was to the United States, from 1876 to 1878. I labored five or six months in Pennsylvania, and then went to Ohio, my father's native State, where the Whitney family embraced the Gospel in early days. While I was in Ohio my mother wrote to me asking why I did not return. Said she: "All the missionaries who went with you, or went at the same time that you did, are back home. Why don't you come?" I answered: "Because I have not been released; and I shall stay here until I receive, without any solicitation on my part, an honorable release from the Presidency of the Church."

Having been honorably released, I returned, and was made a Ward Bishop. I served in the Bishopric for nearly twenty-eight years, and in April 1906 was called into the position that I now occupy. Meanwhile, from the autumn of 1881 until the summer of 1883, I filled a mission in Great Britain, laboring most of the time as assistant editor of the Millennial Star.

NO TIME LIMIT.

No time limit was placed upon my missions. I never felt that I ought to ask for a release, or come home until the servants of the Lord presiding over me said: "It is enough; you are at liberty to return."

An impression now prevails in the mission fields among some of our young elders, that they were called to labor for a set time; and after that time has expired—say eighteen or twenty months—they seem to think they are entitled to a release, and some even ask for it. This is contrary to my traditions and training. I have never called myself upon a mission; have never appointed myself to an office; and have never thought it my privilege to resign, or ask to be relieved of any responsibility in connection with the Lord's work. I have responded to every call made upon me thus far, and I expect to do so as long as I live.

LABORS OF THE TWELVE.

In times past some of our brethren and sisters have worried over the question of the labors of the Twelve apostles. They have hinted that we ought to be out preaching the gospel in the world—evidently overlooking the fact that the Twelve travel under the direction of the First Presidency; that they do not call themselves upon missions, but have to wait until they are sent. I have never known one of the apostles to refuse or even hesitate to respond to any call that came to him from rightful authority. Years ago I said from this stand, quoting a little verse that we sometimes sing:

"I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
On mountain on land or on sea;
I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord, I'll be what you want me to be."

And I paraphrased it thus:

I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
I'll go whenever you say;
But till I am sent I'm not going to go—
I'll stay where you want me to stay.

Now that I have been appointed to go, I am going; and I promise President Grant and his counselors, and you my brethren and sisters, that I shall go with a free will and with joy in my heart, having no desire to be released at the expiration of any set time. I leave that with the Lord. I am going where he wants me to go, and will stay there as long as he wants me to stay. This is God's work, and I know it, and I am proud and happy to be engaged in it.

ALMA'S WISH.

I would like to read you a few paragraphs from the Book of Mormon. A Prophet named Alma, standing upon the American Continent seventy-six years before the birth of the Savior, uttered these wonderful words:

"O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people;

"Yea, I would declare unto every soul, as with the voice of thunder, repentance, and the plan of redemption, that they should repent and come unto our God, that there might not be more sorrow upon all the face of the earth.

"But behold, I am a man, and do sin in my wish; for I ought to be content with the things which the Lord hath allotted unto me.

"I ought not to harrow up in my desires the firm decree of a just God for I know that he granteth unto men according to their desire, whether it be unto death or unto life; yea, I know that he alloteth unto men according to their wills, whether they be unto salvation or unto destruction.

"Yea, and I know that good and evil have come before all men; he that knoweth not good from evil is blameless; but he that knoweth good and evil, to him it is given according to his desires; whether he desireth good or evil, life or death, joy or remorse of conscience.

"Now seeing that I know these things, why should I desire more than to perform the work to which I have been called?

"Why should I desire that I was an angel, that I could speak unto all the ends of the earth?

"For behold, the Lord doth grant unto all nations, of their own nation and tongue, to teach his word; yea, in wisdom, all that he seeth fit that they should have; therefore we see that the Lord doth counsel in wisdom, according to that which is just and true.

"I know that which the Lord hath commanded me, and I glory in it: I do not glory of myself, but I glory in that which the Lord hath commanded me; yea, and this is my glory, that perhaps I may be an instrument in the hands of God, to bring some soul to repentance; and this is my joy."

PROVIDENCE IS OVER ALL.

Many beautiful lessons might be drawn from this passage of scripture, but I have only time to dwell upon one. It tells me that Providence is over all, and that he holds the nations in the hollow of his hand; that he is using not only his covenant people, but other peoples as well, to consummate a work, stupendous, magnificent, and altogether too arduous for this little handful of Saints to accomplish by and of themselves. Alma seems to have thought, for the moment, that man was doing God's work for him, instead of which it is God, who is doing his own work, and using men as his instruments. Nor is he limited in the choice of instruments to his own people. He sways the scepter over all nations, and they are all playing into his hands, knowingly or unknowingly. Alma knew this, but had momentarily lost sight of it.

"OF THEIR OWN NATION AND TONGUE."

All down the ages men bearing the authority of the Holy Priesthood—patriarchs, prophets, apostles and others, have officiated in the name of the Lord, doing the things that he required of them; and outside the pale of their activities other good and great men, not bearing the Priesthood, but possessing profundity of thought, great wisdom, and a desire to uplift their fellows, have been sent by the Almighty into many nations, to give them, not the fulness of the Gospel, but that portion of truth that they were able to receive and wisely use. Such men as Confucius, the Chinese philosopher; Zoroaster, the Persian sage; Guatama or Buddha, of the Hindus; Socrates and Plato, of the Greeks; these all had some of the light that is universally diffused, and concerning which we have this day heard. They were servants of the Lord in a lesser sense, and were sent to those pagan or heathen nations to give them the measure of truth that a wise Providence had allotted to them.

OTHER AUXILIARIES

And not only teachers—not poets and philosophers alone; but inventors, discoverers, warriors, statesmen, rulers, et al. These also have been used from the beginning to help along the Lord's work—mighty auxiliaries in the hands of an Almighty God, carrying out his purposes, consciously or unconsciously.

"There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough hew them as we will."

The God of Israel used Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, to punish his chosen people for their sins. Jeremiah the Prophet was sent with the word of the Lord to Zedekiah, king of Judah, commanding him to submit to the Lord's "servant"—this same Nebuchadnezzar. And because Zedekiah refused to obey, a terrible fate befell him; his kingdom was overthrown, his eyes were put out, and he and his people were carried away captive into Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar was a great king; he built the "Hanging Gardens," one of the seven wonders of the world; but he arrogated to himself the glory for what God had done, and had to be humbled to the dust, and sent forth to eat grass like the ox, until "seven times" had passed over him, and he had learned the lesson "that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will."

Babylon was overthrown by Cyrus the Persian, a great and good monarch, called by the Lord "his anointed," and named by prophecy more than a hundred years before he was born. Cyrus was instrumental in restoring the captive Jews to their own country, that they might rebuild Jerusalem in time for the Savior's advent.

When the Medo-Persian empire became corrupt, it was overthrown by Alexander the Great. Alexander conquered the world and "wept," it is said, "because there were no more worlds to conquer." He died a drunkard, or from a fever caused by excess of drink. But was that all he did? Dean Farrar says of him and of the great service he unwittingly rendered to the cause of Christ: "The immense field covered by the conquests of Alexander gave to the civilized world a unity of language, without which it would have been, humanly speaking, impossible for the earliest preachers to have made known the good tidings in every land which they traversed." "Wherever he went," says the historian McCabe, "he left the Greek language, . . . all powerful in drawing the nations of the old world into a closer and more intimate contact with each other. . . . At a later period the Hebrew Scriptures, translated into Greek, were made accessible to the whole world, and the way was thus paved for the mission of Him of whom these Scriptures testify."

This also from Farrar: "The rise of the Roman Empire created a political unity which reflected in every direction the doctrines of the new faith. The Gospel emanated from the capital of Judea; it was preached in the tongue of Athens; it was diffused through the Empire of Rome; the feet of its earliest missionaries traversed the solid structure of undeviating roads by which the Roman legionaries—'those massive hammers of the whole earth'—had made straight in the desert a highway for our God. Semite and Aryan had been unconscious instruments in the hands of God for the spread of a religion which, in its first beginnings, both alike detested and despised."

AMERICA A NURSING MOTHER.

Coming down to later times, we have but to open the Book of Mormon to see how the Spirit of the Lord rested upon a man among the Gentiles, impelling him across the great waters to the Land of Zion, a land reserved by Providence for the triumph of truth and freedom in the last days—the place for the building of the New Jerusalem and the beginning of the work of preparation that will have to be done before the Lord comes in his glory. Columbus was inspired to discover America for this purpose, though he knew it not. After him came the Pilgrim Fathers; and then Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Hamilton, and other Patriots of the Revolution, all moved upon by the same Spirit, to create the mighty fabric of this great Republic, a free nation, guaranteeing liberty to its citizens of every creed and of no creed, and raised up by the Almighty to play the part of a nursing mother to the restored Church of Christ.

True, the Latter-day Saints have been persecuted under the Stars and Stripes in various States of the Union; but we must not make the mistake of supposing that it was because of the Flag, or of the Constitution, or of the genius of the American government, that these deplorable happenings took place. No; it was not because, but in spite of them. Those persecutions were inflicted by lawless force, by mob violence, ever to be execrated and condemned by every true patriot. Let us credit our noble Nation with what it has done in the direction of filling its God-given mission. In no other land—in no other nation upon this land, would the Lord's people have been treated with the same degree of consideration. In no other country on earth would this work have been permitted to come forth. This nation was founded purposely, that the Church and Kingdom of God might be established and all nations bask in its light and share in its blessings.

TRUTH'S TRIUMPH INEVITABLE.

We must never allow ourselves to grow misanthropic or fearful concerning the outcome. The success of this work is assured. The triumph of Truth is inevitable. The clouds may gather, the billows rage, the tempests burst in fury; but the unerring Pilot is at the helm, and the Ship steered by Him will weather every storm.

"Truth forever on the scaffold,
Wrong forever on the throne.
Yet that scaffold sways the future,
And behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow,

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

My brethren and sisters: I stand before you on this occasion with great timidity; partly because I am unaccustomed to speaking in this vast auditorium and before so large a gathering of people, but chiefly because I sense the tremendous responsibility that rests upon all who, at these general conferences, are called upon to address the Saints. I pray for your support and your faith now and always.

A TESTIMONY.

Nevertheless, my brethren and sisters, I am glad at all times to have the privilege of bearing my testimony to the truthfulness of this work, this system of thought, of doctrine, of practice, which men denominate "Mormonism," but which we know to be God's eternal, unchanging and unchangeable plan of salvation for the human family. I know, my brethren and sisters, that this work is true. I know that it has come from God and that it leads men back to God along happy and joyous paths. This testimony has been fed and strengthened, throughout these two meetings, by hearing the testimonies of the Presidency and the Apostles who have spoken. I trust this testimony may always be mine.

THE UNIFYING POWER OF THE GOSPEL.

As I have looked over the congregations this morning and this afternoon, no thought has impressed me more than that here we have all classes and all manner of people, men and women of different degrees of knowledge and of varying capacities; yet these people, unlike in their God-given gifts, are finding the satisfaction of their lives, after they have once accepted the gospel, in the doctrines and the life within the Church. Whether of high or of low degree, rich or poor, learned or unlearned, of quick or of slow intelligence, from Scandinavia, Germany, England or America, these people, because of the gospel and through the gospel, see alike, apparently think alike, and very largely act alike. There is something within this gospel that unifies all who accept it and who belong to it. This is not true alone of this generation and of this dispensation. It has been so in all ages, in all generations and in all dispensations. The Patriarch Enoch, in his holy city, Abraham on the Plains of Mamre, Moses in the wilderness, Samuel in God's temple, and all the other worthies of which history gives an account, gained strength and found the solace of their lives in the identical gospel to which we adhere and to which we give our allegiance.

THE CHURCH MAKES NO APPEAL TO MYSTICISM.

It has always impressed me that the universality of the appeal of "Mormonism" is especially remarkable in view of the fact that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints does not attempt to win support by specially devised appeals to the emotions of men, which is so frequently the case with other Churches. We have no elaborate system of ritual; we have no mystical doctrines to lead men on by the appeal of the unknown; we do not attempt to win converts by threatening a future hell. We are in all respects plain and simple in our worship; in fact, in this Church, which believes that "the glory of God is intelligence," it is difficult to establish doctrines of mysticism and in that way win adherents to the cause; and in a Church which declares that there is a graded salvation, within the ultimate reach of every human being, if he cares to accept of it, there can be no deep-seated fear of the hereafter, especially when we have been told that the lowest glory of this graded salvation is entirely beyond the understanding and wildest fancy of man.

THE TEST OF TRUTH IS SIMPLICITY.

I am not so sure, my brethren and sisters, but that one of the strongest evidences of the truthfulness of "Mormonism" lies in the fact that it has such universal appeal to men and women of all capacities and of all degrees of knowledge. Truth is always simple; the test of truth is simplicity. That which is dimly understood, which confuses the mind of man, is likely to be but partly true. The scientist in his laboratory applies this final test to his work. When, after many months or years of labor, he finds that the things he has discovered can be told simply and plainly to his fellow men, he is likely to say: "Now I have found the truth." Men and women of this Church have accepted the Gospel because they have learned to understand it, because it is clear, because it is simple, because it is not surrounded by confusion or dimness of any kind.

To enlarge briefly upon this thought, the reason why those of great mental ability, great God-given powers, may find their full soul's satisfaction in the gospel, seems to me to be that the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ is not in the form of chunks or bits of truth, isolated truths; but in the form of great general principles or laws—principles which encompass thousands and tens of thousands of single truths—principles of truth that interpret and illustrate all the phenomena that we find as we journey through life. To know that the sun shines upon the earth, and in that way gives the earth energy, is an important and interesting fact, but it does not interpret the universe. The great law of gravitation, the law of the indestructibility of matter, and other such fundamental laws, however, do interpret not only the relationship of the sun to the earth, but innumerable of the varied facts of the universe. The basic principles of the gospel are of such comprehensive nature. They may be unyielding, they may never be departed from, but they point with certainty the road that men may travel to discover all the incidental truths that may be desirable in life. The mightiest intellect will never exhaust these great laws. Many religions upon the face of the earth rest upon one isolated truth. Each has taken a great, glittering, brilliant truth, and upon it has erected an elaborate system; but because it is only one truth of many belonging to a great principle—which principle is not understood in full—the system of religion is not likely to prevail forever among men.

DANGER IN DEPARTING FROM FUNDAMENTAL TRUTHS.

I want to bear you this testimony, my brethren and sisters, that we have in this Church the great, everlasting principles of truth, the basic laws of truth upon which we may erect the spiritual and religious structure of our lives, here and hereafter. I want to say also that it is my conviction that the greatest danger that may affect this Church at any time is to depart, ever so little, from these fundamental principles. All that we do, all that we plan to do, must be tied to the fundamental principles of the Gospel. Then we shall have no apostasy in this Church. The apostasies of past dispensations, have come ordinarily when some one has taken a glittering, desirable truth, and magnified it to the forgetfulness of the principle to which it belongs.

Some may say that this doctrine stops all progress. If we have solid, substantial, unchanging principles which may never be departed from, then how is progress possible? Yet, my brethren and sisters, you all know that the only real progress possible in this world is that which is based upon adherence to simple, general laws of truth. When man discovers some great law pertaining to the universe, and builds upon it, then he and science both make progress. The great principles or laws of truth may be likened to the great steel structure of one of our lofty office buildings—rigid, firm and bolted together so that it may not move or change—yet within those steel beams and girders, around them, above them, below them, are built floors and walls and doors and windows and decorations until the structure meets every want of those for whom it is intended.

WE MUST USE AS WELL AS POSSESS TRUTH.

I trust my brethren and sisters, that the people of this Church may forever study and understand and adhere to these fundamental principles of doctrine and of organization which lie at the foundation of the persistence of this Church, in this time and in the time hereafter. May we also remember that to possess truth is only a part of the problem. We must use it also; and truth cannot be used properly or wisely unless we do, as has been explained here this afternoon, apply to it the authority of the Priesthood of God. The two great gifts to this Church are the gifts of truth and authority. May we Latter-day Saints remember them, treasure them, and not depart from them; and may they be with us always, I ask it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

I feel very humble this afternoon in standing here before this vast congregation. Yet I am made to rejoice in the testimonies which have been borne by those who have spoken, both at this session and at the opening session of this conference. I have been greatly interested, and I trust that I may be led by the Spirit of the Lord to say that which I ought to say in the few moments that I stand here.

GOD IS AT THE HELM.

God is at the helm, as Elder Whitney has said. I greatly rejoice, as I know you rejoice, in that great fundamental truth. This is not the work of man. It was not instituted by man, but by the Lord and Savior of this world. I am as fully convinced, I believe, I was going to say, as any man, that Joseph Smith was called and appointed in the very manner in which he has borne testimony; that the Spirit of the Lord rested upon him, that he was called to usher in the dispensation in which we live, to establish the gospel in its fulness, to restore the Priesthood, which is power from our Father in heaven, by which we are able to officiate in all the ordinances of the gospel for the salvation of the souls of men. I am firmly convinced of these truths. The Lord has not left us to wander; he has not left us alone in the world to grope in darkness, but the Church which he has founded is guided by the spirit of revelation, and the inspiration of the Lord rests upon those who stand at the head. They are not doing this work in their own name, they are not endeavoring to establish themselves, but to carry out the plan which the Lord has revealed, and to make known unto the children of men the great desire of our Father, that all men may be saved through obedience to the gospel and receive a place and standing in his kingdom.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES DO NOT CHANGE IN THE COURSE OF PROGRESS.

President Ivins this morning drew our attention to some things pertaining to the establishing, the ushering in, of this great and marvelous work, as it is spoken of, in these latter-days. He referred to the youth of the Prophet Joseph Smith, how he was called, how the Lord made himself known unto him; how he was appointed, not only to establish the Church, but to give unto us a great volume of scripture which volume contains the doctrines, the teachings, and the history of a great people who dwelt upon this continent. As he was speaking, and as other brethren have been speaking here, regarding the principles of the gospel, my heart was made glad in reflecting on the great truth referred to this afternoon, that this work is based upon fundamental principles that do not change. They must not, they cannot change, because they are eternal. I believe in progression; we all believe in progression; and the Lord has not curtailed us in any respect, but we cannot substitute the ideas of men for that which the Lord has given, or the plan which he has adopted and revealed to us, by which we may be saved. For instance, there is no name other than that of Jesus Christ by which men shall be saved. Men may formulate plans and adopt theories and introduce strange works and gather and teach many peculiar doctrines, but this teaching is fundamental and from it we cannot depart, that all things are concentrated in and around the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the Redeemer of the world. So we accept him as the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, as explained by President Penrose, the only one who has dwelt in the flesh who had a Father who was immortal. We must accept, and do accept, the great truth that because of his birthright, and of the conditions surrounding his coming into the earth, he became the Redeemer of men, and that through the shedding of his blood we are privileged again to return into the presence of our Father, on conditions of our repentance and acceptance of the great plan of redemption of which he is the author. We must believe in the resurrection of the dead, absolutely so, that every soul born upon the face of this earth shall come forth in the resurrection, either of the just or of the unjust, for the resurrection shall be universal, and that, too, through the great atonement which was made by the Savior of the world.

PERFECTION WOULD RESULT IF THE REVELATIONS OF THE LORD WERE OBSERVED.

I look over this congregation and I see, as Brother Widtsoe has already expressed himself as seeing, people who have been gathered from the nations, who have been brought here through the preaching of the gospel, for the purpose of worshipping the Lord, with desires in their hearts of keeping his commandments and of receiving, through faithfulness, an exaltation in his kingdom. Immediately in front of this stand are a great many faithful, true Latter-day Saints, men of renown, men who are filled with the spirit of truth, who are intelligent, and on whom the Lord has conferred the Priesthood, which is his power, by which they officiate in his name for the salvation of souls. This causes me to reflect somewhat upon the organization of the Church, how the Lord has established all things in order and has given us a perfect system. We cannot improve upon it. If we would carry out that which the Lord has revealed, as he has revealed it, then all things would be perfect; for the organization is a perfect organization, the theory of it, the plan of it, is without flaw, and if we followed all the orders that have been given to us in the priesthood and otherwise, if we would put into practice the great doctrines which have been revealed in the revelations contained in the Holy Scriptures, it would only be a matter of a very short time until this great people would be in the same condition, absolutely, as were the people in the city of Enoch. We would be able to walk with God, we would be able to behold his face, because then faith would abound in the hearts of the people to the extent that it would be impossible for the Lord to withhold himself, and he would reveal himself unto us as he has done in times past. Now I base that largely upon the expressions in the Book of Mormon. Referring to the revelation made known to the brother of Jared we read that so great was his faith it was impossible for the Lord to withhold himself. Not only was it possible, through his great faith, for that great prophet to see the finger of the Lord, but the Lord was under the necessity of making himself manifest and showing his entire body, the body of his spirit—for it was not then a tabernacle of flesh and bones.

ORDER AND PERFECTION IN THE ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH.

How perfect is this organization. It was not all given at once, and therein is made manifest the truth of the statement of the Prophet Joseph Smith, that he was taught of God; for this work was not all ushered in at once, but the Lord revealed unto him as occasion required it—here a little and there a little, until the full grandeur of it was made known. The first officers in the Church were elders, two elders appointed by that small body who gathered on the 6th day of April, 1830, to officiate for them. But as time advanced and as the Church grew in numbers, it became necessary that other officers should be called and therefore we received high priests and bishops and patriarchs and a little later, seventies and apostles, and the whole plan was made known in its glory as we have it now in the Church. The Lord revealed, even in the beginning, the order of the various quorums, or rather the duties of the various quorums of the Priesthood. He taught us the duties of elders, the duties of teachers, the duties of deacons, and later of high priests when they were made known, and even before that the duties of apostles, and then the duty of patriarchs and of each branch of the priesthood. The duty of teachers is to visit in the homes of the people to see that there is no iniquity there, that there is no backbiting, no fault-finding, that all the members perform their duty; the duty of the priests is to go into the homes of the people to teach them the principles of the gospel, and not wait until they can attend the Sunday school or a Mutual Improvement organization or even a quorum meeting of the priesthood. All this is good, all this is necessary as a part of the plan which the Lord has given us, but the priests were to go into the homes of the people and there instruct, there reveal, there make known unto the family, the will of the Lord. Thus the Lord prepared this plan and revealed it to us that we might walk in a knowledge of the truth, in righteousness and in humility. If we followed it as perfectly as the Lord intends that we should there would be no iniquity in this Church, there would be no fault-finding, there would be no jealousy, there would be no envying, no strife, no bitterness in the hearts of members of this Church against other members, for all that would be done away, and we would stand with one united front, and with one desire in our hearts to serve the Lord and keep his commandments. But we are frail, we are mortals, we do not live up to all of the requirements that are made of us. We fall short sometimes in many respects. We, being imperfect, and the Lord being under the necessity of using us as his instruments, the great plan as he has given it is somewhat below the great standard which he has set, and we do not reach those heights which we should.

OUR DUTY TO MISSIONARY WORK.

But it is my duty, as it is your duty, my brethren and my sisters likewise—for responsibility is placed also upon you—to do the very best that is within our power, and not to shirk, but endeavor with all our soul to magnify the callings the Lord has given us, to labor diligently for the salvation of our own house, each one of us, and for the salvation of our neighbors, the salvation of those who are abroad; and so the gospel is to be preached, as we have heard, to the nations in the world, as well as here in the stakes of Zion. But let us not lose sight of the fact—and I do not think that we do—that a soul here at home is just as precious in the sight of God as is one from abroad; and there is a great mission field right here among the Latter-day Saints, and we might improve in our faith, might improve our works, might improve in our fellowship and standing in this Church. There are among us a great many honest souls who have never accepted the opportunity, or have never taken the trouble to search, that they might find these glorious truths which have been made known in the revelations of the Lord. They do not think of these things, they live among us, we associate with them and we come in contact with them daily. They think we are a pretty nice sort of people, but peculiar in our religious views, and therefore they pay no attention to our faith, and therefore this great missionary work that is being carried on now in the stakes of Zion is gathering in a harvest of honest, faithful souls right here from among those who before had never taken the opportunity, I say, which has been theirs, to hear the gospel.

Now, my brethren and sisters, these are some of the reflections that have come to my mind this afternoon. I realize that my remarks have been somewhat disjointed, not altogether in the one line of thought, but nevertheless I want to say this in conclusion, that the Lord is with the Latter-day Saints, that his Spirit is resting upon this people, and he requires of us that we go before him in humility, forsaking our sins, our jealousies, our evil thoughts, our envyings, our strifes, if such things exist, and of course, more or less, they do exist in the hearts of the people; and he expects that we love one another. That I pray we shall do, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ARIZONA APPROPRIATES $2,500 TO "MORMON" BATTALION MONUMENT.

I have rejoiced in all that has been said here today and endorse most heartily the remarks of my brethren. I have a little note from Brothers J. W. Lesneur and Andrew Kimball of Arizona, the presidents of Maricopa and St. Joseph stakes. They call my attention to the fact that the Arizona legislature has appropriated $2,500 for a Mormon Battalion Monument; that the majority of all the agricultural settlements in Arizona were begun by the "Mormon" people; that the State of Arizona will issue next month the Mormon Settlement book giving an account of the settlements of our people in Arizona, a book of four hundred pages, with sixty illustrations. The state of Arizona is publishing a history of that state, and this volume is a part of it. This volume alone will cost approximately $15,000. The Governor of Arizona and the Historian of the state have devoted a great deal of time, and our friend and brother, LeRoi C. Snow, has been employed in the Historian's office there. We understand that if this volume is sold at the price at which they will sell it, the state will be at a loss of fully $10,000. I have had a brief letter from Brother Snow, enclosing a full account of the contents of the book, but I have been too busy, since I returned from the coast, to read the same.

"THE DESERET NEWS" COMMENDED.

After announcing the time and place of various meetings, President Grant continued, referring to the Cantata of Prof. Evan Stephens, and to the splendid editorial in the Saturday News regarding the Cantata, and said: "You should all take the News. The Deseret News is the organ of the Church, and it is entitled to the support of all Israel. Because it is an excellent paper, and also because of the announcements which are made there by the Presidency, from time to time, and other matter it contains, the paper should be in the homes of the people. Read the editorial regarding the Cantata when you get home.

REFERENCE TO CHANGES IN THE RELIEF SOCIETY.

There is one thing I forgot—and I regret it exceedingly. In the meeting of the Relief Society yesterday, I forgot to invite all of the honored and released members of the General Board of the Relief Society, who in years past have sat there to the right of this stand to continue to occupy seats with the new members of the Board. They have our love, our confidence and our blessings, and we want them to know, as we have said to our retired mission presidents, that there is always a place reserved for them at our General Conference meetings. I have been sorry this afternoon, in looking for the familiar faces, that I forgot to make this announcement yesterday. We want our sisters here, they have our love and our confidence, and our blessing for their past labors, and our prayers for their future happiness.

The choir sang the hymn, "The Lord Victorious."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Joseph C. Bentley of the Juarez stake, Mexico.

Conference adjourned until 2 p. m., Monday, April 4.

FIRST OVERFLOW MEETING

An overflow meeting of the Conference was held in the Assembly Hall at 10 o'clock, Sunday morning, April 3, 1921.

Elder Charles A. Callis, President of the Southern States Mission, presided.

The music was furnished by the LeGrand ward choir, Liberty stake, Heber K. Aldous, conductor, and James Gilbert and Gladys Spry accompanists. The choir and congregation sang, "Come, let us anew our journey pursue."

Prayer was offered by Bishop LeGrand Richards, of the Sugar House ward, Granite stake.

The choir sang the anthem, "Father in Heaven."

ELDER WINSLOW FARR SMITH

(President of the Northern States Mission.)

We are met today in our General Conference, and this particular conference, in the spring of the year, brings to our minds the wonderful experience that the boy Joseph Smith had 101 years ago. As I ponder the glorious revelation that was vouchsafed to him, and look back upon the early days of his ministry, I sometimes wonder if he, in his wildest fancies, in his greatest hopes and ambitions, dreamed that, in the short space of one century, conferences of the Church would be held where there would be in attendance thousands and tens of thousands of its members. To me these gatherings are a testimony that the work is of our heavenly Father, that it has his sanction, and that that which we are doing and striving to do has his hearty approval. He is blessing us and sustaining us in our efforts to do that which he gave to his children, through the Prophet Joseph Smith, at the beginning of the last century. Nowhere in the world is there a gathering of people comparable with these conference meetings held in Salt Lake City today, and for the next two or three days. Nowhere in the world is there such a gathering of men and women giving their all for the great work of the Master. Nowhere on earth will you find the body of men bearing the Priesthood of the living God, that you find here in Zion, on the occasion of these conferences. The power, the influence, and the spirit of these gatherings, are carried into all the world by the men and women, who come here and attend these meetings.

It is a wonderful thing to know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and to know that, in this day and age, a mighty work has been begun, and that we, the children of our Father, are active in this great work.

I rejoice with you, my brethren and sisters, in the privilege of being here and bearing my testimony. I am grateful for the opportunity of being as helpful as I can, in the work of the Lord. I trust that in coming together we have done so with one thought only, and that is to strengthen ourselves, to build ourselves up, so that when we go back to our homes, to our wards, to our stakes, to our various activities, we will take with us a stronger testimony, and a firmer determination to do the work that God has placed in our hands. We make wonderful claims to the world. In fact, there is no body of religious worshippers making a claim that compares with ours. We stand aloof from all the world, and in our aloofness, we maintain a position that is true or false. If it is true, and we know that it is, we have taken upon ourselves the most tremendous responsibility that any people upon the face of the earth has been called to bear. We declare to the world that with us, in our Church alone, in our organization, is the power of the Priesthood of the living God. We declare to the world that with us alone there rests the right to officiate in the name of Him on high; and, in this declaration, we place before the world something that, sooner or later, it must acknowledge. Individually there is responsibility. We cannot live careless lives, failing to walk uprightly before our heavenly Father, and, at the same time, hope to convince the world of the great claims we make. We make bold declaration in our articles of faith; yet something plain and understandable. We say to the world: "We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in His Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression. We believe that through the atonement of Christ all mankind may be saved; by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel. We believe that these first principles and ordinances are: first, faith in the Lord, Jesus Christ; second, repentance; third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. We believe that a man must be called of God, by prophecy, and by the laying on of hands, by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel, and administer in the ordinances thereof. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church, namely, apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God. We believe all that God has revealed, all that he does now reveal, and we believe that he will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the kingdom of God."

It is that old fashioned religion, which we declare; that religion that God gave in the beginning. It is the plan of salvation to his children. It is the same religion that he has given, time and time again. It is, in fact, the same plan, with the same laws, the same ordinances, the same gifts and blessings, that he gave through his Son, Jesus Christ, when he was here fulfilling his earthly mission. We believe these things, and we declare them to the world. We go forth, giving our time, our means, and sacrificing, that the world may know them. Then, brethren and sisters, with this belief, there rests upon us the responsibility of living so that the world by our lives, and by our fruits, will see that we really do believe the things that we declare, and not only say that we do. Our responsibility is of the greatest, individually and collectively, and we will stand before the judgment seat of our heavenly Father, and we will be judged according to that which we will do. We will be judged according to that which we know. When the time comes that we will be called to stand before the great "white throne," "the books" will be opened, and righteous judgment will be meted out. We will be called to answer for the degree in which we have fulfilled our mission, and done our duty here on the earth.

Your sons and your daughters, your boys and your girls, are going into the world by the hundreds and by the thousands. They are declaring this message. They are working hard. They are sacrificing, they are meeting opposition, they are taking the revilings, and the scoffs, and the scorn of the world. Why? Because they know that this thing is true. Are you, my brethren and sisters, supporting them? Are you back of them with your faith and prayers? Are you sending them words of encouragement? If you are not, you are not doing your part in bearing the responsibility. Are you criticising the priesthood? Are you, in your homes, speaking evil of the men who are called to preside in your ward, in your stake, or in the Church at large? Are you sharing with these men, in the mission field, fully their responsibility? If you are not, then there is room for improvement, and you will be called to answer before the throne of our Father, when the time comes that you shall be judged. I testify to you that, this being a divine work, we dare not do anything, or say anything that will retard its onward progress. It is the work of our heavenly Father, who is God Jesus Christ is his son, and, in this age, he has raised up a prophet to do a great and mighty work, and to you and to me has come the duty of sharing the responsibility of the work. Let us bear it. Let us sustain the authorities of the Church. Let us magnify every calling that comes to us, and live our religion in the home, so that when our boy or our girl goes into the mission field, he or she will go from a home where God has been served, and where his religion has been lived. Then when our boy, on a mission, writes letters home and bears testimony of the joy he has in his labors, our own joy will be greater, and we will feel fully comforted for the sacrifice we make for him, and for the Church.

My brethren and sisters, it is a wonderful thing to hold membership in the Church, and to bear the Priesthood of the living God. Can you conceive of anything more glorious? Why, we may die tomorrow. We will all be called some day; this may be our last. Are our lives right? Have we ordered them and lived them so that if our call should come, we are ready? Can we say we have done our duty?

I rejoice in this privilege of meeting with you. I rejoice in the men that God has placed over us to lead us in this work. I sustain and support them with my whole heart and soul. They are the choicest men of this world today. Their hearts and souls are in this work. Let us be loyal, let us be true; let us remember that this is God's work, and that it will triumph. If we hold fast, we will triumph with it. If we fall aside, we will not be greatly missed, and the Church will go on just the same, but the day will come that we will feel keenly our loss.

May God bless us and preserve us; may he prosper us; may his work roll on; may this great Latter-day gospel be preached to all the world, that no man can say that he has not heard that Jesus is the Christ, and that God has spoken from the heavens, and begun again his mighty work here upon the earth. My testimony is that the gospel is true, that the missionary work will go forward, that mankind will be warned, and that upon you and me rests a responsibility to do our part in bringing to pass God's purposes. May we do our part nobly and well, that we may be worthy of the choice blessings of our Father. God bless you. Amen.

ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

(President of the Central States Mission.)

I sincerely trust that I may enjoy the Spirit of the Lord, and be able to say something that will be for our benefit. One of the great testimonies that comes to me, from time to time, is the presence of so many people who gather at the conferences of the Church in this city many of whom come hundreds of miles to spend a few hours in meeting, listen to the truths that are made plain by men who are appointed to speak; and who, undoubtedly, make a great sacrifice to be present. Those of you who live in this immediate section of the country, I feel never understand fully what it means for men and women to come to conference from great distances. You are not put to much expense. Your homes are here, which can be reached in a few hours or a few moments. But the fact that people travel from the northern end of our country, and from the south, and from all parts, is a wonderful testimony to me; and if it were not for the testimony of Jesus that is found in the hearts of men and women, they would not come. It is the power of our Father made manifest in their souls, that this is the work of the Lord, that this gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and the inspiration that comes to them as individuals prompts them to a high sense of duty. And when one attends to his duty in the highest sense of honor, he is always happy and in a progressive state of mind, and the inspiration of the Almighty is found in him.

This comes through a continual observance of the principles and doctrines of Christ, and through a repentance daily. While much improvement could be made by all of us, yet I believe that the spirit of repentance is felt by the majority of the men and women in this Church, and as they repent, the more the spirit of repentance comes upon them, and they feel their weakness, and their need of living near the Lord, in order to obtain the blessings that are so necessary to last them through the day, or as the days come and go. Paul, upon one occasion, said, "I die daily." And that is true. There were many things that he put out of his life daily, as all men and women do who progress and grow in a knowledge of their Redeemer. And if there ever was a time when repentance needed to be preached or practiced it is at the present time.

It takes a lifetime to repent. We hear of men who repent at the last moment of time on the earth. Not long ago the great newspapers of the country contained an account of a certain individual who had lived a most wicked life; his experiences all testified that he had no reverence for God. But just before his death, his minister met with him in his confession, and "he made peace with his God," repented of his sins. While I have never felt to criticise what was in the heart of that man, who professed to be a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ, the fact is that millions of people read an account of this man's repenting at the last moment of time, and I am quite sure that thousands were impressed with the idea that even at the last minute a man can repent. Such a doctrine never came from the Lord. It is not true, because men do not know that they are absolutely relieved or pardoned for all sin until they have fought the fight which they came into the world to fight, until they have lived, and have made an attempt during their life to overcome. The spirit of repentance must be found in the hearts of men and women continually, and it must be there to keep them not only from the greater things that are wrong, but the lesser things, for it is the little things in life that cause men and women to stumble and fall. A man walking along does not fall over great objects, he goes around them; but the little things, even the small stone or splinter, may upset him, and cause him injury. So it is with troubles in life. Men become influenced by little things that really ought not to enter into their hearts, but which do nevertheless. And people are often led to oppose the work of God until they finally find themselves outside the Church. Men do not go wrong all at once. It takes time.

And so it is with our duties. They cannot be accomplished all at once. It takes time. For who knows how strong he is until he has been tested and tried. This whole life is the time for men to be tested and tried. We are away from home. This is our temporary abode only. We did not have a beginning here. We existed before we came here, and we lived and walked in the presence of an immortal Sire and Mother, and were there taught in the principles of life as revealed in this dispensation through the Prophet Joseph Smith; and as we lived there we were given power to overcome when the time should arrive in which we should be called upon for our reserves. After we had advanced in that life, perhaps as far as we could, we were given, in accordance with our desire, the privilege of coming into this world. And here we are in these bodies of flesh and bones, enjoying full faculties of mind with the laws of God always before us, associating with men and women of righteous desires and also with those of the opposite nature. We find evil as well as good, and men and women are swerved by the things to which they pay attention; one is swerved one way, and another, another. Somethings that would tempt me perhaps may not tempt you at all, and vice versa. And so the fact of the matter is that as we live we grow daily, and if we keep the commandments of the Lord as well as we can, we are always found in a progressive state, and we are in a measure able to say "no" when we ought to, and say "yes" when it is right to do so. But it takes time and study and faith and work and devotion and attention in order to do it.

I believe that men and women ought to commit to memory, so that they would become a part of their lives, the principles of the gospel as they are given unto us from time to time in the pulpits of the Church, and in the revelations of the Lord, both of these last days and of ancient times. I fully believe that the Ten Commandments were not only for ancient Israel, but were given as a guide unto the Children of Israel forever, of which we are a part. That man or woman who becomes better acquainted with the laws of life is less likely to violate them. For instance, that man who has become fully convinced of what it means to violate the law of chastity, when he has been fully converted to the fact that it is wrong and contrary to God's law—when he remembers that the Savior of the world gave to Moses and the Children of Israel this commandment which he wrote with his own finger, that it was as their life and their guide—that man will not be found violating it. The man that has learned in his heart, "Thou shalt not commit adultery," and who cherishes the law and who loves it, will not be swerved by adulterous men and women to crime. So you may take any one of the commandments that the Lord has given, a man will not be found violating them when he has learned to believe in and cherish them. The Sabbath day was a day set apart for men and women to honor, whereon to rest from their daily labors; they were to prepare their food in singleness of heart, even the day before if necessary, they were to feast spiritually, they were to study, they were to go to church and bear testimony, and let that be a part of their lives. Men and women who do this will always be found much richer and better in a spiritual way, they will be more firm in the faith, and more fully established in the gospel of Christ and also in the things of this world, than those who do not. These laws are given, they are within our reach. They are testified of continually by men and women in every part of the Church, the bearing of which testimonies brings the inspiration of God.

We make a great sacrifice, we think, as missionaries. It is true that the man or woman who sends a son or daughter into the world does make a sacrifice in more ways than one. The money they pay out for them is indeed a sacrifice; but if it were not for that sacrifice there would not be the blessings. For there is a great blessing which comes to the individual who answers this call, even one that is not to be measured. I have seen men grow so in missionary work that you would not think them to be the same individuals as before. As Joseph Smith, the prophet, said, some men were called before the world was, called while still they were in the prior estate, and given this privilege, to be ordained and to go into the world as missionaries at certain times, and each one who goes and fills a mission is fulfilling the blessing that was there pronounced upon him.

Further than that, it is the duty of men and women who have learned the truth and who have become obligated to the Lord for the things which he has given to them, to give them unto others, and in the future I believe there will be much room for criticism if we fail to do our duty. Opportunities come to all men, and that man or woman who makes the best of life is the man or woman who succeeds. I tell you, it is wonderful to find men and women who have had the power to resist evil and to stand for the right. It only proves that God is no respecter of persons; but in every country and clime men who respect the Lord are given power to overcome, and when they have overcome, and they have substantially proved that they have overcome, they are not tempted, but they are blest and revered and given privileges that men never know who have not had that experience.

So I say, in conclusion, that the spirit and testimony of Jesus Christ is in the earth; it is borne by the thousands of men and women who live upon the earth, men and women who are in this congregation and others coming from all parts of the country, who are working to-day, testifying to all men that there is a spirit and a vitality in Mormonism that cannot be found in all the world. And this spirit will lead men to repent. That is the great key-note that was given through the Prophet Joseph Smith, that men must repent and prove themselves to the Lord, and honor him and keep his commandments. It takes time, and cannot be done at the last moment before the death of any individual, no matter what men may preach or declare. Such doctrine never came from the Lord, nor is it reasonable or true. The spirit of testimony is what brings about the spirit of repentance, and correct living only clinches it and proves it to be true; and when men find out this truth it enables them to do what they were intended to do.

May the Lord help us, that we may not be swerved by fear or by things that may be wrong, great or small, but may so live that we may correct things that go wrong and set men and women straight, and at the same time set ourselves straight; that we may have the testimony of Jesus, and may be able to declare and know that Joseph Smith was called to be a Prophet of God, and that he was selected to be a leader of men that he, indeed, received a visitation from the Father and the Son, that he heard them and saw them, and that he died for his testimony. May we live according to the truth that the Lord has revealed, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER J. N. LAMBERT

(Associated with the Bureau of Information.)

I am happy to add my testimony to those already borne in your hearing this morning, by those who have preceded me, for I have a testimony that this work is the work of the Lord.

While President Winslow F. Smith was speaking, and reminding us that something over one hundred years had elapsed since the Prophet Joseph received his manifestation in the visit of the Father and the Son, my mind ran back to what has been accomplished since our people reached these valleys. It was my privilege, some years ago, to go back and visit a number of places where the Saints formerly lived, in Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, New York and Vermont. Previous to this visit, I had indulged somewhat in a feeling not altogether wholesome toward the people of Illinois. My grand-parents with other Saints had been driven from that state, and I felt they had not had justice, and that if the time ever came, perhaps, that I could do something to the people who lived there for the treatment they had given to my grand-parents, I would have been happy in doing so; but the visit I made took that unholy feeling out of me. When I visited Nauvoo, and thought of what it had been at one time, with a population of upward of twenty thousand people, with a hum of industry on every hand, and to see what it was then, with but a few over a thousand souls, and more like a country village, I could not help but think the Lord had withheld his blessings from that people and from that land, and I came back with a different kind of spirit from that which I had when I left home.

I then thanked the Lord that my grand-parents, with the other Saints, had been driven out from that place, and that they had found a better place to live in. I then appreciated more than ever before the inspired words of Brigham Young, when he said upon arriving in this valley, "This is the place." There was no mistake made on the part of the Lord in bringing our people to this land. Great as is the state of Illinois, with its wonderful acres and their great production, I believe that within the confines of this commonwealth, together with the state of Idaho and other surrounding states in which our people are now living, there are far greater and better conditions of productiveness, reserved by the Lord for the people who are now living here, than ever could have been found in Illinois.

The Lord did not make a mistake in leading President Young and our people here, in the year 1847, notwithstanding, that such men as Col. Bridger and others tried to persuade them that this was not a fit place of habitation for men, that crops could not be matured here, and suggested that we need not attempt to make a home here. That has all been set at naught by what has been accomplished by those who settled here. Compare the wisdom of such advice as that of Col. Bridger, to the inspiration of President Young. No doubt in his prophetic eye he could see what our people would some day accomplish.

We have people coming here as tourists, to this block, who come here, you might say, to scoff, and literally remain to pray; people who have no idea, no desire even to affiliate with us, or to indulge in the faith that is so dear to us, and yet after being told the story of "Mormonism," and what has been accomplished by our people, and seeing it for themselves, have gone away and marveled at what we have done.

I remember President Roosevelt coming here in the year 1903; when over in the tabernacle he said, "I pay my respects to the early 'Mormon' Pioneers, who came here to this great American desert, and made it literally to blossom as the rose."

You remember when President Brigham Young came here and said, "We will settle here," that there were some in that first company who thought a mistake had been made. They had seen other spots that were more inviting to the eye, than what presented itself when they first saw this valley; they were willing to take chances on what lay between here and the Pacific ocean, and so expressed themselves, but President Young, said, "This is the place;" and when reminded that this was a desert, said, "We will make it blossom like a rose." Years afterwards President Roosevelt, holding the highest position in the gift of the people of this great country, the United States, gave testimony of the wonderful wisdom and prophetic utterance of President Brigham Young. Surely the Lord made no mistake in leading us here.

The Lord established his Church and kingdom here upon the earth for a purpose. We have been privileged to become members of the same, and ought to appreciate our standing and membership in the Church. I wonder sometimes if we really do appreciate such a blessing. If not, and we need to repent or adjust ourselves so that we can more fully appreciate our standing, we should do so.

If we are not in harmony with the commandments of God, if we cannot purge from our beings whatever is unholy, whatever is not consistent with the mind and will of the Lord, and live consistently with the Spirit of the Lord, which will lead into all truth, then we are not Saints in very deed.

On the other hand, if we can order and so conduct our lives as to conform to the requirements of the Lord, keeping the commandments and laws of the gospel, our influence and power cannot be measured. Such unity cannot be hidden. Do you not think, then, that our influence will be felt all over the earth? Why certainly. Ask these mission presidents, who are sitting here, and who can testify of what they hear men say about the work being done in a missionary way by the Bureau of Information. They can tell you of hearing men say how they have been impressed with what they have seen and heard while here, and they have gone away to tell it to their friends, and to urge them to come and see for themselves.

The positive stand that we have taken as a people on education, morality, clean living, and other things that have put us in a class by ourselves, is now being brought to the attention of the world, and people are beginning to better appreciate us. Our stand on these things ought to be of a most positive kind, however.

I remember a man I knew, when I was a little boy. I was impressed with his goodness, and I remarked to my father, "Brother So-and-so, is a pretty good man, isn't he?" and my father said, "Yes; but what is he good for?" And then he went on to impress me that we must be good for something, not good for nothing. As I look back now, I cannot remember anything that this man did that was positively good. Now we want to be good for something. We want to be positively good, not negatively good. We want to be so good that other people will appreciate us; for we are told that the time will come when people will know us as we are known, when they will know us as we should be known. And yet, I almost fear the time when all people will begin to say good things about us.

I remember the admonition of the Savior, when he said that, we should take care when a time like that should arise, and that we should rejoice and be exceedingly glad when people would speak evil against us, falsely. But beware when people begin to prate about our good points. I believe, however, that the time is past, long since, when people want to believe something that is not true. I believe the time is past when people should ask, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Now they are wont to say, "I am my brother's keeper."

The movement that has grown up among the Rotary, Progressive, and other clubs, that we are brothers, the Big Brother and the Big Sister idea, and which has spread to nearly all parts of the world, is a sign that the people of the world are looking out for one another rather than, as it has been in the past, each for himself.

My testimony to you is that the Lord is at the helm and will guide us through trouble and storm. He is not going to desert his people. My testimony is that Joseph Smith was a prophet; that his legal successors have been prophets. Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith and Heber J. Grant, have been sent by the Almighty for a purpose; the Lord has blessed them with prophetic vision, and with the power to discern and tell the people the things that they should know. He has given to this people a mouthpiece, that we may know when to go and where to go, when to do and when not to do things; that if we find we are not doing the things we should do, that we should repent, and repent sincerely; that we should get in line and remain in line, not set up our judgment against our leaders, or against the rule or direction of the Church.

There have been men, I regret to say, who have had the audacity to say that they have known certain things to be the mind of the Lord, when they have not been in accord with the Church. I cannot think that such a man is going to be prospered, or is going to have the Spirit of the Lord to be with him. The Lord may be with him. The Lord may be long-suffering and patient, considering that such a man might see the error of his way and repent; but in the long run that man, unless he repents, is going to fall. The Spirit of the Lord will not always strive with man, and oh, what darkness when he is left dependent on himself.

This morning, I stood at the tabernacle door. A man came along. I asked him, "What is your position in the Church?" I knew the man, and I knew he had been doing some things that I did not think would entitle him to come to a certain place that had been reserved for those holding certain positions in the Priesthood. He said, "I am an old man, and for the first time in my life I am without a position." Just think of it, after a man is almost ready to go down into his grave, he is stripped of the Priesthood of the Almighty, and he is without a position in the Priesthood, in the Church of God! Do you want to be in a position that will compel you to make such a confession as that? God grant that the time will never come when any of us will have to give such an answer.

May the Lord ever bless and assist us in our faith; may he encourage us to keep the commandments of the Lord, that we may be able to hold fast to the Iron Rod, which will bring us back into his presence, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

(President of the Southern States Mission.)

I humbly pray that I may speak under the power of the Holy Ghost, for only by that power can the servants of God reach the hearts of the children of men. The missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in preaching the everlasting gospel, have this thought in their hearts, which they express in their testimonies and in their discourses; namely, "Friend, go up higher," for that is the effect of the gospel, in the lives of men. It lifts them up higher, for it is the "power of God unto salvation." The Latter-day Saints are blessed with gospel ideals. We are a people with ideals. Jesus said, "Ye are the light of the world," and he also said, "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." And by obedience to the gospel teachings we desire to be a light unto the world; we are a light unto the world; and we are, in a measure, at least, letting "our light so shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven."

We believe in the gift of healing; we cherish that as one of the most precious blessings that our Father has given to his children in the household of faith. James says, in the 5th chapter of his epistle: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the Church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; And the prayer of faith shall save the sick." You and I bear testimony, that the power of the Father is in this Church, and our loved ones who are afflicted are raised up by his power, to his glory and to the magnifying of his holy name.

A few weeks ago, in the city of Atlanta, the Episcopal Church organized an association, the purpose of which is "to visit the sick and pray over them;" and the dean of that church, in a sermon, declared that the gift of healing was once a gift in the church, that the Redeemer and his apostles preached it and practiced it, and he said, "we must restore it." The dean continued, "the religion that does not care for a man's body as well as his soul is a ghastly joke." Is not this a testimony that Joseph Smith was a restorer of the ancient faith? And it was restored in God's way. John, the apostle, said: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred and tongue and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him for the hour of his judgment is come." That is the way the gospel was restored, by a holy angel, in accordance with the mind and will of the Creator. Did not Paul say, "For I neither received it [the gospel] of man, neither was I taught it but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." And by the revelation of the Redeemer, the Prophet Joseph Smith received this gospel. By the power of the Highest he restored it to the children of men.

No man could have restored this gospel. It is a heavenly gift; it came from heaven, and you and I bear testimony that, from the courts of glory this plan of life and salvation did come.

The Latter-day Saints are expressing their love for the gospel in service. There are thousands of men and women in this Church who are not on the "firing line," in the mission field, but who nevertheless are doing a splendid work. "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war."

In this assembly hall, a few months ago, I was talking to a good sister who has a son on a mission in the Southern States. I said, "how many children have you?" "Seventeen," she replied, "but we have never been blessed with any children of our own." I said, "Sister, will you please make this more clear to me, and this is the substance of that good woman's reply: "We have never had any children of our own. We took four babies, three girls and one boy, when they were twenty-four hours old to six days old, adopted and reared them. The boy filled a mission. We reared a little girl of seven; she is adopted to us. She has filled a mission. We emigrated from Germany two boys and their sister. The boy stayed with us ten years, the girl until she was married. One of the boys filled a mission; we helped him to fill it. For five years we cared for three little boys whose ages ranged from 4 to 7 years. We took two boys, one was 7, the other 8; they stayed with us nine years. One of them served in the war. We have four orphans now at our home, two girls 12 to 15 years old, two boys, one 13, the other 10. I took the ten-year old boy when he was a year old. We have emigrated 15 children from the old country. For several years we have kept three children, from Switzerland. We don't want to stop the good work of taking orphans to bring up." There is a story of service. This woman's name may not be written in the book of fame, kept by mortal man, but in heaven angels have recorded her name. She is among those who are saving souls, who are helping young people to find their way through the temptations and tribulations of life into the salvation that God our heavenly Father hath in store for them.

Two weeks ago, I was holding conference in Mississippi, not far from New Orleans. We had no church to meet in, so we met in the shade of the trees, because it is warm in that climate, about this time of the year. Why did we meet in the open air? Because in that settlement mobocrats have burned down two of our churches. But some of the very men who instigated this outrage, and who assisted in the destruction of our humble places of worship have asked to be allowed to donate toward the building of another house, in which the Latter-day Saints there may meet for the worship of God. God has softened the hearts of the people. Your sons and your daughters are preaching the gospel in the power of the spirit of testimony, for only in the spirit of testimony can this gospel be preached in a manner to reach the hearts of the people. Day unto day brings forth testimony, that this gospel is the work of the Lord, day unto day brings forth testimony that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of God, the instrument in the hands of Deity to establish this glorious work which bids men to go higher up, lifts men up, which purifies their nature through the spirit of repentance, by the gift of repentance, from evil and wrong doing.

And now, with you, my brethren and sisters, with my brethren who have preceded me this morning, I bear my testimony that the Redeemer lives, and that he shall stand upon the earth in the latter-day; that he will come in glory to reign on earth with his Saints a thousand years. And I bear my humble testimony that the Book of Mormon has been brought forth to testify, among other things, that Jesus is the Christ, that he was resurrected, and that all men will be resurrected.

I also bear you my testimony that President Heber J. Grant is a servant of the Lord, his mouthpiece to his people, a man of honor, a man in whom we can depend, for he is led by the Spirit and power of God. This testimony I fearlessly bear, for I know that these things are true. May the Lord bless us all, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang, "O worship him."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Parley Bennion.

SECOND OVERFLOW MEETING

A second overflow meeting was held outdoors, near the Bureau of Information, at 10 o'clock, Sunday morning, April 3, 1921.

Elder John M. Knight, President of the Western States Mission, presided, and called the congregation to order.

Singing was furnished by the congregation under the direction of Elder C. S. Martin. The congregation sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

Prayer was offered by Bishop A. T. Shurtliff, of Wandamere ward, Granite stake.

The congregation sang, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord."

ELDER HEBER C. IVERSON

(President of the Northwestern States Mission.)

I rejoice, my brothers and sisters, in the opportunity of meeting again in conference with the Saints of the Lord. To me there is nothing sweeter than "communion with Saints." I rejoice in the spirit of the great work in which we are engaged, and am reminded that just a little more than two years ago I received a letter over the signature of President Heber J. Grant wherein was contained the information that I had been selected to preside over the Northwestern States Mission; also these inspiring words, the spirit of which is in my soul, and I thank the Lord therefor, and trust that this spirit shall never become dim, but every hour be brighter and brighter, so long as life shall last:

"Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; for, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him. And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him, on conditions of repentance; and how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth. Wherefore, you are called to cry repentance unto this people: arise; if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father? And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me?"

Another revelation of the Lord, containing the same spirit and sentiment was given to John Whitmer, through Joseph, the Seer, in Fayette, Seneca county, New York, June, 1829:

"Hearken, my servant John, and listen to the words of Jesus Christ, your Lord and your Redeemer, for behold, I speak unto you with sharpness and with power, for mine arm is over all the earth, and I will tell you that which no man knoweth save me and thee alone, for many times you have desired of me to know that which would be of the most worth unto you. Behold, blessed are you for this thing, and for speaking my words which I have given you according to my commandments. And now, behold, I say unto you, that the thing which will be of the most worth unto you, will be to declare repentance unto this people, that you may bring souls unto me, that you may rest with them in the kingdom of my Father. Amen."

No greater work was ever entrusted to men than to cry repentance, and labor for the salvation of souls in the kingdom of God. Upon me as an individual, a preacher of repentance, lies the responsibility of directing the labors of 180 missionaries, among them the sweetest and most beautiful young men and young women in all the world; and I assure you that keenly do I sense it, and sincerely do I pray that the spirit of this calling—important above all others that come to men in the world—shall be mine. My great task has been to know, as I instruct those young men and young women, that which is better than any other thing, to possess; that more than all else which will qualify them to make of them efficient servants and preachers of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In Paul's instructions to the Corinthian Saints, declaring his own power and the source thereof, he recognized that it was not in his profound learning (for he sat at the feet of Gamaliel; and among the philosophers and learned men of his day he stood foremost), but from some other Power, the source of which he has indicated most unmistakably in his Epistle to the Corinthians, from which I desire to read a few words.

In II Corinthians, 12, he speaks of the wonderful manifestations of God, the revelation of Jesus Christ, who appeared to him while on the way to Damascus, to bring bound the Saints that he was persecuting. The Lord said, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" and in answer Paul said, "Who art thou, Lord?" and the Lord said, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest;" and Paul replied, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" In this wonderful revelation he was caught up into the third heaven where he beheld indescribable glories and heard things which he said were not meet for men to utter; yet he affirmed that not upon these did he depend for the strength of his testimony and the power of his ministry, for, said he:

"And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness."

The Lord would have Paul know that in the humility of his heart, the sincerity of his soul, and in the recognition of God, lay the source of his power, wherein he should find great strength, and not in the wisdom of man. This was also indicated in a previous declaration to the Corinthian Saints, wherein Paul said:

"And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

When I read these words, I think of that most wonderful and successful of all converters of souls in this latter dispensation—aye, I believe of any dispensation of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the humble, unlearned Wilford Woodruff, who taught, converted and baptized by the power of God, nigh unto two thousand souls—a record, I believe, that is not equalled by any other servant of the Lord in any age of the world. This he accomplished, not with the wisdom of man or the philosophy of the sage, but by the power and Spirit of Almighty God, which possessed his innocent and humble soul. Continuing, Paul declared:

"But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory: which none of the princes of this world knew; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory."

(And they who crucified the Lord of glory were not the ignorant men of the world; they were those who stood in high places and occupied positions in the courts of kings and royalty; they were the learned men of the world who crucified the Lord of glory.) Paul further says:

"But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.

"Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man."

And as I read the 12th and 13th verses of this chapter, I think of another illustrious example of the inspiration of the Almighty, manifest in one of his chosen servants:

"Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual."

Of Joseph F. Smith, our late revered prophet and leader, it has been said, by one who speaks with understanding and from personal knowledge, that Prest. Smith never prepared in his life a sermon. This man who traveled with him in Europe, on the isles of the sea, and through the stakes of Zion, year after year, thousands upon thousands of miles, and heard him deliver hundreds and thousands of sermons, asserts that he never heard Prest. Smith deliver two sermons of which it could be said, "this sermon reminds me of another one I heard him deliver." To me that is a marvelous testimony to the divinity of the calling and inspiration of the man, for such achievement is not humanly possible. Human intelligence has its limitations. But the intelligence and inspiration of the Almighty are infinite; and the man who is in touch therewith, inspired thereby, has no limits, and can preach sermons day after day, year after year, under the inspiration of the Spirit of the Almighty, and never repeat. But when men prepare their sermons, and by worldly wisdom hope to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ, and glorify themselves, then they are not possessed of this unlimited, irresistible power which finds lodgment in the souls of honest men. Wherein, then, lies this wonderful power? What is the character of it? That is the question that should concern every mission president, and every teacher of righteousness, and preacher of the gospel of Jesus Christ. You remember what Paul says in the 13th Chapter of First Corinthians:

"Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing."

In comparison with this wonderful power, charity or love—these accomplishments here mentioned pale into insignificance. Qualified, and endowed with these rare gifts we naturally conclude, one must of necessity be a most powerful preacher; he can speak with the tongues of men and the eloquence of angels; he understands all mysteries, and has all knowledge and faith so that he could remove mountains. But he lacks one thing, and that is the vitalizing force which is the secret of his power. And what is that? It is that supreme love which the Savior describes in the following words:

"Except a man is willing to leave father and mother, houses and lands, wives and children, and all for my sake and the gospel's, he is unworthy of me."

It is that love of God, which overshadows and transcends the love of everything else in the world whether it be personal glory and honor, wealth or fame. It matters not what it may be, there is no love in his heart equaling his love of God. That is the source of his power; and possessed of that, his words are irresistible, and his power will rebound to the honor and glory of God and the salvation of his children —which power may God endow us with, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER NEPHI JENSEN

(President of the Canadian Mission.)

My brothers and sisters: I sincerely pray in my heart that I shall have strength of mind and body to speak to you a few moments this morning. I have found it to be a very taxing ordeal to speak in the open air to a large congregation.

With President Iverson, who has just spoken to you, I too rejoice in the privilege of meeting with you in this general conference of the Church. With all the power of my soul I rejoice in the knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I know it is the power of God unto salvation. There is nothing in the realm of things knowable for which I am so deeply grateful as I am for my knowledge of the divinity of God's great latter-day work. I do know that the God of heaven, with his own hands laid the foundation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I know that the Spirit of the Almighty has inspired the hearts and the minds of those who have built the superstructure of this Kingdom of our God. I know that this Church is endowed with the Priesthood, the authority of Almighty God. I know that this Church is the depository of the riches of God's wisdom and his knowledge.

I rejoice in the knowledge that the great achievements of this great people are coming to be known among the children of men. The day is past and gone when men can speak evil of this people and escape rebuke. There are men and women in every center of population today who know of the splendid achievements of the Latter-day Saints. These men and women are brave enough and true enough to speak in defense of the truest and noblest people in this world.

I have had occasion frequently, in the cities of eastern Canada, to tell the people that the Latter-day Saints, inspired by the power of their noble religion, have established in the world, the highest civilization known to modern man. That is a bold statement to make about a people, but the statement is just as true as it is bold.

What is the first essential to civilization? What is the first essential to the highest wellbeing of humankind? It is good health and clean blood. The statistics of the United States tell us that during the year 1920, 101 babies out of a thousand in the United States died before they became a year old. These same statistics tell us that in Utah only 64 babies out of a thousand died before they became a year old. What do these figures mean? They mean that the Latter-day Saints have clean blood in their veins. These figures mean that Latter-day Saint fathers and mothers live moral and wholesome lives.

What is the next essential to the highest civilization? It is the common prosperity. I use the expression the "common prosperity" advisedly, because a people who are partly rich and mainly poor cannot attain to anything great in moral or civic progress. What do the facts show concerning the common prosperity of our people? On the 29th day of January, 1921, the Country Gentleman, one of the leading farmers' magazines of the United States, carried the statement that Utah should be known as the "home-owner's state." And this statement was followed by the further statement that out of 62,662 farms in the state of Utah, seven-eighths of them were owned by the men who operated them. What do these figures mean? They mean that our people have made the greatest progress in material prosperity of any people in the world.

What is the next mark of a highly civilized people? It is education. On the 23rd day of July, 1920, the Toronto Evening Telegram, one of the largest papers published in the Dominion of Canada, published a statement quoted from Dr. E. A. Winship, one of the greatest educators in the United States, in which Dr. Winship said, "No state is within hailing distance of Utah in an efficient attempt to solve the civic, industrial, and moral problems of the education of the youth from 12 to 18 years." You will notice that he says that no state is within hailing distance of Utah. He does not say that our state is almost on a par with other states in education; he tells us that no state ranks with us in an efficient attempt to provide for the education of the youth.

What is the next mark of a highly civilized people? The next essential is morality. Theodore Roosevelt, that grand man, whose name has rung around the world, in an article published in Colliers Magazine, in February, 1911, said, "Indeed among these 'Mormons' the standard of sexual morality was unusually high; they were better than their neighbors."

What is the next mark of a highly civilized people? It is spirituality—that quality of which President Iverson has spoken so fervently this morning. How do the Latter-day Saints rank in spirituality? In April, 1920, Colonel William Jennings Bryan sat in the great tabernacle, over there at one of the sessions of that conference, within three feet of the mission presidents, and listened to the sermons of the leading men of this Church. At the conclusion of that session of the conference, he made an informal talk, in which he said, "I have never witnessed such religious fervor in all my life before."

Here we have a people who have the five leading marks of a great people. They are a healthy people, they are a prosperous people, an educated people, a moral people, a spiritual-minded people. I tell you, this people is God's people. With all my heart I thank my God for membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and with all my strength I pray for power to do my part in making known to the world the great things which God has wrought in our day and time.

My brothers and my sisters, let us remember our heritage of power, of truth, our heritage of inspiration of faith. If we will remember these things, we shall rise and shine and be the glory of all mankind—which may God grant, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER REY L. PRATT

I trust, my brethren and sisters, that I may be able to make myself heard, and that I may enjoy the Spirit of the Lord and be able to say something this morning that will encourage us in living our religion.

It is truly an inspiring sight to see this vast congregation gathered together here, and to know that our great Tabernacle is filled to overflowing, and also the Assembly Hall, and that these people have gathered together for the purpose of worshipping the Lord and of hearing his word. To me it is an evidence that there is burning within the hearts of this people a testimony of the divinity of this great latter-day work. To me it is an evidence that they are desirous of growth and development in the Lord's work, that they desire to become a better people, that they desire to learn more of his will and of his purposes; and I take it, my brethren and sisters, that it is with a desire that they might also extend this great knowledge to our Father's children, wherever they may be—because upon us devolves the responsibility of carrying the gospel to the nations of the earth and to people everywhere.

As President Iverson was speaking this morning of the great missionary work being done, I was reminded of the words of the Savior, his commission given unto his disciples, when he appeared unto them after his resurrection:

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

It seems to me, my brethren and sisters, that inasmuch as this is the same gospel, established by our Savior, and that the same authority held by those unto whom he gave this commission is held by the Church today, through its membership, that the call is to us today; and I say unto you, my brethren and sisters, that we have resting upon us the responsibility to go into all the world and to preach the gospel unto every creature, for it is indeed the power of God unto salvation unto all who will believe. And how can a man believe a thing that he has not heard? and how can he hear, save someone be sent to teach it unto him?

The preachers have preached ever since the Reformation, but religious thought throughout the world has not been particularly improved. Divisions have continued to occur. We hear today the thoughts expressed of a uniting of the religious world; but, my brethren and sisters, men cannot unite in the true Church of God if they have it not. We have been told here this morning that we are perhaps a distinct people, a people better than other people; I want to tell you the reason of it is that we have the truth, we have the gospel, and we have restored to earth again the power of God to speak in his name, and I say, Woe would be unto us, if we were not different; woe unto us, if we were not distinct, and if our righteousness—as the Savior said to his disciples—were not better and greater than the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, or the righteousness of the world, we could not in any way inherit the Kingdom of our Father in heaven.

Brethren and sisters, represented here among the speakers this day are missionaries extending their labors and their activities from the provinces of Canada to the boundary line of southern Mexico, down to Guatemala. Under their direction are laboring hundreds of young men who have responded to this call. I am thankful to the Lord that I have been counted worthy to be associated with them and to labor with them; and, as one who knows, because your sons have been under my care, I want to report to you that your sons are acquitting themselves admirably and nobly in the mission field. They are men on the day after they arrive there, although they come into the mission field many of them boys of 18, 19 and 20 years of age. They are told, when they come into the mission field, to be men, and they respond, and they seek for the Spirit of the Lord, to assist them in their labors, and they are able (though not at first from the standpoint of the wisdom of the world, not being educated in seminaries of learning particularly along the lines of religious thought), by the inspiration of the Spirit of the Lord which they enjoy, and by the power of the holy Priesthood which they have, to confound the wisdom of the wise.

I recall just now how our boys, in a foreign tongue, on the streets of the great city of San Antonio, many times have been able to congregate as many people in the streets as stand before us here today, telling their message of salvation unto the people. And they are not left alone, but they are heckled and they are contested by the preachers of the day—they are boys just come from the farms and from the workshops and from the vocations in life from which our boys go into the mission field, but by the power of the Lord, and his help and assistance that come to them, they have been able always to come off victorious in any contest that they have had in that city. And the same is true, I am sure, wherever our boys go. You have reason, my brethren and sisters, to be proud of them.

We know the very great sacrifices that the fathers and mothers are making in these times to support their boys in the mission field, but I will say to you, my brethren and sisters, you could not invest your means to a better advantage than by supporting them there, and I wish to bespeak for them your support by way of encouragement—not sympathy, for the boys are well off, they are well taken care of, the Lord is their helper and he raises up friends to them, and if they betimes fast a day or two, it is only for their good; they are all in good health, they are in good condition, and they do not need your sympathy along that line. What they need is your support, what they need are letters from home encouraging them to do their part, to give their all to the service of the Lord; to remember this, that they must love him with all their hearts, with all their minds, with all their might, and with all their strength, and that next to that they must love their neighbors as themselves.

And who are our neighbors in the world? I say to you, we are all neighbors, we are all brethren, we are all children of the same great heavenly Father, and we should manifest our love for our brethren in the world by taking to them that greatest of all gifts, which is the gospel, the power of God, by which they may be saved. Our mission is not particularly to any one people, or to any one race, but, as I have read to you now, and as I could read many other passages, which show you that the gospel is to be preached to all nations as a witness, and to every creature, everywhere. The saving powers of the gospel are manifest among one people just as much as they are manifest among another people, if those people strive to live in harmony with the gospel teachings.

It has been my great privilege, my brethren and sisters, after the tempestuous times that Mexico has passed through for the past ten years, and after we have had to withdraw our missionaries, and our brethren, natives of that land, have been left for many years almost isolated from the Church, it has been my privilege, and I thank the Lord for it, to have returned last month, with twelve of your boys, and to have picked up again the broken threads of the work in that land; and if I could express to you as I felt it, and your boys felt it, the happiness that came to those people upon our return, I am sure, my brethren and sisters, those of you who have sons among that people would be grateful to the Lord that they are the instruments in carrying such joy and such happiness back to that people.

And I would speak a word in praise of our brethren and sisters in that far-off land; for, notwithstanding the fact that they have been alone for ten years, we found their branches perfectly manned, the Priesthood had been left with them. That is the thought I should like to leave. Although the missionaries from Zion had been withdrawn, the Priesthood of the Lord had been committed to those people, and their own people had been ordained elders and set apart as branch presidents, and not for one single day had they forgotten their obligations to the Lord. They are living their religion, they are teaching it to their neighbors, and many are being brought into the Church through the efficient labors of our native brethren in that far-off land, and they are living as near as may be in harmony with the principles of the gospel.

I am thankful to the Lord for the intergity of those people. I would just like to quote to you what one of our native brethren said in a fast meeting, not long ago, in El Paso. He was a young man who served as a missionary there some ten years ago, a very efficient missionary, too, and someone was saying how bad it was that we had all been called away from the mission down there, and that perhaps things would go badly because the elders from Zion were not there. He said, "I thank the Lord that the Priesthood has been given to my people, and that that Priesthood will never again be taken away from them; and with that Priesthood, men will be raised up among them to carry on the work." And I testify to you, my brethren and sisters, that we have seen a demonstration of the truthfulness of the testimony of that young man concerning the Priesthood, as it is operating among the people of Mexico.

I am thankful to the Lord for the integrity of those people. I went into the mission field as a very young man, and I have been in the missionary field ever since. I am not very old, but I remember that I am getting a little older all the time, and that many years have passed over my head during the time that I have been associated with the missionary work in that land. I do not begrudge a single hour, nor one single penny nor labor, nor regret one single affliction that has come to me; but I deem it a privilege and a great blessing that the Lord has bestowed upon me in permitting me to go out and lift my voice in defense of the truth among the children of men.

I feel weighing upon me greater today than I ever have in all my life, the responsibility of going into all the world to preach the gospel to every creature. I tell you, my brethren and sisters, this must be done. We have witnessed signs that bespeak the coming of the Redeemer of the world, through wars and rumors of wars and through pestilences; but I recall also his prophetic words which he said, "This gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world, as a witness to all men, and then shall the end come." That responsibility still weighs heavily upon us, my brethren and sisters. O, what a responsibility to know that we have within our hands that power that can save men, and what a responsible position we will be in if we do not do all that is within our power to take this and give it unto those who have it not, who are in the world!

I pray that the blessings of the Lord may rest upon you. I pray that you may be prospered. O, how I pray for the parents of those boys who are struggling in poverty to fulfil their missions! I hope that means will come to you, and that you will be able to maintain your boys. Do it, if you possibly can. I know that no greater blessing can come to you than the privilege of sacrificing in that way.

And the blessings of heaven, remember, after all, come through sacrifice, and we must be tested, and we must be tried. Support your boys, encourage them to stay. We encourage them to be frugal, we encourage them not to spend your means unnecessarily, and we wish your support in every way, my brethren and sisters. And I believe we have it. I know that you have trying times at home. Many times have I talked with missionaries in our particular mission who are cramped for means, and my heart goes out to their mothers and fathers, or to those who are supporting them. I know what they are passing through; and if reward comes to those who proclaim the gospel, so also will reward come to those who support them while they are there. May the Lord bless you, is my prayer in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The congregation sang, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

ELDER JOHN M. KNIGHT

(President of the Western States Mission.)

Sincerely do I pray for the spirit of this occasion. Like my brethren, who have spoken, I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for I realize it is the power of God unto salvation unto all those who obey it. I have felt all my life that I need make no apology for my religion. We have nothing to be ashamed of and court the fullest and freest investigation of all its principles and practices. The world, with all its strife, turmoil, bitterness and confusion, needs the gospel of Christ to bring peace again to the earth, and I am happy to play my little part in testifying to the restoration of that gospel, in this dispensation, through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith. I have felt in my heart of hearts that we have a definite message for the world, and that the world is in need of that message. While Elder Jensen was speaking I remembered the words of Josiah Quincy, who visited the Prophet Joseph Smith just forty-four days prior to his martyrdom at Carthage, Illinois, and published in his Figures of the Past, this:

"It is by no means improbable that some future text book, for the use of generations yet unborn, will contain a question something like this: What historical American of the 19th century has exerted the most powerful influence upon the destiny of his countrymen? It is by no means impossible that the answer to that interrogatory may be thus written; Joseph Smith, the 'Mormon' Prophet. And the reply, absurd as it doubtless seems to most men now living, may be an obvious commonplace to their descendants. History abounds in surprises and paradoxes quite as startling as this. The man who established a religion in this age of free debate, who was, and is today, accepted by hundreds of thousands as a direct emissary from the Most High—such a rare human being is not to be disposed of by pelting his memory with unsavory epithets. Fanatic, impostor, charlatan, he may have been, but those hard names, furnish no solution to the problems he presents to us. Fanatics and impostors are living and dying every day, and their memory is buried with them; but the wonderful influence which this founder of religion exerted and still exerts, throws him into relief before us, not as a rogue to be criminated, but as a phenomenon to be explained. The vital questions Americans are asking one another today have to do with this man and with what he has left us."

Such a text book has not yet been written, but the vital questions the world is asking today, have to do with this thing called "Mormonism." It is becoming a real nightmare to some of them, but the vile epithets they hurl are hurting it not at all. Its power and influence are being extended in every part of the land, thinking men and women are listening to the testimony of the servants of God, a knowledge of its great truths is coming into their lives, and some of the very best among them are yielding obedience to its principles. The promise made by the Redeemer of the world to those who accept the gospel and obey its teachings, namely:

"My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." John 7:16-17; is being realized. They are sure it is true, and that it is the power of God unto salvation. I was reading, a few days ago, an article that appeared in the Denver Post, one of the leading newspapers of the western states, entitled, "The Churches Have Failed to Find the True God," "Religion Has Succeeded in Creating Everything but Real Deity." Alfred W. Martin, associate leader of the Society of Ethical Culture, addressing a New York audience, according to the New York World, has this to say:

"The spectacle of leading representatives of Hinduism, Buddhism, Christianity, and the rest, each claiming that his religion will be the religion of the future, makes the claim ridiculous and absurd. No less absurd would be the claim that the ethical movement, with its inadequate name and its deepest religious issues not yet fully worked out, will hold the future. Rather is the ethical movement an instrument for finding a satisfying religion. In the search for it the movement originated forty-five years ago, and it is still searching. The most that can rightly be claimed for it is that it will make important contributions to the religion of the future, notably by its doctrine of morality. A futile and thankless task it would be to attempt a description of the religion of the future. Of this much, however, we may feel certain, namely, that the religion of the future will not be either the Ethical Culture Movement as we know it today, nor any of the existing religions."

I do not know if Mr. Martin is acquainted with the Church of Jesus Christ, commonly called "Mormon," but I want to bear testimony that this is the one Church that will hold the future, with its adequate name, "The Church of Jesus Christ," with all its fundamental and deepest religious issues, principles, and doctrines fully worked out by its author, Jesus of Nazareth, and stated in definite, positive, concrete terms by the Prophet Joseph Smith, the leaders of the Church, and the elders who are promulgating its truths in the world; and is the one gospel that removes doubt, fear and anxiety, and brings the satisfying feeling of peace, joy and contentment to the soul. I am happy to know we are not classed, as a rule, among the so-called Christian churches; that we are not apostate from the Catholic church, nor a product of the great reformation. Our bitterest enemies and severest critics have never accused us of coming from either source. We stand out in bold relief before the world, as the one church claiming to be the Church of Jesus Christ, and of receiving our authority and appointment to preach the gospel from the Foundation of all Truth. Resurrected beings having visited the earth and conferred upon Joseph Smith the holy Priesthood, which gave him the right to organize the Church of Christ in the earth, which he did, April 6, 1830. I want to leave my testimony with you that the church of the future will be the Church organized by the Prophet Joseph Smith, in the dispensation in which we live, and that it will go forward in power and might until it shall accomplish its mission and destiny in the earth. That mission and destiny is to preach the gospel of repentance and bear witness of the life and ministry of the Son of God.

I want to read another item that appeared in the same paper on the same day. It is from Rabbi Louis J. Kopal, of Buffalo, New York, speaking of the mockery of present-day religion, he said:

"The mockery of present-day religion is the pathetic feat that we seem not to be profiting from the experiences of the centuries, that we seem not to heed the lesson of how and why religion failed to prevent the world war, but rather are slumping back into the smug and fruitless religious life of pre-war days. The war evidenced the fact that religion had succeeded in creating everything but God. All the peoples of the earth have sought to find God, but they have each and every one failed. The way of the Jew has failed, the way of the Christian has failed, the way of the Catholic has failed, the way of the Protestant has failed. They have failed and failed ignobly, and the moral maelstrom, the spiritual chaos, the social reactionism of the moment is the child of their creation. Because religion has proved itself to have created everything but the reality of God in life. Religion will fail again unless God becomes to us more than a name, an idea, a fetish, a prayer, a Cathedral, a Church or Synagogue.

"Let us prove our sincerity by closing our Churches and Synagogues and Cathedrals until we are ready to make our practice consistent with our profession. Such sincerity may bring a religion that is real. Sincerity will remove the shallow sham, the menacing mockery of present day religion, and bring God to America."

That is a terrible arraignment of the religious world, but it is in keeping with the words of the master to the Prophet Joseph Smith, in the woods of New York, when the boy was told to join none of the existing sects; that they had a form of Godliness, but denied the power thereof; taught for doctrines the commandments of men; draw near with their lips while their hearts were far from him. Why have the churches failed to find God, and to make him a part of their lives? It is because they have created their own gods, made their own deities instead of worshiping the God of the Bible. To all of them he is incomprehensible, unfathomable, unintelligible, and to thinking people it is no mystery why the Jew, the Catholic, the Christian and Protestant have failed to find him.

The Latter-day Saints have a definite and positive message for the world on this subject, declaring unto the world that the God of the Bible is a personal being, we ourselves being fashioned in his image: that Christ was God, manifest in the flesh, the exact counterpart of his Father, both of them being intelligible and in a measure at least, understandable. The people of the earth will continue their search without success until they are willing to acknowledge the great truth expressed in the first revelation given to Joseph Smith, in the personal appearance of the Father and the Son. Then it was that God came to America, and I say to you, my brethren and sisters, in the face of the statements I have read from the learned gentlemen, both of whom are prominent in the religious world, there is need of the elders of the Church of Christ in every part of the earth to proclaim the God of heaven, and testify to the divine mission of his Son, Jesus of Nazareth, who was crucified for the sins of the world. They have the same commission as the disciples of old, and bear witness of the great plan of redemption wrought out on Calvary by the Redeemer of the world for the salvation of the human family. From one end of our mission to the other, the elders are faithful in bearing witness to these things, and to the restoration of the gospel, through the Prophet Joseph Smith, in this day and age of the world. They are not afraid to lay down the gauntlet and declare unto men and women everywhere, that if they will accept the truth, yield obedience to the gospel, repent of their sins and be baptized by immersion for the remission of their sins, they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. This witness of God will manifest that we speak not of ourselves, that the doctrines are not ours, but his that sent us. It will reveal unto them the truth of all things, and by it they may come to know God and his Son, Jesus Christ.

The world at large is without this great gift, they deny its power, not believing in present-day revelation. Paul, the apostle, writing to the Corinthian saints declared unto them:

"Wherefore I give you to understand that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." (1 Cor. 12:3.)

The Savior himself declared to the people in his day, in the wonderful prayer recorded in St. John 17:

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

Since all the peoples of the world have sought to find God, it is really interesting to discover in his word how we may come to a knowledge of him and his Son; and since a knowledge of them is necessary, if we obtain eternal life, and we can only obtain that knowledge by and through the revelations of the Holy Ghost, it is absolutely essential that men and women be in possession of this gift of God. They can receive it only upon obedience to the fundamentals of the gospel, and in no other way.

I rejoice that these truths have become a part of our lives, that God is more to us than a name, an idea, a prayer, or a church, and that we are in no way responsible for the menacing mockery of present-day religions.

I pray that God will be with us as his children, that we may have power to live the principles of the gospel, be consistent with our profession, exemplary in our conduct, that in reality we may be the salt of the earth, the leaven that will leaven the whole lump, putting our light upon a hill, where it can be seen, and not under a bushel—that others seeing our good works may be led to glorify the God of heaven.

I testify to you in the name of the Master that I know, as I know I live, that this work in which we are engaged is the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, that it was restored to earth through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith, that it will fill its mission and destiny in the earth, and that no power under high heaven can stay its progress. God hath spoken it, and he will not be mocked. It will go forward until it shall fill the whole earth; men and women in every clime will recognize in it the truth of heaven. I pray that the peace of our Father may be with you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "Our God, we raise to thee."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder C. S. Martin.

THIRD OVERFLOW MEETING

The third overflow meeting was held in the Assembly Hall, Sunday afternoon, 2 o'clock, April 3, 1921.

Elder James E. Talmage, of the Council of the Twelve, presided.

The music was furnished by the LeGrand ward choir, Liberty stake, Heber K. Aldous, conductor, and James Gilbert and Gladys Spry accompanists.

The choir and congregation sang, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord."

Prayer was offered by Bishop Edward M. Ashton.

The choir sang the anthem, "Grant us peace."

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

The congested condition existing upon this block at this time is but typical of the congested condition in the Church. It seems impossible to provide meeting houses enough, or room within the walls sufficient, to accommodate the Latter-day Saints in their assemblies. There is, without doubt, a great spiritual revival amongst the people; and in this we all rejoice. Besides this gathering at this hour, there is an open-air meeting in progress on the grounds, and also the main assembly in the great tabernacle.

When the brethren of the Twelve go out amongst the people they have, of course, very close and cordial dealings with the stake presidencies, but we have one little criticism to offer that I think may well be voiced here. It is somewhat difficult to get one of the stake presidents to say much when one of the Council of the Twelve is present. I want these brethren to understand that they are the visiting brethren on this occasion, and I want them to do just as we have to do when visiting their stakes. And I pray that they may be inspired by the Spirit of the Lord, for I know you will be edified by what they have to say.

ELDER HEBER L. ALLEN

(President of the Taylor Stake of Zion, Alberta, Canada.)

It is not a very pleasant sensation to have the tables turned on you, the way Brother Talmage has done towards us this afternoon, in requiring us to do all the talking, because I believe the situation which he has stated exists in most all the stakes. I know it does in our stake. I know I once attempted to speak on the first principles of the gospel, and one of the presidents got up and said it was very refreshing to hear a stake president talk on that subject. We usually let the other fellows do that.

I pray that the Lord will bless me with his Spirit that we may be benefited by meeting together. As Brother Talmage has stated, I come from the far north, Canada, a name that makes most of you, I suppose, shiver; you think that that is so far off and such a cold country that you have no desire to go there; but I assure you that we have a great many people in that land of the Latter-day Saints. And the Lord has blessed us fairly well in that land during the last thirty-four years, since we first began to settle there. We try to do what we can, in our weak way, in that stake of Zion. We have adopted the method counseled at the last conference: we have sent out a few missionaries, and I think they have done a great deal of good. You know, there are only eight or ten thousand of us in that country—in that great nation. Most of us came from the United States. A few children, of course, have been born there, in fact quite a number. We have been treated in that wonderful land with the fullest measure of liberty that could be extended to any people. We have had every advantage enjoyed by any other people in that country, and we feel very thankful that that is the case.

Now, in our missionary labors that we have taken up recently, we have advised the elders to go to the non-"Mormons," who do not understand the gospel, and also to those of our brethren and sisters who have been a little careless; and when they come back, they report that they have a great many very agreeable gospel conversations with some of our non-"Mormon" friends. Some who are not members of the Church have entertained our elders for hours at a time, and they have stated that they had no idea that we promulgated such ideas as we have. One man who had been educated for the ministry had the privilege of hearing two of our elders, and he had been so prejudiced against our people and doctrines that although the meetings were held in the schoolhouse, nearby, he would not go in. When the elders called on him, he would not invite them in; but they finally persuaded him to go into the schoolhouse. He said, "I was educated for the ministry, but I don't believe anything now, there are so many conflicting ideas." But when they left, he said, "Come back again, because I did not know, nor have any idea that you had such splendid principles as you have been telling me of."

A great many people feel that our people are away up out of the world in Canada. Thirty-four years ago, when people first went up there, many of our people felt that after the storms had blown over the time would soon come that they would be called back to Utah. My grandfather was one of them who said that. I told him, no; because, I said, "You have heard some wonderful predictions in relation to the labors of this people in this land. I have heard people who come up there say that 'you will have very many more settlements in this beloved country.' President Joseph F. Smith said, 'You would have thousands and tens of thousands, and they would extend far up to the Great Bay, pointing up to the great Hudson's bay.'" I have taken a great deal of pleasure in predictions of that kind, and I have spent all my time and energies there, in fact. I have become a citizen there, over 30 years ago; but still I can say that no man born in this great country can feel a warmer feeling in his heart for this great Republic in which you live than we; and we always look back and say, That is a wonderfully blessed land where the Lord said that he raised up good and wise men for the purpose of establishing his great work. Now I say, we see the fulfilment of these prophecies.

I have often thought of that wonderful vision that Nephi had. He said, he saw that wonderful Church, and it spread abroad, and multitudes of people belonged to it; and he also saw that the people of the Lord were scattered over the whole earth, but their numbers were few. It may be that the Lord will use that as a means of promulgating his work in the last days. Some people are so full of prejudice they will not give attention to the principles that we preach. If they did, they would say, as this man did, that they had never had any idea that we had such wonderful and noble principles. But when they come to examine our principles they wonder, and think they could be patterned after.

Some of our people have attended some of the meetings of a great Farmers' association there. We have a very strong organization along that line in Alberta, and our bishops have been strong representatives of that organization, and in one of our meetings they put forward a resolution in relation to tobacco, and they petitioned parliament, or at least the provincial legislative body, that they would raise the age at which cigarettes could be sold to boys. In the recent vote for prohibition, the province went overwhelmingly in favor of prohibition, and of course our people stood where they ought to stand, in the lead, and our vote was the largest in the province. Now they can see what we are doing. We have already maintained, for a great many years, the only local option district in that country. Through the efforts of President Card, that was brought about, and finally the majority of the people there voted in favor of temperance, prohibition.

We live on a little branch railway known as the Cardston branch, and some of the travelers, after we had put forth the M. I. A. slogan, have said, "Why, my house has told me not to come down this way with our wares, because the people have adopted that resolution, and won't buy our coffee there. Now our stores are quitting the sale of tobacco," he said. Another man said, "I sell tobacco, and my house has ordered me not to go down there, for none of the stores are selling tobacco, and we cannot sell very much down in that country." An example of that kind begins to have its effect upon the people.

I was in a big banquet not long ago, at which one of the members of the board of trade, with a wide reputation, happened to be sitting by me, and they have a habit of almost smoking you out in their banquets. He said, "Mr. Allen, I feel that it is almost a sacrilege to sit here and smoke beside you." That meant to me a good deal; it meant that they had begun to take notice of what we had been teaching. In a few ways of this kind the gospel is being preached in that great land.

In that great convention I mentioned, we were told, "You 'Mormons' are not getting the benefit of all the taxes that you ought to get, and that you help to pay, because you haven't got enough men in the penitentiary." Those men said, "You haven't got any men in the penitentiary, and still you are paying your share of the taxes."

Up where I live they organize for the farm women also, so that they can get social and other privileges. When they came into our midst they said they recognized something that there was not in any other province. They said, "You are looking after your own poor better than anybody else in the province; and this is a part of our work that we do not emphasize, because you do not need it in this community."

Recently when we paid a visit to the leading educators, and on the occasion of the visit of Superintendent Adam S. Bennion, in the interest of the Church schools, they said something that was interesting. You know, there has been talk of closing up Church schools; but the minister of education said, "You hold to that Church school just as long as you possibly can, because it has filled wonderfully a want felt in that community, that no other province has done, in getting young men into the school and educating them." He said, we want to introduce domestic art and other manual and domestic training in our Church schools, and the best representative of that was right in Raymond, and these things are efforts along a line of work that is highly important. They are carrying out the ideas that President Young advocated more than fifty years ago, when he said that the boys ought to be taught to be better farmers; and the girls, better housewives, so that they can be better citizens. We had the first schools in the province that introduced domestic art and science; and, in fact, others want us to cooperate with them.

When our trustees went up to the educational convention they reported that ours was the only school outside of their large cities that was carrying on any of that work.

In this way, it may be that the gospel may be preached, for they will get a chance in that way to see some of our good works. May be, after a while, they will begin to recognize that there are some other principles that are very valuable, and for the uplift and benefit of men; and I hope that the day will soon come that they can recognize us for our real worth, and when the spirit of the gospel shall be better than anything else with them, and when they can be baptized into the same spirit that we are baptized into, and a spirit of brotherly love and kindness shall exist in all parts of the world. Then they will begin to receive the benefits of "Mormonism," for which it has been restored to the earth.

Now, at home we have the privilege of entertaining most of the general authorities of the Church, and I would just like to bear testimony of the worth of these men. I do this because we are sustaining two new members of the general authorities at this conference. We have had the privilege of entertaining 22 out of 26. Brother Talmage has not yet favored us with a visit, nor Brother Widtsoe, of course. I want to bear testimony that they are very, very good men, and that we are perfectly safe in following their footsteps; and we don't want to get the idea that we want to do something that is contrary to the will of the Church; because, from the ideas that I have received from carrying them over our great prairies, and having them in our own homes, they are splendid men, and I have not heard any one of them suggest that which would smack of trickery or anything of that kind, but they are pure-minded men. While I loved President Joseph F.

Smith above all other men, I can see that the Lord raises up other men who are carrying on the work, just as well as men have been carrying it on in the past. At the present time I can say that I admire President Grant very much. I rode with him all over our stake, just previous to his being promoted to the presidency of the Church, and I found him to be a man that is pure-minded, and one who has the interests of the people at heart. And these other brethren who have recently been sustained, I can sustain them with all my heart. It is a source of pleasure to sustain these men by raising our hands and then going home and supporting them in everything that we do in life. May the Lord enable us to do that, and also recognize that there is order in his Church, and that whenever he has anything to do he will do it through the proper channel. I pray that we may follow our file leaders, that we may be indeed true Latter-day Saints, and also, that we may do our part in promulgating the gospel. This is my prayer, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The LeGrand ward male quartet, under the direction of Leland I. Acomb, sang, "Nearer, my God, to thee."

ELDER ROBERT D. YOUNG

(President of the Sevier Stake of Zion.)

This inspiring congregation, the opening prayer and the beautiful music, all make one feel like Peter of old, that "it is good to be here," although one's individual part may be a trying ordeal.

The Sevier stake of Zion is not situated in the extreme north or south. We are centrally located; and, until recently it comprised what President Grant notified you of today, both North Sevier stake and South Sevier stake. We had a very large stake, both in number of wards and in large territory to cover; hence, the brethren deemed it wise to divide it up into three different stakes. So the Sevier stake is not today as large as it was at the time of our last conference.

I have enjoyed the remarks of President Allen. In just a few words, I will tell you why: when I hear the name "Allen" it links an incident up in my life that has always been and always will be sacred to me. I do not know whether President Allen is a representative of the Allen family I now speak of. My mother was an orphan girl. Her home was in Glasgow, Scotland. She was fourteen years of age when she received the message of truth, through the elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. She received a testimony and became converted. She had been cared for during several years by the Allen family who were neighbors to her mother and father before their death. They asked her, "Mary, are you interested in the 'Mormon' faith?" In telling the story, the tears welled up in the little girl's eyes, for she knew what was coming, and she told them, yes, that she was very much interested in them, that she believed that they were true servants of God, and that this was actually the Church of Christ. They asked her, "Do you insist in going to their meetings?" She answered, "I would like to." Grandpa Allen said, "Very well, my son John says that you are disgracing the family." Inasmuch as they were business people in that community, he said, "I hear it from all our customers and from people on the street, that the little girl who is with you and whom you have been caring for, is giving continual attention to those 'Mormon' people and John is very much offended; it has come to this, Mary: you either accept of our home and its hospitality, or take 'Mormonism,' and there is the door." She took the door. Thank God for the courage, for the faith, and the stability the Lord had granted to her in her teens. She had but one shilling. She secured what was known as the Townshead hall; and she pleaded with the caretaker, for the one shilling, to permit the elders, who were traveling without purse or scrip, to preach there that evening. She prevailed upon them, and they permitted the elders to speak. She related to them that she was homeless, and the elders blessed her. Before she left the meeting, she was offered several homes, by several people, who were impressed by the power of the Lord to give her assistance. But the story is this—I don't intend Brother Allen personally to take this—that Grandpa Allen said, to his children and his wife: "If 'Mormonism' can fasten itself upon a little girl securely as it did on Mary, knowing her life as we all know it, knowing her appreciation for our home and our comfort, then I want to say that there is some greater power than just man's, about this great work known as 'Mormonism.'" To cut a long story short, the first dinner my good mother received, after she left the old country, she received here in Utah, prepared by the Allen family, and as far as I know they have continued to remain firm, steadfast and immovable to the cause of our Savior.

Here, this afternoon, we sang that beautiful hymn, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in his excellent word." Is it not to all of us an excellent word? Is it not the most secure foundation that we could imagine? Is there another organization, that is as secure, as solid, as perfectly organized, as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints?

We have heard, this morning, from the Prophet of the Lord, who gave us his blessings. With him are his counselors, the Council of the Twelve, the seven presidents of Seventy, and like organizations, as you go down the line of the priesthood, one by one, organized in every stake and ward of Zion. Now, I know that they are men of God. I have been acquainted with them for many, many years. They have been in my home; and they have slept there and eaten there. I have labored with them in various capacities, some of them, and I want to testify that there are no men that I have ever come in contact with in my life who are so absolutely devoted, heart and hand, dedicated to the service of the Lord, for the welfare of their fellow men, banishing selfishness, and thinking of others. I think of the home, if you will pardon me, that I was reared in; I think of my good old father standing up, and with tears in his eyes, saying to his boys and girls: "O how bad I would feel, if one of my boys and girls ever in their lives permitted the servants of God to be assailed in their hearing." All the days of my life I heard, in that home, while my father lived, courage, good words, words of counsel and advice. If we will follow closely and carefully the counsel of these men, and be painstaking we shall have success in life, and be able to live in righteousness; and we shall be crowned with a crown of glory resulting from successful life here in mortality.

Just one word with reference to our organizations. Sometimes our boys and our girls, at certain ages, are a little careless, probably grow a little doubtful, skeptical in a degree, and do not quite understand clearly. I think of the words of the poet, wherein he said:

THE OLDER I GROW

The older I grow the more patient I am,
 And fonder of people I seem to become:
 I find much that's real hidden deep in the sham,
 I know that life's juices are under the scum.
 The care that once fretted as trifles appear:
 And the faults that loomed large in the friends that I know,
 Seem to fade in a background of kindness and cheer.
 The older I grow.

Time was that I questioned the purpose of life—
 In the mad way of youth I was quick with my hate:
 But I knew not the depth nor the breadth of the strife,
 And I knew nothing then of the workings of fate,
 I judged from the surface and not from the deep,
 I was wasteful with pleasure and fearless of woe,
 But I find that my joys I'm more eager to keep
 The older I grow.

I chose all my friends with particular care,
 And heedlessly wounded the truest and best:
 To many a false god I sent up a prayer,
 Then the real things of life seemed a subject for jest,
 And the bad seemed the good, and the good seemed the bad.
 I scorned in my haste what was splendid below:
 But I find myself longing to have what I had,
 The older I grow.

I have learned that men's follies are not printed deep:
 That many, youth mocks at, are splendid and fine:
 And young people scatter the joys they should keep,
 In the very same way that I once wasted mine.
 I'm more tolerant now, I am slower to sneer,
 For I've suffered my griefs and I've winced at a blow:
 And the money I find matters less and less here,
 The older I grow.

From the Wall Street Journal.

I wonder, my brethren and sisters, if I may say one more word. As in all parts of the Church we see manifest in our own stake and wards, a spiritual uplift; we see an increase in activity in all branches of the work, and in all the organizations of the Church in our stake. We notice that there is more painstaking and care, that people keep the commandments more truly than they ever did before. But with all that, I feel that our homes are not just given the full attention, they deserve, because of the many worldly affairs, with which the blessings of God have provided us. I wonder if we are remembering our boys and girls, are we praying with them morning and night? I wonder if we are asking them to take their turn, and thank God for these peaceful homes in the valleys of the mountains.

Thank the Lord for our leaders, these good men whom God has chosen; there are no better; they will guide this people safely through all the storms of life, may we become endeared to these men, and know them as they truly are, servants of God. Good reading is good seeding, it has been said; good counsel is good seeding, and if we can bring and keep our boys and girls under a beneficent influence, then we have accomplished a successful thing. If not, as we grow older, we will find our hearts long to taste what was offered us, but which we did not fully appreciate as young men. As one grows in years, comes to the years of accountability, the teachings of childhood stand more specifically and clearly in one's life; then the youth sees more clearly what he has to do, and if his parents have been faithful, they have given him just what is kith and kin to his better nature.

While all this is going on, while we have a general increase in our activities, I wonder if we are watching the home circle carefully. I spoke to one of our special missionaries lately, and I know that once he had been just a little obstinate and I said to the brethren: "There is the meeting house; I am not my brother's keeper, if they want to go to meeting let them go to meeting." He said to me just the other day: "Oh, Brother Young, I feel so sorry for what I once said to you. If this missionary work has not done anything else, it has converted me beyond the possibility of a doubt, that I am my brother's keeper, and that God holds me responsible to discharge to the very best of my ability the work that he places in my hands." Our work is increasing. We have never had anything else in our stake that has accomplished so much good, apparently, with those who were wandering, careless, and negligent in reference to their duties, as this special missionary work.

We have a wonderful foundation laid for our faith, and I want to say that these words of Christ are true: "My sheep know my voice, and a stranger they will not follow." When I was in the mission field I had a wonderful testimony. A Scandinavian brother who came to Australia, had a sister who was converted to "Mormonism" and before he left, she put in his trunk a Book of Mormon and a Doctrine and Covenants. There were two Lutheran boys who came to Australia who were very bitter. One of them became converted out there. He asked the other man, his companion, to read with him, because he had got a testimony that the gospel was true. Finally he died, and on his deathbed, and to the disgust of his Lutheran minister, he said he was a "Mormon," and wanted to be buried as a "Mormon." But his last words to his companion were, "Will you read the Book of Mormon, and will you ask the Lord to guide you and direct you, and if you do not receive a testimony, as far as I am concerned, I will hold you no more responsible. He died; his companion received a testimony. He did not know for some time that there were any elders in Queensland until he had heard from Copenhagen to this effect. He came to search for us. The ministers tried to keep him away. Finally, when he landed in Brisbane, Aus., he was met by them, and inasmuch as he was determined to find the elders, they told him where he would find the re-organized church. As a last resort they thought, we will send him there. He listened to their story. He had never met an elder in his life. His name is Peter Christensen, and he is now in Idaho; he had never met an elder, but he listened to their story, and he said: "You are not the people that I am looking for;" and he went on. He came to our headquarters. I met him and talked to him, and the tears streamed down his cheeks, as he said, "You are the people." I thought that a wonderful testimony.

May the Lord bless us. May we sustain, uphold, love our neighbors as ourselves, and never be found speaking evil of God's anointed, our brethren and sisters, or our fellow men, in my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Leland I. Acomb sang a tenor solo, "Comfort ye my people."

ELDER JOHN M. BAXTER

(President of the Woodruff Stake of Zion.)

In listening to the report of President Grant concerning the progress of the Church and the increase in attendance at the sacrament meetings throughout the Church, and in witnessing the thousands of people who have come up to attend this great conference, I have had a great deal of joy and satisfaction in my heart, for I can assure you that my heart is in the work of the Lord and in the progress of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints upon the earth.

There is no greater evidence of the faith of the people than the sacrifices that they make in order that they may enjoy the blessings of the Lord and the teachings of the gospel. It is a wonderful thing to me to see hundreds of people at this conference who remained in their seats from one meeting to another, in order that they might be able to hear the servants of the Lord. As a people we have manifested our faith in the Lord and in the gospel of Jesus Christ from the beginning of this Church. We have read in the good books, which we call the Scriptures, evidences of the faith of the Saints in former dispensations; we have evidence of the faith of Abraham and those of his dispensation, the faith of the apostles of our Lord in their day, in traveling throughout the earth, promulgating the principles of eternal life; but it does seem to me that there has been no greater faith evinced by any people than that of the Latter-day Saints in our own dispensation. The early elders of the Church, and in fact all of the prophets and apostles of the Church from its organization, have manifested the same great faith and diligence and labors in the cause of the kingdom of God as were ever manifested by those of ancient times. Not only these, but the Latter-day Saints generally, as referred to by the previous speaker regarding his mother, who embraced the gospel in her girlhood days, and therefore was driven from her home. Hundreds of people have done the same. The people of this dispensation have been gathered "one of a city and two of a family," and have been gathered to these valleys of the mountains under greater or less trying circumstances, and they have been faithful and true to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. This is a great evidence of its divinity today.

In this conference are assembled today people from all over this western country, from Canada on the north to Mexico on the south, and I presume that as an organized stake of Zion, we are farthest on the east; and we have also those from the ocean on the west, who have spent their means and their time, and gathered up in this great concourse of people to worship God and be instructed in the principles of eternal life, and to assist in sustaining before God, our eternal Father, those who have been called to act as our leaders in this great dispensation of the fulness of times. It seems to me that this is a wonderful testimony, for it is a wonderful display of the faith of the Latter-day Saints.

I was thinking, while the former speaker was speaking of his mother joining the Church in her childhood days, of my own mother; and you will pardon me a moment if I refer to her, as I am perhaps better acquainted with her efforts and labors in the kingdom of God, and the training she gave me, than any other thing I am acquainted with on this earth. She was one of those who left her home, country, and everything near and dear to her for the Gospel's sake, and came across these barren deserts, and she drew a handcart with a little child three years old from the Missouri river to these valleys. She did not draw the handcart all the way. Her husband accompanied her part of the way, but he laid his body down upon the plains, and left her to continue the journey with the little child three years of age, in the handcart. She was one of those caught in the snow with a late company, in the Sweetwater country, when the teams and brethren came to meet them, and saved them all from starvation. And then she came to this country as a widow, having left a comfortable home, parents, brothers, sisters, and friends, and all that was near and dear to her upon the face of the earth, in a foreign land, and traversed these plains, and got caught in that deep snow. I have heard her say many times, that when they slept in their tent out in the snow, their camp-fire went away down in the deep snow, and they were above the fire. And I remember her relating a little incident in connection with the death of her husband. He became so fatigued and worn out, that he could not travel any further. They took him in a wagon, after the brethren and teams had met him; she had a little piece of candle that she had carried in some way. She could not stand to see the breath of life leave her husband in the dark, and she not be able to behold his face. She prayed to God that this little piece of candle might remain lighted as long as life remained in her husband. This prayer was granted to her, for with the going out of the candle the breath of life went out from her husband. Nine persons were buried in the same grave, the next morning. Now I just refer to this to show you the faith of those who have received the gospel of Jesus Christ.

It seems to me that the Lord is pleased with us who have assembled at this conference today. It must be pleasing in the sight of God to see us hungering and thirsting after righteousness. I see people trying to get access to all the buildings here. I know that the time is far spent, and there is another speaker, and I do not wish to intrude upon his time. I pray God to bless you. Amen.

ELDER SAMUEL F. SMITH

(President of the Snowflake Stake of Zion.)

I pray that my heart beats true and that my voice will ring in accord with the Spirit of the Lord which is in the hearts of the Latter-day Saints assembled here. The mention of Arizona may warm you up, and I trust that it will warm up your souls unto salvation. Arizona is a good land to live in.

At the suggestion of Elder Talmage, I might say something about our stake, if it may not be considered throwing bouquets at myself and my people. There is no one present, I believe, who belongs in our stake, because there were only five persons who came in our company, and I believe they are all in the Tabernacle, and they will therefore not hear what I may say, and so perhaps I may be pardoned for saying something kindly about our own people. I want to say something about our climate, though, so that you will not be going away with a misapprehension. Snowflake, Arizona, is in the mountains of that land, and therefore is not hot. Our climate is delightful, as much so as that of Salt Lake City. The Latter-day Saints there are trying their best to keep the commandments of the Lord, as you are. We are glad, always, to compare notes with our neighbor stakes. We are delighted when the bulletin comes down there, and we can compare our record with others. We very seldom, I am sorry to say, get first rank, but we are sure that we never get at the foot of the ranks. In the matter of attendance at sacrament meetings, that is very good, above the average; and the best part of it is, our young people attend the sacrament meetings. This is due largely to the work of the Mutual Improvement Associations and our Church school. The teachers are with the young people, and they take them with them. They are all engaged in the activities of the Church. They participate in the singing of the choir; in fact, they are the choir, and I am sure you, could you hear, would bear witness with me that it is beautiful singing. We have as large a percentage as, and I think greater than, the average of the Church, of missionaries in the world, preaching the gospel. We have a large percentage of our young people in attendance at Church schools, much larger than the average.

Our Mutuals have a full equipment, considering the standard of the Church schools, as to the enrollment, and more. The activities of the priesthood include nearly all the brethren. Forty-seven of our brethren who hold the higher Priesthood have been and are now on missions.

In connection with our Church schools, I want to mention our religion class. We conduct an ideal religion class every morning, at 8:45. The religion class assembles for 15 minutes. The children are so interested that usually they are there on time, and for 15 minutes they are fed upon gospel truth, for five days of every week. It is a most splendid help in the education of our children. It fills a much needed want in our educational work.

I want to say to the credit of our neighbors and friends in Arizona, that they are exceedingly liberal, and I have not found any who thought it was polluting the land to permit us to teach religion in the school houses, outside of school hours. The people have appreciated what we were doing, and have permitted us to go forward instead of being prohibited from the use of the school house at all, for these purposes, as has been the case in some places in our country. We have had the benefit of our school houses every day for a number of years. We have seen splendid results from this. Our boys grow up to know the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ as naturally as they grow up to know the truth of arithmetic.

Our people are loyal to the temple work. I believe that, of late particularly, the Latter-day Saints in our country have been very much led to contemplate temple work. That has come, I am compelled to say, very much by the work and efforts of the Relief Society; but they are doing a splendid work, and as suggested by the Prophet, they are "provoking the brethren to good works." Our attendance at priesthood meetings is very good, though not so good that I desire to make special mention of it. Our brethren and sisters are devoted to the work of the Lord. I think we stand very close to the top, in the matter of tithing, and offerings. We are not, perhaps, in a wealthy land, but our people would rank as being wealthy, if judged by their tithing per capita. It is a barometer at least of their faith in the gospel.

I rejoice to be associated with my brethren and sisters, and I rejoice to bring to you the good feeling and cheer of the people of our land, and to tell you that we are engaged in the same great work, and that we are all fully expecting that the kingdom of God will be established. There must have been a tremendous amount of faith in the hearts of those men and women associated with the Church in early days, when a little handful of people declared that they were connected with the Church and kingdom of God, and that it would prevail in the world. To the world, and even to us now, it looked presumptuous. But when we see this tremendous concourse of people on this block and know of the faith of the Latter-day Saints which is manifested by the people in all of this mountain country, we can partly see the fulfilment of the prophecy of the early leaders of the Church, and it does not require the same amount of faith, it seems to me. But there is opportunity for the same amount of work, and the purposes of the Lord will be accomplished exactly in proportion to the efforts we put forth.

I pray the Lord that what I have said will tend to strengthen and stimulate my brethren and sisters to more earnest and more zealous works in helping to bring about the blessings of the Almighty. May his blessings be with us, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

I trust that you have gathered the spirit of the remarks made by the stake presidents to whom we have listened. Remember, this is a conference, not merely an ordinary assembly. You are entitled to know what is going on in the different parts of the Church. Those who were in this building this morning heard reports from the different mission fields, and now you have heard of some of the peculiar conditions prevailing in a few of the many stakes of Zion, four out of eighty-five now in existence. We find the same spirit prevailing wherever we meet Latter-day Saints. I have found that to be true in meeting my fellow worshipers in this country and beyond the seas. You can recognize them by their spirit, by their manifestation of feeling, by their ways and manners. There is a sort of a family likeness prevailing among Latter-day Saints, and you can readily recognize that if you meet one who is a stranger to you. There is a spirit of earnestness manifested in the spirit of the Latter-day Saints. There is a spirit of awakening at this time, as I mentioned at the beginning of our meeting, and the remarks of my brethren have borne me out. But, thank the Lord, his Spirit is striving earnestly with the people. But the power of evil is likewise aroused, and is also active among the people. Satan knows how little time is left before that day which is spoken of as being both great and blessed, and likewise terrible, which shall characterize the coming of the Lord in his glory to take his place as ruler of this earth. With him shall come concourses of angels, the blessed ones, and many upon the earth at that time shall meet him and his goodly company, and be numbered among them. Verily, that day is near at hand. The evil one knows it, and knows his time is short, and therefore, amidst our rejoicing over the improvement that is manifest among the Latter-day Saints, we must beware of the evil powers that are at work, that we may not be led away, that our children may not be led away, but that they may be firm and true to the faith which the Lord has implanted in their hearts—the faith of their fathers.

I am sure that all will join me in the feeling of appreciation, which I express for all, to the choir of LeGrand ward for the music that has been rendered this afternoon.

The choir sang an anthem, "Hark, hark, my soul."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder William Robinson.

FOURTH OVERFLOW MEETING

A fourth overflow meeting was held outdoors, near the Bureau of Information, Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, April 3, 1921.

Elder Melvin J. Ballard, of the Council of the Twelve, presided.

Music was furnished by the congregation, Elder Clare Reid of the L. D. S. School of Music, accompanist. The congregation sang, "High on the mountain top."

Prayer was offered by Elder Oscar Winkler.

The congregation sang, "Come, let us anew our journey pursue."

ELDER JOSEPH ECKERSLEY

(President of the Wayne Stake.)

The multitude of people assembled upon this Temple Block today is an evidence of the continued growth of the work of the Lord in the earth, and of the faith of the membership of the Church. The promise made to the Prophet Joseph Smith, in the very commencement of the work that he was called by the Lord to establish in the latter days, was that notwithstanding the persecution and the opposition that should be waged against the cause that he was called to advocate in the world, the work would survive; that the Church to be established or set up, and the gospel of the Kingdom that should be preached in the world as a witness before the coming of the Messiah, should never be overcome, that the Church to be established should never be given to another people. When we think of the combined opposition of the world to the work that was commenced by the Prophet, and think that notwithstanding all the trials and vicissitudes through which the Saints passed in their early pilgrimage in the Church, notwithstanding the opposition of the world, today our eyes witness upon this Temple Block thousands of people, who have assembled from the remotest parts of this state, from surrounding states, and have gathered here to worship the Lord, in evidence that there is still faith in their hearts, and that this work will continue, it is comforting, my brethren and sisters, to know that God has given this promise that if we are faithful in the keeping of his commandments, all things that have been promised and foretold by the prophets concerning the things that should happen in the latter days will be fulfilled.

I rejoice with you this afternoon to be present at this conference, to associate with the leaders of the Church, to hear the living and burning testimony of the prophets and the apostles of the Latter-day Saints, to mingle with the men and women who have received the gospel and whose hearts are filled with faith and whose works testify of their integrity and of their devotion.

I rejoice that the principles of the gospel are such that by yielding obedience thereto, men may obtain for themselves a living testimony of the divinity of the work which they espouse. The promise of Jesus is being fulfilled just as literally today as in the day when he made the promise to the people in Jerusalem, that if any man would obey the doctrine that he taught, if any man would do the will of God, he should know of the doctrine, whether it was of God, or whether he spoke of himself. And so today, the person who receives the gospel in a good and honest heart, who complies with its precepts, obtains that living testimony, and that leads to good works.

I recall that on one occasion the Prophet Joseph was asked concerning the secret of his success as a leader among the people, in holding them together, and his reply was that he taught the people, correct principles, and, having been taught correct principles, they governed themselves. This is the secret of the growth of the work of the Latter-day Saints. This is the secret of the faith, the unity, and the progress that is being made in the Church of Christ. This is not a work of coercion or of compulsion. The words of the poet are very applicable in the doctrines that are taught by the Latter-day Saints. God will not coerce any human mind:

Know this, that ev'ry soul is free,
To choose his life and what he'll be;
For this eternal truth is given,
That God will force no man to heaven.

He'll call, persuade, direct aright,
And bless with wisdom, love and light;
In nameless ways be good and kind,
But never force the human mind.

Freedom and reason makes us men,
Take these away, what are we then?
Mere animals, and just as well
The beasts may think of heaven or hell.

And thus when the elders go forth into the world proclaiming this message of truth, they plead with the people to investigate, to search the Scriptures, for in them is the truth. In them, by obedience to the principles that they teach, there is eternal life. There is no coercion, there is no attempt to frighten the people, as it were, into a belief in the principles of the doctrines of the Redeemer; but it is a doctrine of love, a doctrine of persuasion, leaving to mankind their agency, the power to choose; and so we receive the gospel and become members of the Church. That same principle applies throughout our lives. We may, by obedience to the principles of the gospel, one by one, improve our lives, be of greater service to mankind; but there is never at any time an attempt to force the observance of any law that God has given for the salvation of his children.

I rejoice in the freedom and in the liberty of the gospel. I rejoice in the truth as it has been revealed and restored. I rejoice in the knowledge that if men do the will of God, they for themselves shall know of its truth, and whether it be of God or whether men speak of themselves. I feel, brethren and sisters, this afternoon, that we have much to be grateful for as members of the Church of Christ; and I pray that we may be inclined to take advantage of the opportunities that are within our reach to grow in faith, and knowledge, and grow in the love and fellowship of our Father in heaven, and in the fellowship and love of all good people, that we may be faithful and true to the mission that has been entrusted to us—not only to seek to save ourselves and our own immediate families and kin, but that we may be willing to make sacrifice in the interest of mankind, that we may be willing, as servants commissioned of the Lord, to go forth and declare his truth and preach the gospel as we may be inspired, as we are called, from time to time. That the blessing of the Lord may continue with us, and that we may manifest our gratitude to him for the blessings that we enjoy in devotion to his service, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER E. FRANK BIRCH

(President of the Tintic Stake.)

My brethren and sisters. It is with a feeling of timidity and weakness that I try to speak to you this afternoon, but with the help of our Father in heaven, I may be able to say something edifying.

I endorse heartily the remarks of the former speaker; they express my feelings exactly. I have felt today a renewal of my testimony that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is true; that this great work, the Church of God, has been established never again to be taken from the earth or given to another people.

I was greatly impressed this morning, as I am this afternoon, with the large attendance at this conference, and with the realization of the power and strength of our Church organization today. I thought of the First Presidency, the Twelve Apostles, and the different officers and organizations of the Church today, with a realization of the power and strength they are in the earth.

I thought, if we could assume that the Church, as we have it, were man-made, it would still be the most powerful organization in the world today. Assuming that the Master were not the organizer or the head, that it were a man-made institution, even then, consider its leadership. President Grant, a wonderful leader, a man of great experience, who has made mistakes in life, perhaps, because he has done things, but he is a man who has profited by his mistakes, and a mighty man in Israel today! Consider his counselors, President Penrose, a man of great experience, a practical man, a man who has shared the joys and the sorrows of the people for many years; and then President Ivins, a practical man, a success in life, both temporally and spiritually—an agriculturist, a man educated in many of the sciences of life—when I think of these three great leaders, for my part, under any condition, I would be willing to trust the Church. Then, consider their associates, the members of the Council of Twelve, men who lead in the world of affairs, in science, as statesmen, as agriculturists, as educators—I have been impressed all day that for my part, I am willing to trust the Church in their care.

When we further consider that our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, according to our knowledge and testimony, is at the head, that he is sanctioning and inspiring, with his holy Spirit, their actions, I am again perfectly satisfied and content to trust the affairs of this Church in their hands. To me, a man or a woman who would assume to dictate, who would assume to set them right, would be ridiculous, would appear insignificant. Yet, we have such characters in the Church today, who attempt to do that, and ask God Almighty to inspire them, that they may dictate to the leaders of our Church. I say we have them, but you business men, you men of affairs, will agree with me when I say that no organization can exist and flourish if subordinate officers, lay members, dictate to the ruling authority. I am a man in charge of mines, superintendents and foremen, and I have learned this, that when a shift boss undertakes to pass over the head of his foreman to the management of the mine, he is out of order, the organization is immediately in confusion. I have also learned that when men holding the high positions undertake to dictate over the heads of their superintendents, their subordinate officers, again the organization is in confusion. So I say that the Church is built on natural principles, business principles; and no man should dictate to those in higher authority, nor pass over the heads of those who are their immediate superiors.

I have said before, we have people in the Church who undertake to do this, and I believe when they do, there is confusion. We get, as people say, our wires crossed; we get the wrong information; we get "in wrong;" we are understood wrong; and there is confusion. I know of people, and have had recent experiences with people, who have thought that they could go into the solitude of the deserts and pray unto God to help them set the Church right; who have thought that, through fasting and prayer, they could set the Church in order, that they could dictate. Much has been said informing us that every member of the Church should have a testimony of his own, every man stand on his own foundation, that every man should receive inspiration to the extent that he will have a living testimony that the gospel of Jesus Christ is true. Men have misinterpreted that. They have taken unto themselves the thought that they must receive directions, revelations, from the higher authority, even from the Master, as to the dictation of his affairs on earth. And they have done wrong. They have caused confusion, and they have not accomplished what they expected to accomplish. As I say, they have undertaken to do this, and so misinterpreting the advice that has been given to us that we must rest on our own testimony. As I understand it, every man and woman is entitled to inspiration from God Almighty for his own welfare, or the welfare of the thing that he may immediately control—I would say a father in his home is entitled to inspiration to rear his family, the President of a Mutual Improvement Association is entitled to inspiration to lead his association. But they must follow the standards that have been set up by the General Authorities!

The Prophet Joseph told us that God never reveals anything that is already made plain and revealed. Therefore we have plenty, and we may go to our superior authorities to receive the same. Men have misunderstood things and have taken it that they themselves shall receive revelation from God Almighty to lead the affairs of this Church; and when they do this, when they fast and when they pray, and when they insist on revelations, contrary to that which is already revealed, the Spirit of the Lord forsakes them and the devil crosses them with his wires. I have had recent experience with men who were deceived and who thought they were receiving inspiration from Almighty God, when they were obtaining it from an evil source. These men received "revelations" that they were to sacrifice their dear wives, and take other person's wives—somebody else was to sacrifice theirs to them! This is the way the devil does things. He puts men upon pedestals, and when he gets them there, he kicks them out from under them, and then they lose the companionship of our Father in heaven and gain the friendship of the devil.

I do not feel to speak any longer; but never before in my life have I had more confidence that God has instituted his Church in the earth, and that we can feel at ease that it is entrusted in good hands, and in a perfect organization. My prayer is that we will live according to the inspiration given to us from the authorities of the Church and to ourselves from the Spirit of God for our own direction, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER NEPHI L. MORRIS

(President of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion.)

It seems a long time since I undertook to speak on the gospel, in the open air. I remember doing so some years ago on the streets of London, as well as in Brooklyn. Those undertakings were somewhat different than this. One very great difference is in the matter of furnishing the music. In those exciting experiences, I attempted to do the singing and received no assistance from the listeners. They came to see what was the occasion for such a strange and distressing noise. I ceased my musical efforts at the first stopping place, and started to preach to them. On this occasion the audience does the singing and, by comparison, I am a very grateful and happy listener.

Another difference was the probability of my being driven from the streets, if things didn't go smoothly. Here there is small probability of mob violence unless, perchance, one speaks unsufferably long, in which case no one can tell what might happen.

In looking over this great throng of people, assembled as they are upon this historical square, one is impressed with the vast area from which representatives composing this audience have come. I see faces that are familiar to me in the remote quarters of the intermountain country. There are also many faces of those who live close in. This might well be called a "General Conference" because every section of the country and every organization of the Church is represented in the Conference proceedings.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, as an organization, is just ninety-one years old this year. Consider the accomplishments during that period of time and pay full attention to the obstacles and handicaps that have all the way beset the Latter-day Saints, and you will recognize a demonstration of the power of faith unsurpassed in history. The achievements of this people in the field of social and industrial, as well as religious, progress are well recognized by men of clear vision and true appreciation for the things of real value to humanity. These men, some of whom stand high in the affairs of the nation, as well as in the world of education and social welfare work, are frankly expressing their admiration for the accomplishments of the Latter-day Saints. This people is looked upon as a very essential element in our national life, and in some respects as leaders in the most praiseworthy of undertakings. For one, I will admit all these good things which are attributed to us.

We are conspicuously a people who do things. We may have done some things that were peculiar and not understandable to the outsider. We may have done some foolish things in the many vicissitudes through which we have passed. Aside from these trivial and inconsequential things, we have done really big things in the earth during the past one hundred years. The first great accomplishment in our history, in Western America, is that of coming here and making a "go" of it in this once undesirable country. That a mighty empire should arise in the vales of the Rocky mountains, teeming today with their millions of people and bounteous crops and products, where three-quarters of a century ago a desolate wilderness held sway, is an achievement well-nigh bordering on the marvelous. To have been the means of such an accomplishment is glory enough for any people. This is a very great distinction won by the Latter-day Saints. And time will only throw this achievement out in more imposing boldness as distance and opportunity for comparison are given by the improved perspective.

This is another instance of great things being accomplished under the stress and strain of a tragic necessity. Men seldom do very great things voluntarily. Circumstances sometimes compel them to action and the impossible is often accomplished. Had not our neighbors in Missouri and Illinois made life intolerable to us we would have remained among them to this day. Had not the sharp and incisive argument of the bayonet and the musket been resorted to this great western country would have been peopled by others, and in a very different manner than that which has occurred. "We came here willingly because we had to," said one naive pioneer, and I may add, we remained here because there was no other place for us to go to. Our erstwhile "enemies" were rapidly migrating to the Pacific, and settlement along the coast would have meant continued conflict. So we remained here, because we had to. In so doing we worked out our own destiny, and, in my candid judgment, made the greatest single contribution to our national wealth and well-being it will be the destiny of any other people, to make. For an event that compares in importance to humanity and this nation, we shall have to go back to the Pilgrims and the Puritans of three centuries ago. Their motives and service to mankind are in many respects very similar, to those of the "Mormon" pioneers. The latter, however, saw the fruits of their sacrificing efforts because they accomplished more in a shorter period of time.

This morning we heard President Grant express his supreme pleasure over the cordial and hearty reception given him at Kansas City, while there last December, addressing a prominent and influential club of business men who had invited him, as the head of the "Mormon" Church to become their guest at a banquet and reception. He was asked to speak on the accomplishments of the "Mormon" people. In doing so, he recounted the events which led to the expulsion of our people from the state in which he was then addressing a great business organization. He told of the industrial, social, educational and religious attainments of our people. His remarks were so well and favorably received by the four hundred leading business men who composed the club, that many words of sincere commendation were expressed for him and his people. He was strongly urged to come again and address them on another occasion.

This welcome reception was in such remarkable contrast with the feelings manifest toward the Latter-day Saints some seventy-five years ago that President Grant was profoundly impressed with the change of attitude toward us. While we need not solace ourselves in the comforting thought that the world at large loves us, it is highly gratifying to know that people of dignified positions in the country have the vision to see our good works and the candor to admit it. If they do not glorify God for these things, we do with all our souls. It was the Savior who said to his disciples: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." In the light of these attainments, may we not all be profoundly grateful that the Lord has blessed our efforts and is beginning to magnify us before the world?

Greater than the subduing of the desert and the building of a mighty empire, is the fact that this people has been true to God and has kept his commandments with remarkable fidelity. I wonder if the spirit of optimism is running away with me when I think I see in these events the prophecy, in course of fulfilment, wherein it was foretold that Zion would be as a light set upon a hilltop that could not be hidden. I have in mind the special work of the Lord and his Church, not the great land of America and its mission and glorious destiny. Perhaps the Latter-day Saints are already moving toward their place in the world. Their place is in the front ranks of humanity, or I have mistaken the destiny of this thing called "Mormonism."

It required greater time for the world to arrive at a true appreciation of the Lord and his work in a former dispensation than has elapsed since he set up his Church in this dispensation. When Jesus came to earth he was rejected and despised of men. His disciples were put to death with pagan hate and fury. Generations passed and the Lord was more generally understood. Then he became enshrined in the hearts of humanity. His disciples were consumed by the devouring flames of martyrdom, and torn limb from limb by wild beasts in the amphitheatres of ancient Rome and Ephesus. Yet a few centuries run their course, and these same followers of their crucified Lord, are denominated Saints, and shrines and sacred temples are hallowed by their names. History is full of such anomalies and paradoxical reversals of sentiment. Such things occurred with respect to the Former-day Saints. It will be so with respect to the Latter-day Saints. Did not Josiah Quincy make that very prediction in the year 1844, with respect to the future position of Joseph Smith in History? Read his words:

"It is by no means improbable that some future text-book, for the use of generations yet unborn, will contain a question something like this: What historical American of the Nineteenth century has exerted the most powerful influence upon the destinies of his countrymen? And it is by no means impossible that the answer to that interrogatory may be thus written: Joseph Smith, the 'Mormon' Prophet. And the reply, absurd as it doubtless seems to most men now living, may be an obvious common-place to their descendants. History abounds in surprises and paradoxes quite as startling as this. The man who established a religion in this age of free debate, who was and is accepted by hundreds of thousands as a direct emissary of the Most High—such a rare human being is not to be disposed of by pelting his memory with unsavory epithets."

Time will work just such changes as here suggested. It was exactly so with respect to the discovery of America. One historian has very cleverly put it thus: "America was never sought, but stumbled upon; that when found it was not wanted; that much of its exploration was due to a persistent effort to find a way around it." Today it is the hope of the world.

History again repeated itself with respect to this Rocky Mountain region. No less authorities than Daniel Webster, and Senator Dickerson of New Jersey, placed so low an appraisal on this whole region of country that the one would not vote one cent from the public treasury to place the Pacific Coast one inch nearer to Boston; and the other said the great northwest would never be admitted into the Union because of its remoteness from the seat of government. To one it was the worthless wilderness of the west, to the other it was damned by distance. Today the world may see what misconceptions men had on the matter. And precisely in the same manner have these two great movements that of the Pilgrims and that of the "Mormon" pioneers been underestimated. When the Pilgrims and the Puritans left the shores of Europe in quest of a land where religious and political freedom might be enjoyed by them and their children after them, a bigotted and stupidly blind and self-satisfied world said, "good riddance for bad rubbish." So was it in the states of Missouri and Illinois, with respect to the "Mormon" people. About the only difference was that the thumb-screw and the rack were substituted with the violence of mobs and the orders of extermination issued by governors. Now the Pilgrims are held in veneration, and Americans are proud to trace their descent from those European outcasts of three centuries ago. With the steady movement of the "Mormon" people to their place in the world what will be the verdict of, perhaps, the very next generation? My faith is that vindication will completely come to them if they hold fast to their professions and ideals.

Already the very states that expatriated our first leaders have evinced a desire to have us return to those commonwealths and contribute to their upbuilding. The Latter-day Saints have proved themselves to be very successful empire builders. That great quality grows out of their belief in the family and the home, the sacred trinity of civilization—the father, mother and child. They, like the Pilgrims and Puritans, were home-builders. All things come from the home. That was the great factor of success in both colonizations, those of 1620 and those of 1847.

I well remember sitting in the east end of the Tabernacle gallery with the late Elbert Hubbard—he of the Philistine and East Aurora fame. He said, "Brother Morris, you people beat Denver, didn't you?" A little slow to grasp the philosophy of his observation, I replied, "No, Denver has nearly twice our population." Then came his answer to which I quickly assented: "They borrowed their wealth, you dug it out of the ground." Man, soil, labor—the agencies of creation. Freedom and the home are the agencies of human progress. A steadfast devotion to these same principles, along with industry, education, and true religion, are certain to lift a people to an exalted place in the world. And on the other hand that nation or people that turns against these things, the home, labor, education, religion, and human liberty, will rapidly sink into an ignominious oblivion. This great truth, affirmed a thousand times in history, is the real philosophy of history, as I see it. Where is Egypt? Babylon? Nineveh? Greece and Rome? Where is ancient Israel? A melancholy whisper from the dust. The winds of time have blown them all away. Because the agencies of their progress and elevation to splendor and glory were thrown away at the acme of their achievements. What a tragedy is the death of a nation. Yet, that the race might survive, these tottering empires, full ripe to destruction, must crumble into dust. I am reminded of the lines of Byron:

There is the moral of all human tales;
'Tis but the same rehearsal of the past.
First Freedom and then Glory—when that fails,
Wealth, vice, corruption—barbarism at last.
And History, with all her volumes vast,
Hath but one page.

May not a people some day learn these great truths from history and avoid the pit-falls that have completely engulfed and swallowed up all there was of national glory in the past? May not some nation ultimately learn the lesson of life and perpetuity in the earth? These questions lie close to the hearts of the Latter-day Saints because of a belief they have in their destiny and enduring mission in the earth. They believe they represent the Kingdom of God on earth, which Kingdom "is never to be thrown down or given to another people."

Other peoples have held similar views with respect to their high destiny. The ancient Jews were fondly looking forward to the coming of their Messiah. They believed that his coming meant the elevation of their race to world supremacy. But when he did humbly come they knew him not. Even the gentile governor evinced more faith in him than did they. For Pilate pleaded his cause against the Jews themselves. Said he, "Whom will ye that I release unto you, Barabas or Jesus?" And they yielded to the demands of the rabble and cried, "Release unto us Barabas! As for Jesus, crucify him, crucify him!" Pilate remonstrated with them, saying, "What evil has he done?" But they cried the more, "Let him be crucified!" Then the Pagan magistrate, or governor, said, "I am innocent of the blood of this just man." And the answer came back, "Let his blood be upon us, and our children after us, release unto us Barabas!" So sealed they their doom. History has but one page for Judah from then till now. "The wandering Jew." A man without a country; a hiss and a by-word among men. Jewish blood has drenched the soil of every European and Asiatic country during the two-thousand intervening years.

The Jews are still in darkness with respect to their Messiah. His message was turned to the Gentile nations and blindness was given to Judah for a season. "The last shall be first and the first shall be last." Centuries past, and the Gentile nations perceived the appeal of his message and turned to him. Then as Europe emerged from the darkness of the "night time in history" great churches arose in the earth and built temples for his worship. Empires are overthrown, in his name; continents are reclaimed from heathenism for his glory; and for generations he has been held in his place as the Savior and Redeemer of men. Time brought about the change. Truth and principle won the inevitable victory. It must always be so. It will be so in the future. The conquest of truth is eternal. He who was rejected and despised of men becomes the chief corner stone. Ultimately every knee shall bow and every tongue voluntarily confess the Kingship and Messiaship of the Man of Sorrows, who was crucified between two thieves on Golgotha's hill. But before that day shall come the Jews will be gathered in unbelief. In a most remarkable manner that gathering has already commenced, as one of the outcomes of the great war. Jerusalem is being redeemed from the mercilessness of Gentile rule under the unspeakable Turk, whose rule has well-nigh been supreme and continuous for a thousand years. The gates of the Ancient City are now thrown wide open to the children of the patriarchs of old, and a remarkable migration has already set in for that place. The City of David will be restored to beauty, and the country will again flow as with milk and honey. Then will the gospel be taken to them, and a partial conversion, at least, will be brought about as they cry out, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Not until that conversion is brought about will they "look upon Him whom they have pierced," and ask, "What are these wounds in thine hands?" To which the answer shall be, "These are the wounds I received in the house of my friends; I came to my own, and they received me not." Their poignant anguish will then draw forth his divine compassion and he will be their God and they will be his people. But, O what a price shall they have paid for their perversity and unbelief.

The history of Israel is, in a measure, the history of all other races. But shall there not ultimately be an exception to the rule? In the light of history, there is little ground for basing such a hope, we admit. But the word of the Lord has been spoken concerning his people and his purposes. If the end is attained, it will be by the simple means of virtue, obedience, industry, and human service of the highest order. The Lord has assured the salvation of the earth at his coming, providing the hearts of the children of men shall be turned to the eternal welfare of their fellows, both those who have gone before and those who are to come, when men shall seek the well being of their fellows and bury selfishness. But the thing of vital interest to us is, how shall we avert the disasters that have been the fate of other people? The lesson seems to be obvious. Our people were taken through a school of experience that ought to make the lesson a lasting one. It has been written in blood and tears and in sacrifice and patience. The school of experience is calculated to make men strong and powerful to resist.

Emerson set forth this doctrine perfectly in the four lines which opens his essay on Self Trust. They are:

"Cast the bantling on the rocks,
Suckle him with she wolf's teat;
Wintered with the hawk and fox,
Power and speed be hands and feet."

Men grow strong and powerful as they learn to do things for themselves. The administration at Washington seemed cold and unsympathetic in its answers to our appeal for help when it said, "Your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you." Yet that is similar to the attitude of the Creator, out on the border of time, when he drove man from the Garden of Eden and set him to work in the spirit of self reliance and conquest. The fiat of Eden, "Go forth and multiply and replenish the earth, conquer it, and subdue it and have dominion," as well as the sentence which soon followed it, vis: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread," seemed very severe and harsh. Time and accomplishment have taught men that those were kind words, in the light of the blessings which came from the results of their being chosen by the Deity for the training of the human race in the beginning. And that there might be no retreat back into Eden's Elysian bowers, a Cherubim, with flaming sword, was placed at the Gates of Paradise. So, God apparently intended that we should be outside of Paradise. None of us will doubt the successfulness of the Deity, in that intention, and in a wholesome confession we will also admit that to the healthy, virile man, conditions subsequent to Eden were far better for man than Eden itself. His progress was all attained on this side of Paradise.

These are the things which account for the greatness of the Pioneers. But shall wealth, and luxury, and self-indulgence effeminize their descendants who have, in a large measure, been deprived of that kind of education? Already there are disquieting symptoms manifest in the present generation. To be like the rest of the world would be to the Latter-day Saints a lowering of their standards and a repudiation of their ideals. Young men and young women of "Mormondom" we have been taught the principles of Everlasting Truth. And they will stand for ever. If we wish to stand likewise, we must grapple to our souls these true principles. They are, faith in God, and obedience to the gospel. No amount of learning, or philosophy, can take their place. Constant repentance from sin, and a successful forsaking of sin. Can a man take fire to his bosom and not be burned? The youth of today who takes a compromising view on the matter of chastity is playing with fire. Nothing but the providences of God will save him from the burning. We must cherish virtue as dearer than life, or we are not true to the faith of our fathers. We cannot retain that beautiful, Christian spirit, which is strength unto victory, if we cease to be a praying people—a people who pray always, in public and in private. "Prayer is the Christian's vital breath." I have heard groups of boys and girls of our faith confess their abandonment of some of these Christian virtues which are so essential to their happiness here and hereafter.

We should hold to the sanctity of the marriage relationship and not shun the responsibilities of parenthood. In this sacred institution, ordained of God and honorable withal, lies the power of life and death to the individual, as well as to the race. Its preservation, in unsullied purity, is the supreme duty of every generation. Lives of self-restraint, and temperance in all things are not only true as the word of God to us, but the fate of races proclaims them to be everlastingly safe. Service for others is the highest evidence of the love of God. What a fine tribute was paid to our people this morning in the statement by President Grant that we annually contribute by sacrifice, and actual expenditure, two million dollars in carrying the gospel message to the world. There is real altruism. The preaching of the word to the world is a great duty resting upon us, but a still greater duty is to inculcate the principles of the Faith in the lives and characters of our children. I am convinced there is occasion for concern in this regard. It is my strong conviction that the outlines for every class, studying the gospel in the several organizations of the Church, should pay attention to the principles of our faith in every lesson recital. I find that children, at the time of baptism, are in many instances, entirely uninstructed in the meaning and sacredness of that holy ordinance. These are some of the disquieting symptoms that my work in the Church is constantly bringing to my attention. I throw out these suggestions in the hope that the family and the priesthood and the auxiliary organizations of the Church will see to it that the Savior's parting injunction to Peter may be carried out in this dispensation, viz: "Feed my lambs."

May the Lord God of our fathers keep us in his good favor, and may we, through steadfast devotion to him, move steadily on to our place in the world, not that we may glorify ourselves, but do greater service to mankind, and glorify our Father who is in heaven. In Jesus' holy name I ask it. Amen.

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

Surely time has been kind to the Latter-day Saints. I have believed always that time is on the side of right and truth; and those who hold the truth, though misunderstood, can rest contented that time will vindicate them.

I remember an experience in preaching to the public in the open,

THE KEOKUK DAM FORETOLD BY JOSEPH THE PROPHET.

I remember an experience in preaching to the public in the open, when my soul was thrilled with the evidence that God was vindicating his work. It was during the course of some of my early missionary experiences, I was permitted to visit Nauvoo, Illinois. It was on the occasion when there was a gathering of the Military Tract Press Association, being the newspaper men of the western part of the state of Illinois, who met in Nauvoo. They were wearing a badge, upon which was a cut of the Nauvoo Temple, and a description of that house.

I listened to a paper read by one of the editors. He traced the gathering of the Latter-day Saints to Nauvoo, from other sections, told of the rise of the work in that city, the building of the city until it became a city of considerable note, there being twenty thousand people in the city of Nauvoo when Chicago, on the north, was but a village, and St. Louis, on the south, a trading post; and Nauvoo, he said, might have been the great city of the Middle West if the "Mormons" had been allowed to remain there. He told of the prophet's plan to cut a canal across the horseshoe bend of the river and make the lower portion of that city into a splendid commercial center, with the residences and public buildings upon the hill, and the farms extending onto the prairies around it. He also called attention to the prophet's project in a petition which he sent to Congress, asking that Congress should erect a dam at Keokuk, Iowa, to back up the waters of the Mississippi river over what was known as the Rapids, and that by reason of the construction of the dam, greater water power would be developed, and locks could be installed that would enable boats to go over the rapids. The prophet estimated, in his petition to Congress, that the dam would cost approximately $7,000,000. And then the gentleman called attention to the recent completion of the dam at the identical site where the prophet forecast it. And later I had the privilege of going down and inspecting the dam, wonderfully built, at the very place, for the purpose of furnishing the locks that would lift the boats up into the higher water to pass over the rapids. And tremendous electric power, power which the prophet could only have forecast by inspiration, was there developed and disseminated in a radius of 400 miles away from that great power site that now is established in connection with the dam at Keokuk—and, strange to say, also, the cost of construction was but slightly in excess of $7,000,000.

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS DRIVEN FROM NAUVOO.

After reciting the prospects that were before early Nauvoo, he then told of the prejudices that drove the "Mormons" from that district, and that after they were driven away, those who came in possession of their property did not esteem it of sufficient value to protect the central building, Nauvoo Temple, and through their vandalism, they set fire to it.

But I thought I saw the hand of the Lord in this, and how that he has always made the wrath of man serve him. I felt grateful in my heart that the Nauvoo temple was destroyed, for, unlike its predecessor, the Kirtland temple, it was built for the sacred ordinances of the work of the house of God, while the Kirtland temple was built as a place where these sacred things might be revealed. There was no vestige of any of the interior of the Nauvoo temple left. But, he said, while the blackened walls of the building yet stood, steamboats stopped half a day at the wharf to allow passengers to go up and view the ruins. He remarked that if the building had been preserved, it would have been of great value to that city. He then called attention to the fact that the city had gone down in numbers from its once beautiful Nauvoo of 20,000 people to 1,200 souls, and not a railroad yet.

THEIR JOURNEY WEST—TWO SCENES COMPARED.

And then he traced the Latter-day Saints across the prairies of Iowa into the fastnesses of these mountains, where, he said, wherever they went, the favor of God seemed to go with them. They made the wilderness to blossom as the rose; and while their enemies thought they would perish in the barren, desolate wilderness, or be destroyed by savages or wild beasts, yet they survived and prospered and flourished.

Then he said, when we look at these two scenes, surely we are forced to conclude that there was grave doubt as to whether God wanted the "Mormons" driven away. "If he did want them driven away," he observed, "why doesn't he give today's Nauvoo a broader hint that it was all right. Maybe," said he, "God loved the 'Mormons' better than he does bigots and vandals." I heard that statement in the city of Nauvoo; and in conversation with many of these gentlemen, they said that the only hope of that country was to have the "Mormons" return again, and there wasn't anything in the way of our coming back; and in my heart, I am sure I express the sentiment of President Grant and the other brethren who have referred to our history and experiences in those states that we have no feeling of animosity nor bitterness in our souls. We pity them, we sorrow for their mistakes, and they today are the losers, while, as Elder Morris has said, we have profited by their action.

DECLARING THE GOSPEL IN THE ILLINOIS STATE CAPITOL.

I remember going from Nauvoo over to the capitol of the state, Springfield, Illinois, and holding a conference of missionaries from northern and southern Illinois. And I remember that two of us, myself and companion, who had charge of these two districts, applied to the governor of the state. It was considerable nerve, I will grant you; but in my youth I was zealous and was willing to ask for anything—and we had the nerve to ask the governor of the state of Illinois to give us the State Capitol building in which to hold a "Mormon" conference. Well, he happily surprised us by granting us the privilege, and that without a dollar's cost to us. We were permitted to use the Hall of Representatives; and before large numbers of people, who filled that hall, we discoursed upon the principles of the glorious, restored gospel and bore witness and testimony that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that the Book of Mormon was true. My soul was thrilled, because, I remember, as I looked about that place and saw on the one side of the rostrum a life-sized portrait, full length, of Abraham Lincoln and on the other side a life-sized portrait of Stephen A. Douglas, I could not help but wonder in my soul, What does Stephen think about it now? For it was in this identical place that Stephen A. Douglas delivered his address on the "Mormon" question, while running for the Presidency of the nation, and proposed that if elected he would apply the knife to this pestiferous cancer "Mormonism," which was a growth upon the body politic, and he would burn it out and destroy it. Well, he did not live long enough to do that, and "Mormonism" came back to his home, into the very place where he was eulogized by his associates for his stand against this work, and yet, here we were, peacefully, at the kindness of the officials of that state, permitted to declare again the glad news that the God of heaven had spoken to Joseph Smith, and that we had a message for all men.

DECLARING THE MESSAGE ON THE STEPS OF THE STATE CAPITOL.

I remember that on the Sunday night of that conference the hall was not large enough to admit all the people who attended, and so we retired to the steps of the capitol, and there were more than a thousand people seated upon those steps when we delivered again the message to them. And that is the outdoor meeting that I had in my mind as I began to speak to you.

While thus addressing these people, I saw by my side, at the entrance of the building, on the public square, the only remaining perfect stone, known as a sun stone, from the Nauvoo temple. There were twenty-four of them, weighing above a ton each, placed upon the top of the twenty-four hewn pilasters of the temple. I had seen portions of these stones elsewhere, but none of them perfect like this, and this was the property of the state, preserved by the state, and guarded by the state against vandalism. Well, I say, as I saw these things, my soul was stirred, and I said, surely God is at work moulding the sentiments of men, altering their will and purpose for the accomplishment of his will and his purpose.

A TEMPLE WILL BE BUILT IN JACKSON COUNTY, MO.

I remember in the city of Independence, to which President Grant made reference this morning, the feeling and the sentiment of the people are friendly toward the Latter-day Saints, that one of the prominent gentlemen of that city, in the commercial club, said to me that he would be glad to see the "Mormons" build their contemplated temple in Independence, and suggested that he thought they could raise $100,000 in Independence to help us build it. That temple will be built, as well as other things that have been projected by the inspired servants of God, for the Lord knows how to work it out. All we need to do, my brethren and sisters, is to keep on the Lord's side and make him our friend, stand in his favor, keep his commandments, and he will work out the salvation of Zion and her redemption. It is a glorious thing to be alive in this dispensation, to live on the earth today, a glorious thing to live in America, a wonderful thing to live up here, where the Lord appointed the gathering place of his people in the tops of the mountains.

THE MERCY OF GOD SHOWN TO THE SAINTS.

These are the last days, days when the judgments of the Almighty shall be poured out upon the nations of the earth, and the Lord has promised protection to those who would respond to the call—"Come out of her, O ye my people, that ye may escape from the judgments that are to come." He had in mind the need of protection and security and safety for such a people, and so he brought us here, even though it were unwillingly, and as Brother Morris suggested, "we came here willingly because we had to." But we have not had to wait long to see the mercy of the Lord. I thought a few weeks ago, while we were gathering contributions in our special fast meeting for the aid and relief of the distressed in the European nations, how the hearts of the Latter-day Saints, as they gave, should swell with joy to know that the merciful Father had brought our fathers away from those lands, away from the place of distress and of famine. And I want to tell you that these are but the beginnings of troubles that shall come. O, that they might be stayed, that they might not fall upon the children of men! But light has come into the world, and by reason of the fact that light is in the world, and men have sinned and are sinning against that light, they cannot escape the indignation and wrath of an offended Father, who has been long-suffering and patient toward the children of men. I am sorry to say it, but it is the truth; these are but the beginnings of days of sorrow and distress. We and our children shall rejoice in the years that are to come that our fathers and and mothers had no place to rest in peace or in security, but they had to come here. This is the place! Thank the Lord that we did not stay down in Missouri or Illinois. Already we have seen the hand of the Father. Surely it was a trial to those who were driven from Nauvoo and other places, to which Brother Morris has been calling our attention. Many of them, no doubt, thought the Lord had forsaken them, and yet they did not have to wait long in their mountain retreat to see behind a frowning Providence, his smiling face, having brought them to the only place in this country where there was peace, and where there was security and safety—for the homes they longed to stay with and the habitation of the Saints in that section became the very battle field between the North and the South. And so we are here through the mercy of our Father, for protection and safety against the days of trouble that are to come.

I am glad we did not go to Oregon. I have thought of it many times while traveling in that section of the country—because the Prophet sent a petition to Congress at the time the bill was under discussion to which Brother Morris has referred, asking for appropriations to establish military roads and posts along what was known as the Old Oregon Trail; and the prophet said he would furnish men cheaper than anyone else, and that when we were discharged, we would be near the country we wanted to go to. But the bill was defeated, and the military posts at that time were not established, and so the prophet's plan was not accepted. It might have perchance landed us in Oregon. That was not the place the Lord wanted us to be in, although Oregon was a good country. There would not have come the development to the Latter-day Saints in Oregon that we have received here in this country. It is true we might have become wealthy, for there was an abundance that nature had provided. They have today two-fifths of all the timber in the United States, in the state of Oregon. It has been a source of great wealth. There would have been no building of irrigation ditches, because nature provides an abundance of water, more than 90 inches of rain falls in the Willamette valley every year, enough to drown everybody if it did not run off. The streams were full of fish, and today the great salmon industries of that country are an added source of wealth not placed there by the hand of man. The forests were full of wild game, from which furs were obtained that established the Astor fortunes and others. And yet that was not the place. We would soon have been surrounded by the old enemy, and there would have been conflict and trouble, and maybe the Latter-day Saints would have become rich and forgotten the Lord. At any rate, we would not have done the work we have done here. Where nature does much for man, man is inclined to do little, or less; but where man has to struggle for his existence, there is the place where his physical powers are developed and his faith increased. There is the place where there is the possibility of growth such as cannot come in any other section of the country. And Theodore Roosevelt, the late honored President of the United States, said, in the great building across the way here, that it was not so much what the Latter-day Saints did as where they did it, that counted. And so it was here that we should develop physical strength and power, by industry, by labor, by toil, by frugality, such as we would not have had to face in any other portion of this western country, either in California or in Oregon. Then there would not have been those circumstances that called forth faith and led us to build a monument like this Sea-Gull Monument that is before us as evidence that here the power and mercy of God were given a chance, an opportunity to make themselves manifest. We needed him here, we had to depend upon him. I will tell you in the midst of prosperity, when men thrive, when everything moves well for them, there is always a natural tendency for them to forget the Lord, and to become self-sufficient and to be confident in themselves. It was so with the Children of Israel when they had before them the armies of the Egyptians and at their back the Red Sea, when they were in imminent peril and they could not help themselves—it was then in mighty faith they cried unto their Father in heaven, and he came to their deliverance, and the waters of the Red Sea were parted, and they were permitted, through his mercy, to be saved. And so it was in the day of their famine for food and for water in the wilderness. When they were in need he revealed himself, but in the days of their prosperity, they were not so near to him. And so in our history, in these trials and difficulties, we have gone to the Lord, or at least the Lord has provided the opportunity whereby we had to come to him, we had to depend upon him; and he has never deserted us nor left us alone in any of these times of trial and difficulty.

OUT OF DISTRESS GREAT GOOD SHALL COME.

There are days of trial undoubtedly ahead of the Latter-day Saints, days when their faith may be shaken, if it will be shaken. I earnestly pray that our Father shall keep such a guard over this Church, over the individual membership of it, that we will never be left to a feeling of absolute independence of him, that we will never become so prosperous that we will feel that we can get along without the Lord's blessing and favor; and if we have had days of difficulty—and we have, brethren and sisters—the whole world has been through days of stress and trouble, financial difficulty and depression, and it is not ended. Great nations that have never in many years been touched by poverty and by stress and by internal strife, today are being racked in the midst of these distressful conditions. England itself never was in a more serious condition than she is today, with millions of her workers on strike. No man can tell what the outcome of this trouble shall be. Thank the Lord that we live in the land of peace, in the land of security from these things, although we have not very much money just now, although we have not had a very prosperous season. But, my brethren and sisters, I bear witness to you that out of our present distresses, if we are distressed financially, great good will come; lessons that we need to learn, lessons of thrift, lessons of economy, lessons of trust, lessons of faith in the Lord, lessons that shall take away from our heart a feeling of greed and selfishness to want the last dollar, a feeling of sympathy for our brethren and sisters; that we shall be coming toward the point where we are to be our brother's keeper, where we may establish universal brotherhood rather than to be banded in groups contending against other groups, the motive of which shall be pure selfishness in our hearts.

IN THE FALL OF HARD TIMES LET US LEARN THRIFT.

Now, let us learn from the experiences through which we are going, lessons that shall be of value to us. Let us keep out of the bondage of debt; do not get the spending habit, so that if times of short years shall come, we will find ourselves in great distress. It is an excellent thing to save a little, to conserve what the Lord gives us, that if there shall come hard times, we will survive them, for I want to tell you we have not seen the last of hard times. The Lord wants to humble the earth and bring it to a condition of repentance. He knows how to do it; he has said in one of these revelations to the prophet Joseph Smith that days of famine would come, that by fire and hail-storm the crops of the earth should be destroyed; and if the crops of the earth for one season were destroyed, there would be such suffering as we have not dreamed of. And the Latter-day Saints, from the beginning have been taught to save a little, to conserve their breadstuff, so that they may have in their stores supply for man and for beast.

Now, you Latter-day Saints, rejoice in the habitations that have come to us in these mountains, cultivate every acre of ground you possibly can, save every head that the Lord gives you, both of cattle and of sheep, conserve it and preserve it, for it will be important in days that are to come, and do not feel that you won't survive. You will. The Lord is just teaching us lessons of thrift and of economy, and to listen to the council of those who preside over us in our wards and stakes.

A KEY TO SUCCESS.

My advice to the Latter-day Saints who are in debt is that whenever they harvest their crops of grain or shear their sheep, they sell what the Lord puts into their hands and do not speculate upon it, for the chances are it will bring you into difficulty. You cannot afford to speculate; it is one thing to know how to raise corn, cultivate the soil and tend flocks, and another man's business to know the markets. Now, if you will be wise in this respect, and if you are in doubt, I will tell you what to do concerning your labors upon the farm and in the business in which you engage and all things with which the Lord blesses you. I give you this key—you will find it in the 9th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, that you are to study out in your own mind the best thing, what you ought to do, and when you have reached your conclusion that, "this is the thing I will do about my farm," or sheep, or business, or something else—when you have reached your conclusion, go to the Lord and tell him what you have decided to do, and if that is the thing that you ought to do, he will cause that your bosom shall burn within you, that you will have the conviction, a testimony within your soul, and you will know that the thing is right. But if it is not right, he will take away the feeling to do the thing that you had contemplated to do, that you shall have a stupor of thought and will not have that feeling to go ahead, but shall reconsider it and counsel about it, and go again to the Lord, and go forward when we are sure we are right. But we are to get right, and we have the privilege to enjoy the spirit of inspiration from God. Keep close to him and he will guard us. I testify to you that God Almighty will put into the hands of this people all the means and the wealth and the power he can trust us with, if we will only keep the faith and keep from apostatizing and becoming a law unto ourselves and being selfish. He is just giving us today all we can stand. He will not give us more unless we will prove to him that we will serve him no matter what may come.

AN APPEAL TO THE SAINTS TO PROVE FAITHFUL TO GOD.

I pray earnestly that we shall go forth from this conference, when it is concluded, with a determination that we will show to our Father in heaven that we appreciate what he has done for our fathers, what he has done for us, in bringing us to this place, and that we will manifest that we have the same regard for him and his word that our fathers had, who served him in faithfulness, and whom he heard, and that we shall never lose sight of the fact that we are not here wholly to obtain the blessings of the wealth of the hills and of the valleys and of the things of this world, that these are mere stepping stones which the Lord has placed within our hands as means for our accomplishing his great purposes.

I want to read to you, in conclusion, a few words from the Book of Mormon. Here is a prophecy dealing with our time. You will find these words in the 14th Chapter of First Nephi, where Nephi speaks as follows:

"And it shall come to pass, that if the Gentiles shall hearken unto the Lamb of God in that day that he shall manifest unto them in word, and also in power, in very deed, unto the taking away of their stumbling blocks."

And among the gentiles who came to this country and their posterity were many of the house of Israel, and among them there were those who did listen and who did serve God, and who formed the nucleus of this, his great Church, and the stumbling blocks have been removed through the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and the revelations contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

"And if they harden not their hearts against the Lamb of God, they shall be numbered among the seed of thy father; yea, they shall be numbered among the house of Israel; and they shall be a blessed people upon the promised land forever: they shall be no more brought down into captivity; and the house of Israel shall no more be confounded."

O, how wonderful, that he who hath been with us and with our fathers, hath vindicated us, hath made us a promise, if we will be true to him he will see to it that we shall not be brought into bondage, nor be confounded! O, can we not trust him? Has he not vindicated us? Has he not been our friend? Has he not wrought out, when the circumstances made it difficult the salvation of this people? He surely has. Now let us not desert him, nor desert his word, for we cannot, in view of the light and the knowledge that have come to us, we cannot close our eyes to these things and become a law unto ourselves, and obtain the favor of Almighty God.

"And that great pit which hath been digged for them, by that great and abominable church, which was founded by the devil and his children, that he might lead away the souls of men down to hell; yea, that great pit which hath been digged for the destruction of men, shall be filled by those who digged it, unto their utter destruction, saith the Lamb of God; not the destruction of the soul, save it be the casting of it into that hell which hath no end;

"For behold, this is according to the captivity of the devil, and also according to the justice of God, upon all those who will work wickedness and abomination before him.

"And it came to pass that the angel spake unto me, Nephi, saying, Thou hast beheld that if the Gentiles repent, it shall be well with them; and thou also knowest concerning the covenants of the Lord unto the house of Israel; and thou also hast heard, that whoso repenteth not, must perish;

"Therefore, wo, be unto the Gentiles, if it so be that they harden their hearts against the Lamb of God;

For the time cometh, saith the Lamb of God, That I will work a great and a marvelous work among the children of men; a work which shall be everlasting, either on the one hand or on the other; either to the convincing of them unto peace and life eternal, or unto the deliverance of them to the hardness of their hearts and the blindness of their minds, unto their being brought down into captivity, and also into destruction, both temporally and spiritually, according to the captivity of the devil, of which I have spoken.

"And it came to pass that when the angel had spoken these words, he said unto me, Rememberest thou the covenants of the Father unto the house of Israel? I said unto him, Yea.

"And it came to pass that he said unto me, Look, and behold that great and abominable church, which is the mother of abominations, whose foundation is the devil.

"And he said unto me, Behold there are, save two churches only; the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the devil; wherefore, whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God, belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations; and she is the whore of all the earth.

"And it came to pass that I looked and beheld the whore of all the earth, and she sat upon many waters; and she had dominion over all the earth, among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.

"And it came to pass that I beheld the church of the Lamb of God."

He saw this day. He saw us, here, gathered as we are in the tops of the mountains.

"And it came to pass that I beheld the church of the Lamb of God, and its numbers were few."

Indeed, we are but few—as the President remarked this morning, but a handful in the midst of the mighty hosts that cover the earth's surface.

"* * * And its numbers were few, because of the wickedness and abominations of the whore who sat upon many waters; nevertheless I beheld that the church of the Lamb, who were the saints of God, were also upon all the face of the earth."

And so we are, and in nearly every land of the earth today, our missionaries—almost back to our original numbers, a little more than 1700,—are in the various nations of the earth, declaring this day the message of life and salvation.

"* * * And their dominions upon the face of the earth were small."

Great as they are, still they are small in comparison to others.

"* * * Small, because of the wickedness of the great whore whom I saw.

"And it came to pass that I beheld the great mother of abominations did gather together multitudes upon the face of all the earth, among all the nations of the Gentiles, to fight against the Lamb of God."

If we have not been through that experience, with a combination against us everywhere, with forces arrayed in our great gatherings such as the world's great Christian Citizenship Conference and others! No matter what else they may disagree upon, on one point they are always agreed, to fight the "Mormons."

"And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld the power of the Lamb of God, that it descended upon the saints of the church of the Lamb, and upon the covenant people of the Lord, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth; and they were armed with righteousness and with the power of God in great glory.

"And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth.

"And as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spake unto me, saying, Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things;

"And when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the devil, then, at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants, which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel."

We stand in that day, when the favor of Almighty God shall be poured out upon his Church in greater abundance than it has ever been. We shall make progress which shall far excel the progress and advancement of the past, if we serve our heavenly Father and do not desert him. And all the promises he has made from the earliest day until this time, concerning the redemption and establishment of his righteousness in the world, are to come to pass not only by this power upon his people, but by reason of his chastisement that shall be upon those who do not serve him.

CLOSING TESTIMONY.

This is God's work. He is in it. He is with those who lead it, I know. The light is in the ship. The great and glorious caravan, the Church of the living God, is moving onward and forward to the accomplishment of its great purposes. And let the dogs bark. They amount to little when they fight God, for they are fighting Him when they fight this work. And we will not amount to much except we be true to this work, for it is God's, and he will not be mocked. When we have light and knowledge, there comes responsibility. Let us each assume it, do our part, get our homes, and with all our hearts serve him, as we never have done before, and set our houses in order and prepare ourselves that we may be worthy his favor to escape the judgments that are yet to come.

For, as I have already remarked, I wish I could say to you that we have seen the end, but I am sorry to say we have but seen the beginning, and yet, so far as this people are concerned, they shall be immune against them, if they will serve God and keep his commandments; for he who hath delivered us, and who hath been the friend of our fathers, he who hath made the wrath of man to serve him, and hath vindicated his servants and exalted his work, will be with us to our redemption and salvation, if we are willing that he shall do it.

May the Lord help us, that we may find favor in his sight, continue to be his people, approved of him, and escape his disfavor and the judgment that shall come upon the wicked and the unrepentant and the rebellious, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."
Benediction was pronounced by Elder Junius Romney.

SECOND DAY

The forenoon of the second day was devoted to a special priesthood meeting held in the Assembly Hall at 10 o'clock a. m., Monday, April 4, 1921.

AFTERNOON SESSION

President Heber J. Grant called the congregation to order at 2 o'clock. The building was comfortably filled with representatives and Saints from all parts of the Church.

The congregation sang, "Do what is right."

Prayer was offered by Elder James W. Lesueur, President of the Maricopa stake of Zion.

The congregation sang, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord."

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

In common with all the general assemblies connected with our great conferences, this meeting is open to the public, to non-members as well as to members of the Church; and we welcome the visitor, the inquirer, the investigator particularly, and those who are called, conventionally, the strangers within our gates. But I take it to be a self-evident fact that the very large majority of this vast assemblage comprises Latter-day Saints, those who have come in at the door, those who have received the message of salvation gladly and have availed themselves of it, those who have complied with the requirements laid down by him whose Church this is and whose name it bears, as conditions for membership therein.

These are they who have had and have a living faith in God the Eternal Father and in his literal Son Jesus Christ, our Lord and Redeemer, and in the Holy Ghost, the third Personage in the Godhead.

These are they who have become keenly conscious of the need of repentance, and who have in fact become repentant and have offered unto the Lord that most acceptable of offerings, surpassing all the slain bullocks and rams and other bleeding victims on the altars of Israel, under the law of Moses, namely, a broken heart and a contrite spirit.

These are they who have humbled themselves, submitting themselves to the hands of men holding authority of God, commissioned by Jesus Christ, and who have been severally by such a one laid beneath the water, and who have come forth out of the water, as though resurrected from the dead, being thus baptized for the remission of their sins.

These are they who have had hands laid upon them in the authority of the Holy Priesthood, for the bestowal of the right and title to the companionship of the Holy Ghost.

WE REJOICE IN THE FORGIVENESS OF SINS.

We have good reasons to rejoice. What boon of greater worth could be offered unto man than the forgiveness of his sins, with the innumerable attendant blessings; to be made eligible for pardon, for acceptance by and before the Lord? To such I need not preach the gospel of baptism, for ye have been baptized. I need not dwell upon the requirements respecting faith and repentance, for ye have manifested the one and the other; but I address myself, nevertheless, more particularly to the Latter-day Saints present, and what I shall say to them I am quite sure will hurt none others who may be with us, our welcome visitors who have not yet come into the Church, who have not yet complied with the requirements laid down by the Lord, our Master, as the conditions of citizenship in the kingdom of God.

Yes, we have been baptized for the remission of our sins. To remit, in the sense in which we speak of sins being or having been remitted, is to grant pardon for the offense, and to annul, suspend, or render inoperative the penalty which otherwise would have been inevitable. A question arises in my mind. Are we, you and I, Latter-day Saints, retaining the remission of our sins which we received through obedience to the law of God?

ARE WE RETAINING THE FORGIVENESS OF SINS?

Remission, the pearl of great price, was ours. It is a fit subject for individual inquiry—Is it now yours and mine? Is it ours still?

The righteous Nephite, King Benjamin, toward the close of a forceful address, which he offered on the occasion of his yielding up the authority of kingship unto his son, admonished the people most earnestly to retain the remission of sins which they had received through their baptism, to make it perpetual. And Alma, prophet, high priest, and chief judge, rejoiced when he found that a great part of his people had verily retained the remission of their sins. I refer you to the Book of Mormon, Mosiah, chapter four, verse twenty-six, for the first instance, and to Alma, chapter four, verse fourteen, for the second. Neither you nor I will waste time by reading it again, nor in pondering upon the principle embodied therein—the retention of the blessing of remission of sins.

But perhaps one may ask: Having received a remission, are we not forever entitled to it? Is it possible that God can give and then take back? Let us rather say, it is possible, and all too commonly a reality, for men to receive and then to forfeit. You note that baptism for the remission of sins is the first ordinance specified and the third principle named in our ordinary summary and arrangement of the principles and ordinances of the gospel. It has been beautifully called the gate to the kingdom, whose keeper is the Holy One of Israel. Blessed is he whose sins are forgiven, remitted; but this remission comes as no capricious act, as no favor in the sense of a discriminatory gift, even from God; for he is a just God and he remits sins according to the law of God, which combines both justice and mercy.

The mercy of God is extended unto those who make themselves eligible to receive the gift. God desires to be merciful to us and oft-times we block his way. He desires and yearns to bless us in some particular, and oft-times we make it impossible for him so to do, because we do not comply with the conditions that render us eligible for that exercise of the divine power.

THE LORD CAN GIVE AND RECALL, PRONOUNCE AND CHANGE.

That the Lord can pronounce and change, that he can give and recall, is attested by scripture after scripture. There comes to my mind the parable spoken by the Son of God while He was in the flesh, known to us as the parable of the unmerciful servant, in which we find that though one was forgiven, that forgiveness was revoked, because he forfeited his right to it. He did not retain it, he did not keep it. Not to take time here to read it in full, I commend the parable to you for perusal. You will find it recorded in the eighteenth chapter of Matthew, beginning with the twenty-third verse. It tells the story of a man who was deep in debt. He owed his creditor the enormous sum of ten thousand talents, and being unable to pay he was greatly disturbed when his lord called for payment, and he pleaded for time saying: "Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all." Now, the lord of that servant was moved with compassion and loosed him and instead of giving him time in which to pay, he forgave him the debt, so merciful was he, so full of kindness and goodness, almost above that of men. But that same servant went out, and, meeting on the way one of his fellow-servants who owed him a paltry hundred pence, seized him by the throat and said: "Pay me what thou owest," and the fellow-servant fell down at his feet and besought him, saying: "Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all." One would have thought that the very similarity of the plea of the small debtor, in words so like those of the plea he, the greater debtor, had made immediately before, would have moved him to remembrance, but he would not, and he cast his fellow-servant into prison, according to the law of that day, whatever we may have to say as to the justice of it. When the other servants saw that they were sorry, and came and reported the matter unto their master. Then the lord of those servants, after that he had called the unmerciful one, said unto him: "O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me: Shouldst thou also not have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee? And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him. So likewise shall my Heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every man his brother their trespasses."

The sin of unforgiveness, hardness of heart, cruelty, herein exemplified, is but a type of sin in general. Let us note the fact that though the lord of that servant had forgiven him his debt, had canceled it in fact, yet when he learned that that servant was no longer humble, that he did not live so as to be worthy of the mercy extended to him, he reversed his act of remission, recalled his forgiveness and demanded of the wicked one payment in full. The blessings of the Lord are always conditional, the condition being our living up to the requirement making us fit recipients of blessing.

The act of baptism does not simply blot out the sins of the past and enable us to begin with a new start, but it provides that if we have submitted to baptism worthily, we are entitled to remission of sin, that is, if we try to do our best, so as to be worthy of that boon.

It is not required nor is it allowed that we shall be baptized over and over again with the thought of wiping out our sins up to date; but it is ordained of God that having been baptized, after manifesting true faith and sincere repentance, if we shall live to be worthy of the remission of sins, through continued repentance, through our unfailing efforts to overcome, through our course of good works, doing unto our neighbors as we would have them do unto us, and in short, through our continued compliance with the commandments of God, we shall have our sins remitted, if they be not so heinous as to be unforgivable.

AN ILLUSTRATION FROM MODERN SCRIPTURE.

The scripture I have cited is ancient; the parable, while truly as applicable today as ever, is nevertheless many centuries old, so far as its record is concerned. In this very day in which we live the Lord has spoken, and that very definitely, concerning this matter. We find recorded in the 56th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants: "Behold, I, the Lord, command, and he that will not obey shall be cut off in mine own due time, and after that I have commanded and the commandment is broken." It is necessary to bear in mind, as the first paragraph indicates, that this revelation is addressed to the people of the Church:

"Hearken, O ye people, who profess my name, saith the Lord your God." Unto them he declares that the Lord does command, and he that will not obey will be cut off in the Lord's own time. Now please note the next verse.

"Wherefore I, the Lord, command and revoke, as it seemeth me good; and all this to be answered upon the heads of the rebellious, saith the Lord."

Only the rebellious, those who will not obey the commandments of God are to be thus dealt with, are to have their blessings revoked; only these will forfeit the blessings to which they were entitled. In another revelation given shortly after that, Section 58, the Lord takes people to task because they were in the habit of saying—and he might well take some of us to task, for we still say it—that the Lord doesn't keep his word, that he makes promises and fails to fulfil them. The Lord makes explanation; let me read a few verses leading up to that particular declaration:

"Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness;

"For the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good they shall in nowise lose their reward.

"But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.

"Who am I that made man, saith the Lord, that will hold him guiltless that obeys not my commandments?

"Who am I, saith the Lord, that hath promised and hath not fulfilled?

"I command and a man obeys not, I revoke and they receive not the blessing;

"Then they say in their hearts, this is not the work of the Lord, for his promises are not fulfilled. But wo unto such, for their reward lurketh beneath, and not from above."

THE LORD GIVETH AND TAKETH IN RIGHTEOUSNESS.

The Lord is guided by righteousness. In righteousness he giveth and in righteousness he taketh, and blessed be his name.

The sacrament of the Lord's supper has been provided as an ordinance whereby at frequent intervals we can testify unto the Lord that we are still under the covenant that we have made with him by baptism, even witnessing unto God, the Eternal Father, that we do always remember his Son, our Redeemer; that we still bear his name; that we desire and intend to keep the commandments which he has given unto us—and all for this great purpose, that we may always have his Spirit to be with us. Thus we may retain the blessings that we have hitherto received, making them ours throughout time and for eternity. And I cite you to one more scripture which, consisting of but few lines only, is perhaps the greatest declaration of its kind on record, and the best summary that I can possibly give unto you in connection with this thought, as recorded in the 82nd Section of the Doctrine and Covenants, 10th verse:

"I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."

Let us keep the commandments of the Lord. Then, by his own word, he is bound to give unto us the blessings that have been promised; but when we do not do what he says, when we go back upon our covenant, we forfeit. May we retain the remission of our sins I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

My beloved brethren and sisters: I have the honor, once more, of standing before you in the General Conference of the Church, in this great building that has witnessed so many gatherings of the Saints. I believe that all persons, making units of this congregation today, have come here with a prayer in their hearts that they may receive blessings, that they may receive new light and intelligence as a guide for their feet and a prompter for their conscience, to lead and direct them in the future, in the way of truth and right.

We have been favored with discourses from our brethren, and I believe that I echo the sentiment of every one, that we have received a blessing from the Lord, and the remarks and the sermons given by our brethren, leaders of the Church, have found a ready place in our hearts, because we are in need of this kind of instruction and in this way proper impressions are made on our lives, from time to time. I rejoice in being a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I remember very well the day I was baptized, when eleven years of age. I missed the opportunity of being baptized sooner, or I didn't have an opportunity, for the reason that, when my father's family emigrated from the city of Nauvoo, just prior to his leaving his home in that city, he took my elder brother and my elder sister down to the Mississippi river and baptized and confirmed them members of the Church. I was only seven years of age and he explained to me that I could not receive baptism and become a member of the Church until another year. But I pleaded with him, and he finally yielded the point and took me into the Mississippi river and baptized me for my health. And that satisfied me for the time. An opportunity for baptism again did not present itself until I was eleven years of age.

I remember very well the day and the person who officiated. Doctor Orin P. Lee, was the one that administered to me that sacred ordinance. Just near by the bank of the creek where the baptism occurred lived my uncle, Phineas H.

Young. I returned to his home after baptism, and there I met with a man somewhat famous in the history of the Church, namely Oliver Cowdery, one of the three witnesses of the Book of Mormon, one who wrote the manuscript of the Book of Mormon as the interpretation fell from the lips of the Prophet Joseph Smith. Oliver Cowdery was numbered as the second elder in the Church at the time of its organization, in 1830, on the 6th day of April. He had left the Church some years after and had engaged in the practice of law. On one occasion an opposing counsel said: "How can you listen to a man who has proclaimed that he is a follower of Joseph Smith, the 'Mormon' Prophet? How can you accept of his testimony, when he is far off in his calculations of things that occurred in a most natural way, and he looks at things from a spiritual standpoint, so he claims, and was at one time an associate of Joseph Smith, the 'Mormon' Prophet, and received a revelation, so he states, from the Lord?" Oliver Cowdery, after the gentleman had exhausted his tirade of ridicule, arose to his feet and said: "May it please your honor, I was once a member of the 'Mormon' Church. I was associated with the Prophet Joseph Smith, but through my own weakness I have been disfellowshipped by that people, and I am sorry that this ever occurred." And with tears streaming down his face, he declared that if the opportunity ever presented itself, he would again ally himself with the "Mormon" Church. When he came up to Kanesville to visit, at the conference held in 1848, under the direction of Apostle Orson Hyde, he stopped at the house of my uncle, Phineas Young, and that is where I met him. Oliver Cowdery had come to Kanesville for the purpose of asking to be again admitted a member of the Church. He had repented, so he declared, and on the stand the following day, in making the request to President Orson Hyde, said: "I do not ask for place or power or station or any responsible position. All I ask is that I may be again admitted a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and die with my record a member of the Church." His request was granted and he returned to Richmond, Missouri, and in a few months, died and was buried there. Early in the 70's another witness, also one of the principal witnesses, Martin Harris, came to Salt Lake valley. He, too, had seceded from the Church. He came to Utah with a desire to again be identified with this people, and made his request to President Brigham Young. In bearing his testimony that day, I remember that he made these remarks: "I had the honor, said he, "of being the scribe for the Prophet Joseph Smith in translating a portion of the Book of Mormon, but through my carelessness and through my want of foresight, the manuscript that I had written was lost, and never regained, and I justly received censure and reprimand from the Prophet Joseph Smith. Now I have returned to the bosom of the Church with the hope and prayer in my heart that I may again be admitted a member. His prayer was also granted. Soon after he moved up to Clarkston in Cache Valley and died there, and his body was buried in the cemetery of that place.

The testimony of those two men, I have always remembered, and as they bore them personally they seemed overwhelmed with grief and sorrow to think they had forfeited their membership in the Church and their rank and their standing as they had it at first. Men who receive the testimony of the gospel, men who receive the witness of the divinity of the mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, men who receive a witness of the divinity of the Savior and his great mission, seldom see the way to repent after they have lost the faith, but these two men seemed to be specially favored of the Lord, and the gift of repentance had not entirely been blotted out from their hearts, and according to their prayers they were restored again as members of the Church.

I remember very well that soon after President Brigham Young had returned to Winter Quarters, from his pioneer visit to Salt Lake Valley, on the 5th day of December, 1847, the Twelve gathered in the house of Willard Richards, one of the Twelve Apostles, the one that was ordained in Manchester, England, in 1840. If you remember the history of this good man, he was chosen an apostle before he left for England, at the time of President Young's mission to that country, but was not ordained until they arrived in Manchester. There were five of the Council of the Twelve found in the city of Manchester at that conference, and the proposition was made that Willard Richards be ordained an apostle, there and then, making him the sixth member of the apostles in that old country at one time. He was accordingly ordained by President Brigham Young, the president of the Twelve Apostles. On this 5th day of December, 1847, the Twelve gathered together and chose and elected Brigham Young to be the prophet, seer and revelator to and president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in all the world—that was the exact wording. How this last sentence thrilled me. President Brigham Young chose for his counselors, Elders Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards. I know that the Saints universally acknowledged President Brigham Young as the president and leader of the Church, before he was called and set apart by the rest of the apostles, for when Colonel Allen, the United States enlisting officer, came up from Fort Leavenworth to Mount Pisgah, there were several of the Twelve encamped at that point. He made his errand known to them and asked if it were possible for him to get an enlistment of five hundred able-bodied men from the camps of the "Mormon" people, to go to Mexico to fight the battles of our country under General Zachary Taylor. The brethren listened to his request and then said: "We cannot decide this question for you, Colonel Allen. There is but one man that can decide it. That man is President Brigham Young. He is at the present time encamped near Council Bluffs, on the Missouri river. If you will take the journey with us, we will go to his camp, and you may ask him that question and obtain his answer for yourself." The question of raising five hundred able bodied men from the camps of the Saints thus leaving their wives and children and aged parents to the mercy of the camp of the plains, without a supply of food and clothing and covering, seemed appalling to everyone; and, as I remember, the majority of the apostles did not take the request kindly, but after discussing the matter, President Brigham Young said: "This call must be answered. We must furnish the men. It is a trial of our faith. It is a test of our loyalty, and we propose to furnish the men as the Government requires."

Many a test has come to this people, many a trial to their faith. In the loss of the Prophet Joseph Smith and the Patriarch Hyrum Smith, and then finally, as one leader after another had passed away, yet this eternal truth and testimony of President Brigham Young has always found a ready echo in the hearts of every Latter-day Saint. He said when the news of the martyrdom reached him in Boston, "although the leader of the Church, the Prophet Joseph Smith, has been taken away from us by violence, his blood has been spilled, he has sealed his testimony, but he did not take with him the Priesthood of the Son of God. That is still on the earth, the Twelve Apostles are still the representatives holding that power and that Priesthood, committed to them by the Prophet of the Lord.

And so it has been, from time to time, and today we are honored again with having a full organization of the First Presidency of the Church and the quorum of the Twelve Apostles. And always the Saints have recognized at a glance the leadership of the man that has been chosen to lead Israel in every age of the history of the Church; and today, my brethren and sisters, you are assembled here in this great conference, rejoicing in the fact that the Church is growing, is marching on, is increasing in strength and power, commensurate with the humility and the firm, determined action and devotion of its members. As they devote themselves to the cause, so the Lord increases his blessings upon them. So their reward is sure, as sure as they work for it unselfishly. Today we are requested to promulgate the principles of truth in our own communities. There are many non-"Mormons" living in our midst. The Seventies quorums have been requested to furnish missionaries to carry the gospel to these worthy citizens that have lived in our midst, some of them for many years past. I met one of our brethren recently who said: "I saw a gentleman who has been a neighbor of mine for years. Said he, 'I have been to your meeting tonight, and I didn't know before that the "Mormons" believed in Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world, and I did not know that you had any faith in Jesus Christ, that you taught that he died, that men might live.' 'Where have you been? Haven't you attended our meetings before?' 'No, this is the first time I have ever attended a "Mormon" meeting since I lived in your community.' The necessity of preaching the gospel here at home became apparent to the officers of the wards and the stakes of Zion, and now this movement of preaching the word to all of our neighbors and of giving them a chance to know of the divine calling of the Prophet Joseph and the result of his labors, and the doctrines that we believe in, will reach these people who live in our communities, who have not known it heretofore. And this I believe is a step in the right direction, and is going to result in very much good, and many people will be won to a knowledge of the truth without cost or without very much sacrifice of time and means. A soul here in Zion is just as precious as a soul that is saved abroad in the nations of the earth, where it takes many hours and days and weeks of time and considerable expenditure of money to convert each one. The principles of the gospel are just as acceptable to those who are honest in heart, who live in our midst, as those who live far away, and the elders seem delighted with the work that they are engaged in, and seem intent upon carrying the principles of the gospel to their neighbors, evincing, more than ever before, that they have accepted of those two great commandments given unto them: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul; and thy neighbor as thyself." May this be our prompting sentiment continually, that we seek the welfare of others, that we seek to serve one another, that we seek to do good to our fellow men and to win those who do not know the truth, to a knowledge of the same, at any sacrifice that we are called to make, devoting our time and our best energies to the spread of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, that we may stand approved and acquitted all the day long, and be acceptable to him, that we may have the spirit of the gospel within us continually, and the knowledge of its great truths burning within our hearts, desiring only to give these evidences to others that they may profit by them. I pray that we may be faithful to this end, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

Elder Orson F. Whitney, in the course of his impressive remarks yesterday afternoon, very solemnly declared, referring to our faith, our Church, and all that we believe and all that we are doing—"This is the work of the Lord." Now, is it? I wonder sometimes when we say those things, and when we listen to them, if we really gather into our consciousness all that that means; or whether, in many instances at least, it takes on the nature of a mere form of speech, and we fail to realize all that is involved in a declaration of that kind. I never arose before a congregation, perhaps, where I felt less disposed to undertake the task of speaking to the people than I do here and now, this afternoon. After Brother Young, of the First Council, was called to address you, and the likelihood of President Grant continuing to call upon the members of the First Council of Seventy to address you in the order of their standing, made it likely that I might be the next called upon, I have been able to think of nothing else but just this declaration that was made by Elder Whitney, and which in some form or other, has been expressed, I think, by every speaker in this conference; and since this is the only idea present in my mind just now, I propose to work upon that for the few minutes that I am to speak to you.

And now the question: Is this work we are engaged in the work of the Lord? And if it is, then just what is involved in that statement? Why, this is involved in it, to get over the grounds very hurriedly, and touching only the high points in relation to things. If this statement of our brethren, made in various forms, is true, then God the eternal Father, the Creator of heaven and earth, and of worlds and world systems, through Jesus Christ his Son—together with his Son Jesus Christ—appeared unto a mortal man, unto a young man, Joseph Smith, and the Father introduced, to him Jesus the Christ, He who was taken by cruel hands and crucified, as the scriptures say, for the sins of the world; and as he himself declared over here on the American continent, by his own mouth, that He was the Redeemer, and had been slain for the sins of the world. These two heavenly personages appeared unto this young man and proclaimed what they alone were competent to proclaim, that all the religions of the world were untrue, that men were teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, that they had forms of godliness, but denied the power thereof, and for him to follow after none of these, but giving him a promise that if he was faithful he would be chosen as an instrument in the hands of God for re-establishing the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and restoring the Church of Christ again in the earth. Now, if this work that you and I are connected with is indeed the truth, then that splendid but awful vision and announcement is a reality.

Next it is declared, as a truth, that a new volume of scripture was revealed—a book making known the history of nations that flourished in past ages upon the American continents, the ruins of whose civilization we are more or less acquainted with through its surviving monuments in various parts of America. It purports to be a record of the hand-dealings of God with millions of people who lived and died upon these western continents, among whom God raised up inspired men to teach and instruct them in righteousness; to tell them also of the plan of life and salvation devised from before the foundation of the world. These prophets held divine authority to teach the plan of life and salvation. Also in the Book of Mormon is an account of the most splendid vision that is of record, on the appearing of the resurrected Christ to man. He appeared to the survivors of the awful cataclysms and earthquakes and tempests and destructive storms that passed over these lands of America during the crucifixion and the entombment of the Christ, and proclaimed himself to be the life and light of the world and the savior of men. If what we say in our general testimony be true, then this volume of scripture, containing the testimony for God of sleeping nations, is a verity.

In connection with the Prophet Joseph Smith, three other men received divine testimony of the verity of that work; for three men, namely Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris, testified that an angel from heaven came down into their presence and showed to them the original plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. In their presence he turned over the leaves of this ancient record and they curiously observed the engraving and saw that it was of fine workmanship. This angel declared unto them that the book had been translated by the gift and power of God, and was true; while the very voice of God, Creator of heaven and earth, the sustaining power of all worlds, who holds them in exact balance, and has the universe under the control of his almighty will—He commanded them to testify of the truth of this record. If our testimony that the work in which we are engaged is the work of God is true, then the Book of Mormon is true, and all that is in it is true.

When the young men, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, were engaged in the work of translating the Book of Mormon, the question of baptism came up in their minds, its purpose, its form, what was accomplished through it. That question they referred through prayer, to the Lord. Then John, the Baptist, the one above all others who would know all about baptism and who would be a perfect instructor of that ordinance and doctrine, he whose hands held the body of the Christ, the Son of God, when he buried him in the waters of baptism—he came and gave instructions on this important subject, and directed these men to baptize each other; and conferred upon them the authority to preach repentance and baptize others. Again, if our testimony to this work is true, then Peter and James and John, who seem to have constituted an inner circle within the college of the Apostles in the days of the Christ, who were with the Christ on several special occasions and who seemed to receive special attention from him and privileges from the Christ—these three men, to one of whom the Christ had said: "I give unto you the keys of the kingdom of heaven"—these three apostles came and conferred the Priesthood after the order of the Son of God, upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery.

That is a verity if our testimony is true; and being true what an important thing it is! Inspired and instructed by the commandments of God, these men, now holding the holy apostleship, proceeded to organize once more the very Church of Jesus Christ upon the earth by divine appointment and under divine authority.

Subsequently, when the fulness of times for such things had come, then Moses, Elias and Elijah appeared in the Kirtland Temple and bestowed upon these men the keys of authority and power they held while they were on the earth. Moses restored the keys for the gathering of the children of Israel; Elias, perhaps the patriarchal order, together with the keys or authority that unlocked the knowledge that was to link together the families of men in all nations, and that the Lord shall at the last combine into one family all the children of men. Elijah restored those keys of authority that shall turn the hearts of the children to the fathers, and doubtless the hearts of the fathers to the children. All of these things, and each one of them, are true, if our general testimony is true. The renewal of the promises and the hopes and assurances of the resurrection from the dead included in the work we call the work of God, is also true. Our hopes in Christ Jesus our Lord are not limited to our hopes and visions of things in this our mortal life. We have hope anchors within the vail that hold. The vail is rent to our vision and we see a race redeemed and raised from the dead, for as in Adam all died, so in and through the Christ shall all be made alive. And the race shall be united—bound together in the golden chains of God's love and human love. The same unity that abounds and holds in the government of the universe, will obtain as to the race of men. A unity akin to that which unites in one the Holy Trinity—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Now, when we say that this Gospel, Church and priesthood of ours is the work of the Lord, that this is the truth, this is what we mean: All these things that I have enumerated, severally and collectively, are true. Being true, how splendid, how glorious all this is! What strength; what power; what faith; what hope; what unity; what benevolence; what love, ought to and will and does abound with a people whose faith is founded upon these great truths that are involved in our faith and in our Church! The world is beginning to take note of the effect of a people having such a faith as this, as it begins to be manifested in the lives of the Latter-day Saints; and the world is going to take more note and yet more note of this as the years pass. The little "all hails," now given to the successful system of the religion that is fostered and advanced by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is insignificant in comparison with that greater "all hail," that shall yet come to the work of God of which we testify.

For a moment let me call your attention to how this work has been built up by witnesses for God. When the Lord would commence this great dispensation of the fulness of times, a dispensation in which all other previous dispensations will come pouring into, as streams find their way to the ocean—when he would begin this great work of establishing faith in the world, he began by creating a witness for himself, one who could testify that he had seen, that he had heard, that he had received instructions from the very lips of the resurrected Son of God, and that in the presence of the Father—God raised up one who could go among men and testify that he had seen and heard and had been instructed by the God of the whole universe. God raised up that witness to himself, and though he was young and inexperienced, and though persecuted for his testimony, reviled and mocked, men could not move by one hair's breadth that witness for God from the truths that he had proclaimed. Unpalatable as it was to have to say to the inhabitants of the earth that they were all wrong, he did it, though it tested even his strength. He was a good and true witness.

Then when the Book of Mormon was brought forth, the Lord found and equipped with knowledge the three men whom he would have testify to the truth of the book; and these witnesses testified and were true to their testimonies. No matter what else happened to them, how foolish they may have been, or how stubborn they were as to other matters, they remained true to the thing that God had called them to be witnesses of. They were good witnesses and I do not know but what something of strength has been added to the weight of their testimony by reason of the experiences through which they passed, for in good report and evil report, in the Church and outside of it, they remained true and steadfast to that testimony which, from the nature of it, I cannot conceive how it could be possible for men to dare to depart from, and they not depart from it. Well, these three witnesses were commissioned to go and find twelve other witnesses, special witnesses to these great truths that God is unfolding in the dispensation of the fulness of times; and they found the twelve witnesses who became the twelve apostles of the Church, especial witnesses of the name of Christ in all the world, holding the keys of the ministry of the Church in foreign nations—in all the world; so that when the door of the Gospel is to be opened to any nation, one or more of these men holding these keys of authority and power, go to these nations and open the door of the Gospel formally, for the proclamation of the truth. There is a long list of such openings of doors of the Gospel to various nations, and in each case it has been done by one of these men holding this divine commission and authority. But you begin to see how the work is built up by witnesses. It will readily be seen how twelve men are not equal to the task of making proclamation of the Gospel in all the world; and so assistants are provided. Men are gathered into quorums of seventy, and each quorum is presided over by a council of seven men, a different presidency from any of the other quorums of the Church, and doubtless for the reason that these quorums need to be well nigh indestructible at the head, so that several of them may be called away and go upon missions for some length of time and yet not disrupt the organization. Well, these men are called to be especial witnesses of the Lord Jesus Christ in all the world, to testify of Christ as well as the twelve special witnesses, or apostles. They are to testify of his divinity, that he is indeed the very Son of God, chosen as the Redeemer of the world, in whose name only may the children of men hope for salvation; also they are to testify of the resurrection and the eternal life of man through Jesus Christ—that eternal life which, we are told, God, who cannot lie, promised before the world began. Well, these men, the twelve and the seventy, are chosen to be witnesses of these things which God is unfolding in the world. So, indeed, are we all witnesses—all have the right to have the witness of God's spirit to their own souls that all this mass and volume of truth is true, is the word of God; so that in a way all the Saints may receive the witness of these things, and stand up before each other and the world and say as Elder Whitney and the rest have said here, that this work is God's work.

Now, I happen to be one of the Seventy, one chosen to be officially a witness for the Lord Jesus Christ; and having reviewed all these developments of the work of the Lord, involving as it does this blessed thing to have our sins forgiven, and oh how much that means! It has been my fortune, good or ill, to come in contact with men whom I have seen laboring under a very agony of mental and spiritual distress because of their sins. I have seen them break down and cry out in their agony that they would be willing to give a right arm if only such, and such things as they had done could be undone. They would gladly give their lives if their hands could only be washed clean of the crimson stain of human life. I have seen men under the stress of agony until I have, in part at least, been led to appreciate how blessed the boon is that we may have forgiveness of sins. One other of the great gifts, and one of the greatest mercies of God, is to receive under the divine authority established here by the revelations of God, and existent in the priesthood, the right to be baptized of the Spirit that a baptism takes a poor human life up into union with the Spirit life of God. Who shall be able to tell how great that blessing is, to have God's strength become available to man as strength; his wisdom for guidance to become man's wisdom; God's strength to resist evil, his power to persist in good is given to man. What a boon it is to have one's spirit united with the Spirit of God by which we become spiritually alive, and restored to that blest state that men enjoyed before that thing we call the "fall" had happened. Now, in the presence of all this, I exercise the office of my calling as one of the witnesses of the Lord Jesus Christ concerning these things. Without argument, without debate, without even an elaborate statement of the things that are true, only having brought before your vision just how large a thing it is to say that this is the work of the Lord, and depending now upon the spirit that is within you, and by which you too know the truth, with nothing between us, standing more than heart to heart, spirit touching spirit, your spirit meeting mine, our spirits congenial to the truth and of such nature that when we hear the truth we know the truth; now, in this attitude, I solemnly declare to you that these things that make up our history, and make up the development of the Church and kingdom of God, as we know it, I say to you that each one of the great things, and above that, all of them together, are true. And I say it conscious that I am speaking where God hears and takes cognizance of things that are said, and will hold men to an accountability for what they say. I say unto you, in very deed, and out of a clear conscience, and with a consciousness of it being approved of God—I say to you, these things are true; and being true, how strong, and noble, and brave, and broad a people the Latter-day Saints ought to be!

O God, the eternal Father, in the name of thy Son Jesus, the Christ, our Redeemer, with all my heart and soul I thank thee for a knowledge of these great truths. Seal them upon our hearts. Let us, O Lord, gather unto our souls the strength and the power that come from thee; and Thine be the power and the glory forever and ever, worlds without end. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

CONCERNING THE JEWS.

Some of you may be familiar with the agitation that is going on at the present time, in the publications, against the Jewish people. There should be no ill-will, and I am sure there is none, in the heart of any true Latter-day Saint, toward the Jewish people. By the authority of the Holy Priesthood of God, that has again been restored to the earth, and by the ministration, under the direction of the Prophet of God, Apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ have been to the Holy Land and have dedicated that country for the return of the Jews; and we believe that in the due time of the Lord they shall be in the favor of God again. And let no Latter-day Saint be guilty of taking any part in any crusade against these people. I believe in no other part of the world is there as good a feeling in the hearts of mankind towards the Jewish people as among the Latter-day Saints.

The congregation sang, "Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder William L. Jones, President of the Moapa stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 10 a. m. Tuesday, April 5, 1921.

THIRD DAY

Conference continued in the Tabernacle, Tuesday morning, April 5, 1921, 10 o'clock.

President Heber J. Grant announced the opening of the service.

The congregation sang, "High on the mountain top."

Elder Andrew Kimball, President of the St. Joseph stake of Zion, offered the opening prayer.

The congregation sang, "O, say what is truth?" the favorite hymn of the late President Anthon H. Lund, as announced by President Heber J. Grant.

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

"Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head."

For a good many months we have been laboring as a people under distressing circumstances.

THE FINANCIAL CONDITION.

The financial conditions which have prevailed have brought many of us a keener appreciation of our reliance upon the Lord. Everywhere, so far as I know, throughout the communities that go to make up the body of the Church, the situation has been fraught with financial difficulty. Men have discovered that they could not continue as they had been wont to do, for the last several years, in high living, in more or less of extravagance, and sustain their financial positions. I have wondered if this lesson has not been brought to us for the purpose, in large measure, of vindicating the counsel and advice and the policies of the Church, extending over many, many years.

OUR TEMPORAL AFFAIRS TAKE ON RELIGIOUS SIGNIFICANCE.

It is sometimes said that we have a great economic mission. I think perhaps the use of that phrase is not calculated to define quite the exact situation, because I take it, the Church has no economic mission as such. The function that it plays in the economies of our people and of the world is a function that is merely coincident with its great purpose, which is to establish the kingdom of God and to provide, through the facilities which it offers, opportunities for the development of men and women in conformity to the principles and the truths of the everlasting Gospel. Our temporal affairs take on a religious significance and importance, not merely because they are temporal affairs, but because we interpret our religion in terms of life and living. There can be no salvation hereafter, in our conception of things, unless there be salvation here. We hope for the everlasting rewards which are to come to those who are faithful by the devotion of our lives to the service of our Master here on earth. It is because we so inextricably interweave our temporal lives with our spiritual ones that we regard our temporal affairs as being elemental in our spiritual salvation.

THE ECONOMIC MISSION OF THE CHURCH.

Having in mind this conception, the Church does have a great economic mission in the world and particularly among its people. I have had some opportunity in the assignments made to me by the presidency of the Church in the last several years, to make some observations with reference to the place and function of the Church in the temporal or financial affairs of the people, and I desire to take this opportunity to give to my fellow members of the Church the benefit of my own observations and my testimony upon this important subject—I say important because I recognize the fact that throughout the Church, among all men and women, their temporal or financial affairs constitute a very important part and feature of their lives.

The Church has always assumed a position of helpfulness. In order to render the service which it considers it ought to render, it has undertaken to give support to various commercial and economic enterprises in order to promote the general welfare of the people. No little criticism has been directed, both on the part of the membership of the Church, or at least a limited portion of the membership of the Church, and from outside sources, toward this engagement in economic affairs.

When we are confronted with adverse conditions we come to learn the advantage which accrues from the association of the Church in the business affairs of the people. I believe that aside from the great mission that the Church has performed in stimulating legitimate industry and enterprises among the people, the Church does now perform (and it is brought forcibly to our attention in these strenuous times), a great mission in stabilizing business of our communities. I give it to you as my deliberate judgment that had it not been for the influence which the Church has exercised in the fundamental business affairs of our part of the country during these strenuous times we would have seen catastrophes that would have made us tremble. It is my belief that were it not for the fact that the president of our own Church stands at the head of some of the commercial institutions of our intermountain country, they could scarcely have stood under the conditions which these hard times have laid upon us.

I regard the whole situation as a vindication of the inspiration that has come to the leadership of our Church. For my own part, I here and now repent of any thought or criticism that has ever been in my heart for the participation of the Church in the temporal affairs of the people, and I believe that the present situation warrants a similar attitude on the part of any man or woman in this Church who may have entertained the notion that it is wrong for our leaders to concern themselves with these temporalities that offer employment, and in a measure regulate and serve to provide our business opportunities.

THE ADVICE TO KEEP OUT OF DEBT, NOT GENERALLY LIVED UP TO.

The advice that has come to the people throughout these many years has been to keep free from the obligations of debt. A few have accepted the advice. Thousands have not. They find themselves in distressing condition at the present time. The vindication of that advice lies in the fact that, as a people, we would today be in a position of great advantage, we would be able to extend your economic advantage all over our intermountain country, we would be in a position to initiate new enterprises, we could reclaim and put to use many of our resources, if we had only accepted the advice. But we have not in the main accepted and lived up to that advice. In consequence we find that as a people, as a community, we are indebted, in sums of money that are almost staggering in their contemplation. At the present moment there is, owing to the Federal Reserve Bank, which is located in this district, and which serves the territory in which our people mainly reside, between thirty and forty millions of dollars, a large portion of which represents obligations of our people. We will have to pay that great debt.

WE MUST BE SAVING AND ECONOMICAL.

We will have to square ourselves with our creditors, and I know of only one way in which we can do it, and that is by adopting and putting into practice the counsel and the advice that has been given by the leadership of the Church for these many years. We must save, we must be economical in our living. We must patronize our home industries and institutions. I believe that it will be possible for us not only to pay off all the obligations that we owe, if we live according to the standards that have been set for us, but that it will be possible for us to continue the development of our resources and it will be possible for us to go forward and to initiate and maintain such enterprises as shall make for the general welfare of all the people. I propose that we take into our living some of the fundamental conceptions of our faith, and so enable us the better to follow this advice and counsel which has come to us from time to time.

OUR SUBSTANCE NOT TO BE DEVOTED TO SELFISH ENDS AND PURPOSES.

I am indebted to Brother Rulon S. Wells for a thought that I wish to give to you at this time. I remember upon one occasion, his presentation of this conception of our faith; not only is a man obligated to give one-tenth of his increase to the Church as a tithing, but that in the proper conception of his relationship to the Lord and his work, he is obligated to devote and to consecrate all of his wealth and substance to the work of the Lord. I grant you that upon the first consideration that doctrine would seem to entail a responsibility to which we could not live, but does it? Is not everything that we enjoy a gift of God? Is not all the wealth that comes into our hands to be used by us for the furtherance of his purposes? What man is entitled to say to himself, even if he has paid his tithing, "All of the remainder of this substance belongs to me? It is at my disposal to be used for the furtherance of my own selfish ends and purposes." Is it not by far the nobler, the finer conception to say: "All of this substance is mine, as a steward, to be used by me for the establishment of our Father's work? I don't need it all just for myself, but I do need it for the maintenance of the institutions that are necessary to the establishment of the Church and society."

The man who maintains a good home is devoting his substance to the purposes of the Lord. The man contributes to the proper environment to his fellows and who uses his means for the maintenance of institutions which tend to build up the country, is not devoting his substance to selfish ends and purposes. Some increment may come to him but he is really building up the kingdom of God, he is helping to establish the people, he is making of this the Land of Zion which it was intended to be and is intended to be, and so in that larger sense, is it not a proper conception of our relationship to our Father and to his work to say that all that we have, that every grain of substance that comes to us is to be devoted and consecrated to the establishment of our Father's work? Furthermore, will not that conception bring to us a greater measure of happiness and devotion and contentment? Will we not all feel that in so using our means we are in very deed serving our Master? I know of no greater contentment and happiness and satisfaction that can come to a human soul than to feel that to the extent of his capacity and ability he is indeed serving our Father who is in heaven.

THE CALL TO THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS IN THESE DEPRESSING TIMES.

My brethren and sisters, I cannot but think that if we obey the counsel that has come to us, if we act in the light of the great truth that has been revealed to us, and devote ourselves to the establishment of our Father's work with all our mind, might, strength and substance, that our Father will bless us to the accomplishment of the great ends and purposes that we have in view. I have always believed that the Lord intended that we should enjoy the material comforts that can be afforded to us in this life. I have never felt that he intended us to be in poverty. I have believed that he has planned that the earth should yield of her substance and her riches to those who are righteous and who keep the commandments. I believe that the call to us at this time, in these distressing financial conditions, is to keep the commandments of the Lord, to establish ourselves in the various lines of industry that are open to us; to develop the resources of our country, to live economically; to put into practice the great lessons of thrift that have been given to us, and to devote our all to the establishment of this great work. I know that if we so do, it will bring to us the blessings of heaven and that the Lord will give us a greater measure of his Spirit and that in the attempt that we make to be self-sacrificing and to be careful and economical there will come among our people more of the spirit of love and unison and harmony. I believe that there will be less desire to build up one's self at the expense of others.

SATISFACTION COMES THROUGH ALTRUISTIC MOTIVES.

Indeed I think that the time is upon us when we must consider our whole economic situation. It is not a time for anyone to prosper at the disadvantage or expense of another. This must be in order to have a general economic balance. All men must share in the burdens as well as in the advantages. There must be more or less of an even distribution of these advantages and these burdens. One class of people allied in any common industry cannot hope to acquire for themselves wages and conditions that are not consonant with the conditions that prevail with other classes of people.

What we really need is the application of the religious principle to all of our living. There is nothing more needed in all this world today than the application of the principles announced by the Savior of the world. Our great economic problems can never be solved with selfishness dominant in the hearts of men. Men will never be satisfied with bigger wages and with bigger properties and bigger holdings. The only way that real satisfaction can come to people is that they shall be actuated by altruistic motives that give them a regard for and an interest in the welfare of their neighbors. That is the purpose of true religion. Never was it more needed in the history of the world than today. We must set an example to the world. My judgment is that all of our preaching, all of our books, will never be comparable with the examples that we set in our living here at home. The sermon of our own lives will do more to convert the people of the world to the principles of truth, than any other single force or factor that we possess.

My humble prayer is that the Lord will help us to conform to the advice and counsel that come from the leadership of our Church; that he will establish us in the faith; that he will give us vision and conception of the great mission and destiny of this work; that we will indeed be led to consecrate all that we have, all that God gives us, for the establishment of his kingdom and for the carrying forward of his mighty work, for the salvation of the children of men. I pray for this blessing upon the Latter-day Saints in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

(Of the First Council of Seventy.)

My heart is full of gratitude unto my heavenly Father for the name and standing which I hold in this Church. I thank him for the restoration of his glorious gospel, through the instrumentality of his prophet, Joseph Smith. My heart is full of appreciation of that gospel, for all of its gifts and blessings that we are today in the enjoyment of. There are many of these blessings to which we have become so accustomed that we sometimes fail to appreciate them, and yet if we were deprived of them by being separated from the Church, we would then feel what a loss it was indeed. The blessings of the gospel are felt in the homes of all faithful Latter-day Saints. The power of God is manifest in the intercourse which we hold in our family circles and in our associations with one another, in our coming together in meetings, in offering up prayers and feeling the presence of his Holy Spirit, in the healing of the sick, and in untold many ways are we in the enjoyment of these splendid blessings which come by reason of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. But there is one blessing that exceeds all the others and embodies within it all the blessings of the gospel. It is God's greatest gift unto his children—eternal life. And to obtain this blessing all members of the Church should be zealously, energetically striving with all their might. It is indeed far more valuable to us than all other things that we can possibly conceive of, for it means all that the name implies, eternal life. And we must not think that this is limited to the usual conception of a never ending life, for we have a much broader meaning to that term than merely that we shall continue to live after we have "shuffled off this mortal coil." No indeed, it means coming forth in the resurrection from the dead, crowned with immortality and eternal life, and in that term we mean an exalted life in the presence of God, for he is indeed the very Eternal One and eternal life means his life, to live with him forevermore, to receive from him, as has been promised, "all that the Father hath"—all this is embodied in that great and wonderful blessing which we call eternal life.

How then are we to obtain eternal life, to secure to ourselves and to our families that wonderful blessing that is beyond compare? By keeping the commandments. We all remember reading in the New Testament of the young man who came to the Savior and said: "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may obtain eternal life?" And the answer was: "Keep the commandments." And when he asked which, a few of these were enumerated: "All these things have

I kept from my youth up; what lack I yet?" Then the word of the Lord came to him: "If thou wilt be perfect, sell that which thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have a treasure in heaven; and come and follow me." And let it be known that eternal life applies to those who are made perfect and not to any others, for no unclean thing can dwell in the presence of God forever. We are living in this world and passing through a probationary period. These are the days of our probation, the days when we are to be tried to find out whether or not we will serve God or Mammon.

What did it mean to him, when the Savior said that he should sell that which he had, for he was a wealthy young man, and had great possessions, and should give to the poor and come and follow the Master? If he followed that injunction he would cease to worship Mammon, he would serve God, would cease to be selfish and greedy in his nature, and, casting all that aside, give proof that he loved God more than he loved Mammon.

"Come and follow me." What does that mean? Was not the Savior tempted just as you and I are tempted, when he had fasted in the wilderness and Satan came unto him and offered him all the kingdoms of the world and wealth and fortune and all that he could get if he would only bow down and worship Satan. We must have the strength and power to resist temptations. What was the Savior's reply: "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Likewise we must declare our allegiance to God and resist the power of Satan.

It means this, that if we are to inherit eternal life, or obtain that greatest of all blessings that is within the gift of God we must sanctify and purify our souls. "The spirit and the body are the soul of man, and the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul." Then this soul of thine "must needs be cleansed or sanctified from all unrighteousness." Why? "That it may be prepared for the celestial glory." Does not that mean the same thing? Eternal life, to our way of thinking, means the obtaining of celestial glory, and if we attain to that glory it will be because we live according to the law of the celestial kingdom, and that means that we shall sanctify and purify our souls from all unrighteousness. It means that we are to follow Christ. His was a life of devotion, a blameless life, a life without sin, without corruption, without yielding to the power of the adversary. It therefore behooves us that we shall practice in our lives that great and fundamental principle, that saving principle of repentance from sin; for, unlike the Savior, we are sinners, and have need of repentance. It means that we shall give of our substance, and help those that are in need. It means that we are to place the kingdom of God before all other things. It means more than merely taking the initial steps of faith, repentance, and baptism, at the time of our admission into the Church. This, of course, is a good start—the right beginning, and through it we obtain the remission of sins and, by the laying on of hands, the companionship of God's Holy Spirit. But it also means that we must continue to have faith in God, and have faith unto repentance, as long as we are not perfect in our lives, for the principle of repentance has been given to us that we might sanctify our hearts and purify our souls, and prepare ourselves to dwell in the presence of God, for that celestial glory, for that eternal life that has been promised to the faithful. But this we cannot do, unless we shall engage in the good fight of faith, resisting temptation in whatever form it may come, and not permitting ourselves to be led away by the allurements of wealth and its uses for greedy and selfish purposes.

All that we have and all that we are should be devoted to the service of God, and that doesn't prevent us from engaging in laudable enterprises. It doesn't preclude us from the enjoyment of the proper pleasures of life, it doesn't hinder us from supporting and sustaining our families and educating our children, for all this and everything that we do that is right is truly a service to God; but when we forget God and worship at the shrine of the god of this world, even Mammon, seeking riches for the gratifying of selfish lusts, securing it by questionable methods—by cheating, fraud, deception, misrepresentation, no matter how, but getting it by fair means or foul; or, in other words, when the devil taketh us up into an exceeding high mountain and sheweth us all the kingdoms of this world and their glory and splendor, and wealth, and sayeth unto us as he is wont to say: "All these things will I give you, if you will fall down and worship me," then, O Latter-day Saints, "follow Christ," and set yourselves as steel against the fiery darts of the adversary and say as the Savior said: "Get thee hence, Satan, for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

What good thing shall we do that we may have eternal life? Follow the admonition of the Apostle Paul to Timothy: "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life," for unto this we have been called through our acceptance of the gospel of Jesus Christ which is the gospel of repentance, and it enjoins upon all a life of repentance from sin, and promises salvation only to him "that endureth to the end." We live in a world of sin and are subjected to its temptations. The good fight is one of resistance to the arch enemy of God. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life which the Lord has promised to them that love him."

Then let us follow Christ, resist temptation, cleave unto his word and eternal life will be our sure reward. God grant that it may be so. Amen.

(Of the First Council of Seventy, and President of the California Mission.)

It is certainly a very great privilege, my brethren and sisters, to attend a General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, to have the privilege to listen to the splendid counsels that are imparted by the presiding authorities of the Church, and to partake of that good spirit that prompts the presiding authorities as they undertake to expound the doctrines of the gospel and to counsel the people to walk in those paths that will be for their best advantage. It is also a very great privilege to have the opportunity of standing up in one of these great conferences to bear testimony to the truth that has been revealed for the salvation of the children of men in this great dispensation of the fulness of times. And with this privilege there is also a very great responsibility which causes men to have more or less anxiety at the thought of attempting to discharge the duty that is placed upon them, when they are called to stand up in the midst of the people for a few moments as spokesmen.

My labors, my brethren and sisters, as many of you no doubt know, are at present in the California mission. When I left Los Angeles a few days ago, the appearance of things in that part of the land were about as contrary to what we see around the outside in this stormy weather as one could well imagine. Southern California, at this particular period of the year, is probably as beautiful a country, in many parts of it, as could be found anywhere upon the face of the earth. I had the pleasure, just a few days ago, of being in the company of Elder Richard R. Lyman, of the Council of the Twelve, and the Presiding Bishop of the Church, in attending services in San Bernardino and also in Los Angeles, and as we were traveling from the city of San Bernardino these brethren burst out again and again with exclamations of surprise and joy at the beauty of the scenery through which we passed, for we traveled through vast sections of great orange groves; and along the roadway, continuously, I might say, there were great clusters of blooming roses and geraniums and other flowers that were indeed beautiful to look upon.

I am very happy to report in this conference that the California mission is making fair advancement. I suppose men who are engaged in the missionary work in every part of the world would be glad if they could make better headway than they do. California, as you know, is a land that is given much to pleasure. Thousands, I suppose hundreds of thousands, of people come to California every year to escape cold weather in other sections, and to enjoy and spend the means that they have been blessed with, and people who come for such purposes are not very willing to listen to the teachings of the servants of God, as they undertake to bring to the attention of men the message that has been committed into their care. And yet I am happy to say that we continually find a few people who become pricked in their hearts, and who do investigate the message of the gospel, and who are brought to the waters of baptism and become numbered with the people of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We have been very greatly blessed in the California Mission in having occasional visits from the President of the Church, and from other prominent brethren, and they have always manifested a very ready willingness to go into the branches of the Church and to meet people face to face and bear testimony to them in relation to the truth. We have been blessed in this regard to a very great extent. President Heber J. Grant, during the past year, I suppose has visited the branches in Oakland, California, and in San Francisco, and at San Jose, in Ocean Park, Los Angeles, Long Beach, Santa Anna, San Diego, and San Bernardino; and a little further back, we had him also at Gridley, in the Sacramento Valley, where we have a large number of people who are engaged in agricultural pursuits.

The California Mission has a membership of about six thousand two hundred souls. These people, to a very great extent, are not converts that have been made in the mission field, but they are men and women who have been born and reared in the Church, with their families. We have a great many men in the California Mission who have had splendid experiences in the Church, who have been abroad in the world as preachers of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who have been in stake presidencies and in high councils and in bishoprics, and who have occupied other prominent positions in the Church; men and women who are still established in the faith of the gospel, who love the truth, who have come for various reasons from their former homes to make homes in the state of California. We have had, during the past year, a very remarkable experience, in that a very large number of our people have come from the wards and stakes of Zion to make homes in California. There has been received during the year, something over twelve hundred souls, who have come with recommends, and have united with the branches in the California Mission, and then there are a great many others who have come into the mission who have not brought transfers, and a great many that we haven't met. We have been trying to extend the missionary labors, going into communities where the gospel has not been preached, that we know of, to any extent in that section. We have never been able to send the missionaries into any locality in the state where they have not discovered men and women who claim membership in the Church. In every little community wherever the missionaries have resided for any length of time, they have come in contact with these Church members who have practically been lost for a considerable period of time and haven't had recognition in the mission. This has resulted in quite a large number of additions in the organizations that have been effected in the California mission. It might not be out of place in this conference to call attention to some of these increased organizations. In 1918, there were eighty-five Church organizations in the California mission. In 1919, they were increased to one hundred and fifteen organizations. In 1920 and 1921, they have been increased to one hundred sixty-two organizations, which means that there have been seventy-seven additional Church organizations. They cover conferences, branches, Relief Societies, Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Associations, Young Men's Mutual Improvement Associations, Primaries, Sunday Schools, and one Religion Class. You will readily discern, my brethren and sisters, that with this increased number of organizations, a very large number of men and women, between two and three hundred, who have heretofore not had any direct responsibility resting upon them as officers in the Church have now been brought to feel that they are under an increased obligation to render service in the building up of the kingdom of God. Of course, this has increased the spiritual strength of the people in these various localities, and men and women have been aroused to a better performance of the duties that rest upon them as members of the Church of Christ. I am very happy to be able to report that the California mission has played its full part in contributing, in a material way, to the tithes that have been paid for the advancement and upbuilding of the Church of Christ; and, notwithstanding the financial depression that has been mentioned by some of the speakers during this conference, there has been more tithe paying during 1920 than has ever been paid in the mission before; I think about twenty-six per cent more tithing during the past year than was paid during the previous year, and I am also glad to be able to report that the California mission, in the amount of tithing that is paid per capita throughout the entire mission, stands above the general average of the Church, which I think is a very splendid thing to be able to report.

We are feeling some anxiety in that mission in relation to missionaries, and I suppose the same feeling is with all of the mission presidents. There seems to be disposition to a greater extent than ever before, it seems to me, for fathers and mothers and others who have representatives in the mission field, to feel that it is a proper thing to suggest the release of missionaries, long before the time that the mission president would release them. I desire to ask bishops and presidents and fathers and mothers that they give attention to this matter, and that they be not too ready to recommend the release of the men and the women who have been called to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. If you will open the Doctrine and Covenants, you will discover again and again in the revelations of the Lord that there can be no greater service rendered than the preaching of the gospel. Many of the brethren, at an early period in the Church, went to the Prophet Joseph Smith and inquired what they could do that would be of the greatest advantage to themselves, and the Lord answered again and again that the thing that would be of greatest worth to those men who thus sought counsel at the hands of God, through the prophet of the Lord, would be to lift up their voices in the preaching of the gospel. I do not know that this has ever been revoked. If the greatest thing that men could engage in, at the introduction of the gospel, was to cry repentance among the inhabitants of the earth and to expound the doctrines that have been revealed for the salvation of the children of men, that service is just as great today, as it has ever been in the history of the Church, and I think it would be well for fathers and mothers, and for men who occupy presiding positions in the organizations of the Church here in Zion, to counsel that missionaries be permitted to remain in the mission field until those who preside over them feel prompted by the Spirit of the Lord to say that the time has come when they should lay down their missionary work and return again to their various homes. I realize, my brethren and sisters, when I make this statement, that always there can be conditions that cannot be controlled by fathers and mothers, and that cannot be controlled by others, however interested they may be, that may make it necessary for missionaries to return, but it is an injustice to any young elder in the mission field, who has been there for sixteen or eighteen months, and who has made the discovery, perhaps, that God is his Father, that God has called him to be his servant, has called him with divine authority, and has made him a preacher of righteousness, just when he is being baptized by the power of God, and when ability is being developed within him to expound the doctrines of the gospel—not in the enticing words of man's wisdom, but in the power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit—then to have somebody make a recommendation that he be released and be taken away from his missionary work and be brought home, disappointed, knowing in his own soul that he had not accomplished the work that he had desired to accomplish. And the preaching of this gospel is to be continued as it is written in the very first revelation: "And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days. And they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I, the Lord, have commanded them." You may read further, I shall not take the time—of the marvelous promises that have been made by the Lord God of heaven in relation to the preaching of the gospel, and that all men can come to an understanding of the truth as it has been revealed, if they will hearken to the counsels that are given of God through his servants.

I desire to say to you, fathers and mothers, and I know whereof I speak, for I have been in the very period of missionary work in the past that the missionaries who are in California, very largely, are in today, and I would rather have had taken from me anything that I possessed in the world than to have been robbed in the days of my boyhood of filling, to the full satisfaction of those who presided over me, the first mission in which God, in his bountiful kindness, gave me opportunity to labor. I plead with the fathers and the mothers, and with bishops and presidents, as far as possible, to encourage men and women to remain in the fields, and let them understand that there is, as a general thing, but one opportunity given to a man in a lifetime—that is the history of missionary work, just one opportunity in a life time,—to preach the gospel; and do not interfere and bring home from the mission field men who are filled with the Holy Ghost, who are anxious to cry repentance, who have had a wonderful love come into their souls for the gospel of the Redeemer, and who have been made to know, just as their fathers and mothers know, that the things that they are teaching are true—the power of God unto salvation. I thank God that I have that assurance and knowledge in my soul, and I praise God that he has given me this assurance, and bear testimony to its truth with all my soul, in the name of Jesus Christ, my King. Amen.

I take it as a compliment to my father, James H. Hart, rather than any slight to myself, that I should be invited to the stand under my father's name. I recall an incident in his life, suggested to me during this conference, of his being lost with a companion in a fog or storm. They wandered for hours without reaching any known landmark, until night settled upon them and the situation became serious. They knelt in prayer for their deliverance, and shortly after arising from their knees in the snow of that cold country, the clouds broke away for a few minutes, they beheld the North Star and received their bearings. So in this conference there have been presented guiding gospel principles, foundation stones upon which we may safely anchor, and to which we may look for guidance. In the constitution of this commonwealth, framed under the presidency of the late President John Henry Smith, it is declared that "frequent recurrence to general principles is essential to the security of individual rights and the perpetuity of free government." By parity of reasoning, a frequent recurrence to the fundamentals of religion are essential for individual guidance, and for the well-being of the Church. I rejoice in the fundamental instructions and the solid satisfaction of the spiritual feeding, given us during this conference. The injunction of the opening speech was to keep the commandments of the Lord. I am reminded in this connection that the Ten Commandments form the very foundation of the laws of all civilized nations. One of our most learned jurists in the civil law, that is, the Roman law as distinguished from the common law, said of the civil law, (and it is in keeping with the Book of Mormon quotation made by Elder Whitney in this conference) that "the spirit of man, divinely inspired, has wrought from the beginning. The roots of the tree of life strike down into the remotest past"; that a system had been developed which reigns by reason after the authority which promulgated it ceased to reign. If it be true that inspiration to the law-giver, can produce a system of such strength and reasoning that it prevails long centuries after the authority which promulgated it has passed away; how peculiarly true it is of the gospel that these divine principles, these foundation stones, lower than which we may not be able to go, will be a stay to us and a strength and a guide to us.

I always enjoy that hymn that we sang yesterday, Ex-President Roosevelt's favorite symn, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in his excellent word." We have been reminded of this firm foundation by the teachings of this conference. When in the tribulation, turmoil and temptations of life, there is danger of losing our bearings, if we can keep sight of these guiding principles, these foundation truths of our religion, we are more secure. I did not refer to the incident of prayer followed by a view of the polar star as an argument for prayer, although I am sure as I live, as sure as I desire to be, that God can and does hear the prayers of faith of his children.

I rejoice greatly in looking in the faces of these my faithful brethren, into whose stakes it has been my great privilege to go during the past fifteen years, and to see them working with love for the good of their fellow men, giving loving service to the point of great sacrifice in many instances; and, by the way, that covers three of the cardinal principles that our Redeemer stood for and taught—love, service and sacrifice. I have seen that manifested so abundantly in the lives of my brethren, that in being in their presence I have felt reassured, reinforced, and renewed in strength and determination.

I think perhaps no more important principle was given to us during this conference than the reference which our president made to some matters in the 43rd Section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me" . . . referring to the Prophet Joseph.

"And this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments," other than the president of the Church, because there is "none other appointed" to receive revelations for the Church except the president of the Church.

"And this I give unto you that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me." And if that principle were known and understood in the Church, some individuals would stand upon safer ground than they now stand upon. Their compass would work and it would point to the North Star, to the source from which the Church is entitled to receive guidance.

In listening to the remarks of Elder Richards on the necessity of example, and teaching the gospel by example, I thought of the reverse condition of those who may cast reflection and bring disgrace, not only upon themselves but upon the Church, by not setting an example that is worthy of emulation; by failure to adhere to fundamental principles, by listening, perchance, to some lying voice, some lying spirit of evil that may direct them away from foundation principles and truths, persuade them to violate the commandments of God, and lead them off on a tangent of evil.

This is a time in the history of the world when a new resolve should be made in favor of obedience to law. The proclamation has been made throughout this conference of the reign of law in the universe. The general principles which apply, as we read in the 130th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants are:

"And when we obtain any blessing from God it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated," compliance with the conditions upon which it is predicated. That is fair and safe to everyone, that we are governed not by caprice nor by whim, nor by changing laws, but upon principles irrevocably established from the foundations of the earth.

President Lincoln in his day had some sound advice for the people, which should be reiterated throughout the earth. I suppose there has never been such a lawless period in all the history of the world as we are passing through in the United States today, never a time when life has been held at so low an estimate, nor a time when greed and the ambition for unjust gain, have been more rampant. He said: "Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher of his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution, never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries and in colleges; let it be written in primers, in spelling books and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpits, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice. And, in short, let it become the political religion of the nation; and let the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the grave and the gay of all sexes and tongues and colors and conditions, sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars."

The fact that one may not like a law does not justify him in disobeying it. Will elders of Israel be unmindful of the rule prevailing in the United States against the manufacture or distilling of liquor. Will they feel at liberty to violate the law because, perchance, they may think it can be done in safety? If they do so, there is a harvest of sorrow for them to reap. By the violation of law they reap the whirlwind they sow in disobedience to law. We have had some pathetic cries from individuals in this nation who have taken false steps and have cried out as a warning voice to their sisters to avoid the evils that have come upon them. On their death bed they have sobbed: "It was wine, wine that did it. Tell girls to heed me, for I know. Tell them that in the wine cup lies death." Others attribute failure in life to a lack of appreciation of the value of a home and a loving companion and the establishment of a home under lawful wedlock and the companionship of a husband who would be true. There may be other laws than that for the enforcement of temperance throughout the United States that an individual here and there may not fancy, but let all support the law; let all be guided by the general principles that are established for the guidance, not only of citizens of the United States, but citizens in this great Church of ours.

I copied from some author words of advice and warning to our girls in reference to modesty. The thought was expressed more beautifully than I could express it myself and therefore I desired to read the exact language, but I do not seem to have the words with me. In substance it was that cultivated communities have come to make modesty the supreme grace of woman. That it is to her a garment of strength and beauty and a witness to her womanhood. That she has no need to assert what all concede or to demand rights which no one question. That the costume or the action which suggests immodesty is a voluntary descent from the position which the community gladly assigns to a woman. That it is an accepted degradation and choice of unloveliness and a challenge to impurity; and that it is well to remember that the only protection is in oneself and the only safety in resisting the beginning of evil.

May the Lord bless and help the efforts of those who are striving to establish the youth of Zion, to keep in the paths of righteousness, rectitude and right, young people in the Church who are growing up and who will take the places in a few years of these their older brethren and sisters. There has been many testimonies of the truth of the Gospel presented during this Conference. The few statistics given by President Grant was an eloquent witness to the divinity of this work. A deathrate of nine, a birthrate of thirty-eight, and a marriage rate of fifteen and one-half. Those things could not flow from an evil tree. The tree may be judged by its fruit, and "the poisonous tree, though watered by nectar, can produce only the fruit of death;" and likewise, the good tree will bring forth good fruit.

I have rejoiced in the testimonies of my brethren, in the instructions which they have given, and I desire to continue with them to be faithful in promulgating this great cause, which confers honor upon any man who has any part or work therein. May the Lord bless us and give us glimpses from time to time of the grandeur and the magnitude and majesty and worth of this great work and of its value to the children of our Father, whose souls are very precious in his sight, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

APPRECIATION OF STEPHENS' "THE MARTYRS."

I want to express my unbounded approbation and delight with the very splendid cantata that we had here of "The Martyrs" last night. I am sure all who were here were very much delighted and pleased, and that all feel grateful to the Lord for the inspiration to our beloved brother, Evan Stephens, in furnishing us such a wonderful piece of music, and such a splendid tribute in poetry to our beloved dead.

THE SCHOOL OF ART AND MUSIC.

Perhaps you have noticed in the papers that the magnificent McCune residence, which would probably cost over half a million dollars, and which was presented to the Church at our last Conference, has been set aside by the Presidency for the use of a School of Art and Music. And I am pleased to say that this disposition of the property has met with the very hearty approval of A. W. McCune and his wife, the donors of the property; in addition to having given this imposing structure, when they learned it was to be used as a School of Music and Art, they presented to us the two magnificent pieces of statuary that are now in that home, which would probably cost something over twenty thousand dollars, as a beginning for art collections that may go there. I trust that the people will call and partake of the hospitality of the School of Music. Of course, as to this designation for the use of the place, I do not know exactly that it will always be permanent, but we are inclined to think it will be.

There have been a great many people, of course, who have urged me to move there and use that magnificent house as the official residence of the President of the Church. I appreciate the compliment and the many expressions of good will and desire for me to occupy such a magnificent structure; but I consider it would be a vast waste of the money of the good people to maintain me in any such an elegant place, for the reason that if I went there I would want everything to be in keeping with the house, and it would be in direct opposition to what Brother Stephen L. Richards has said here today, all of which I endorse with all my heart. For the time being I shall be perfectly satisfied to live in my little bungalow, one story and a half high in about the nicest spot in all Salt Lake City. During the first six months of my residence there, I don't believe I missed a half dozen times sitting up in bed every morning and taking a view of the whole valley and singing President Charles W. Penrose's hymn, "O ye mountains high."

I endorse with all my heart the excellent remarks that have been made here this morning, and if time would permit, would like to add a few comments, but we aim to start on time and to close on time, barring the musical selection after twelve o'clock. May the Lord bless us, and may we have a time of rejoicing this afternoon and on the morrow in our conference, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder George T. Hyde, of the Portneuf stake of Zion.

AFTERNOON SESSION

Conference meeting was opened at 2 o'clock by President Heber J. Grant, who presided.

The congregation sang, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Joseph Reece, of the Nebo stake of Zion.

The congregation sang, "Come, thou glorious day of promise," by Alexander Neibaur, a Jew. The hymn was read in full by President Heber J. Grant, and is found on page 246, of the Latter-day Saints' Hymn Book.

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

I trust that the inspiration of our Heavenly Father that has rested upon those who have spoken before, may be with me while I stand before you.

I wonder if the early pioneers of Utah, the founders of the Church, the Prophet Joseph Smith and others, in their fondest dreams and hopes, comprehended the rapidity with which this Church would grow. With some friends of mine, relatives in fact, daughters of the late Patriarch John Brown who, with Orson Pratt, was first of the Pioneers to look into Salt Lake Valley, I say, with his daughters, I drove over the boulevard above Salt Lake City a few nights ago. There were clouds in the heavens so that the stars could not be seen. The whole valley seemed to be thickly dotted with electric lights. And as we gazed we wondered what the pioneers would have thought if in their dreams they could have seen the valley under similar conditions.

ARE WE WORTHY SONS AND DAUGHTERS OF THE PIONEERS?

As I have looked into the faces of the people assembled at this Conference, I have thought with admiration and wonder of this great structure in which we are assembled! Of its magniture, and of the unusual factor of safety that has been used in its construction. I have thought also of the great Temple east of us, with its tremendous foundations and massive walls. There is an edifice like the rock of ages. What rare inspiration rested upon that great Pioneer and Prophet, Brigham Young, when, under his direction, the Lord laid the foundations for this great commonwealth!

Are we, sons and daughters of these great Pioneers, playing our part in this great work as well as they played theirs? In this house last night a tremendous multitude listened to the music of a product of the Church and were thrilled with the stirring strains of song and music in honor and praise of our martyrs. At the same time in the Salt Lake Theatre, another building erected under the direction of that great Pioneer, President Brigham Young, his granddaughter was the leading performer in a grand opera production. Are we, I ask, even under these conditions, worthy sons and worthy daughters of these great Pioneers?

THE ANTI-CIGARETTE CAMPAIGN RATIONAL, NOT HYSTERICAL.

Since the last Conference, six months ago, Mutual Improvement workers and others, in and out of the Church, have waged a rather intense campaign against the use of the cigarette in the State of Utah, and wherever else the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has members.

In conducting this campaign I regret that we have met with some opposition. I am sorry that in these efforts we have come into rather vigorous conflict with some of the leading business men of our State. If in this undertaking, we have been in error, we have not been alone in our mistaken judgment. Doctors and educators generally encourage such undertakings. Were Andrew D. White, a great president, and an important factor in founding Cornell University, still living, I would write to him and say: "In the summer of 1902 you gave me a mission. You asked me, as I sat in Cornell University, in company with teachers from various other sections of the country, to go home and to carry to the young people I came in contact with a message from Andrew White, to call the attention of young people to the fact that the use of the cigarette is one of the most positive means of taking from people their chances of success." I would say: "President Andrew D. White, I am proud to have helped to secure the following result: The State of Utah has passed a law prohibiting the sale or the giving away of cigarettes or cigarette paper. The State of Idaho has also, by law, provided strict regulations intended to decrease the use of these two objectionable articles."

This work has not been a matter of hysteria. With us it is not a mania. We have proceeded deliberately. We feel as if with mathematical certainty we have done something for the lasting benefit of the young people of our communities.

WHY THE ANTI-CIGARETTE QUESTION?

Since my life has been devoted to the study and teaching and practice of mathematics and of engineering, I think I have stamina enough not to be wafted about by mania, or hysteria. I belong to the fifth generation of members of the Church. I desire while I speak, that I may do so as a worthy son of the grand old pioneers. Have we been unreasonable, have we worked too hard in this anti-cigarette campaign? We are determined, in fact it is our mission and duty, to produce a generation of young men and women better than the world has ever known. And this is why we fight to keep the cigarette from our young men and our young women.

I have here a copy of an article that appeared in the Denver Post, March 21, 1921. I wonder if in this state, where we have the gospel of Jesus Christ, where we have the Priesthood and the power and the authority to speak in his name; in this community where we are putting forth effort to rear young men and young women who are worthy, do the conditions described as prevailing in Denver exist here? I will read a part of the article:

"Almost any night you may see the downtown streets crowded with boys and flashily dressed, scarlet-lipped, loose-mannered girls—moths fluttering around the searing candle of 'pleasure.' You may see them in automobiles, riding up and down the main thoroughfares of the city. You may see unescorted girls—children who should have been tucked into bed by their mothers. They appear to be without shame. They do not hesitate to trade modesty and virtue for what they think is pleasure.

"All Denver is aroused, and rightly, too. Who is to blame for this appalling condition? Who is responsible for the absolute lack of morals in these boys and girls who are to be the men and women and parents of tomorrow? Why are boys and girls permitted to gad about the streets at all hours of the night, allowed to joy-ride in their parents' automobiles until the wee small hours of the morning, suffered to go where they will, and however they choose, to satiate a perverted appetite for pleasure?

"Juvenile Judge Lindsey, clergy, school authorities, welfare workers—all say the blame for this deplorable state of affairs rests upon the parents."

It is against conditions like these that we are fighting. If we have been too intense in this anti-cigarette campaign, may we be forgiven. But I say to Mutual Improvement workers, to the Governor of the State of Idaho, and the Governor of the State of Utah, to the legislators and to all who are responsible for this anti-cigarette legislation, God bless you. I predict that thousands, yea, tens of thousands among the generation to come will rise and call you blessed.

LIVE WITHIN YOUR MEANS AND SO KEEP OUT OF DEBT AND TROUBLE.

I was very greatly interested in what Stephen L. Richards said this morning on the subject of economy. No man has the right to live beyond his means. It is the duty of every man to keep accounts.

He who does it will have the reins in his hands, he will be master of the situation, he will not be driven into bankruptcy.

I visited the home of a prosperous farmer a few weeks ago. His is an unusually comfortable home. I noticed hanging on the wall a beautifully framed motto. As I looked at it he said: "Probably that motto is not quite so appropriate hanging on this wall as it was on the wall of the little log cabin in which my wife and I lived during the early part of our married life. The words were words of the late President John R. Winder: "Live within your means, keep out of debt, and you will keep out of trouble."

NOTHING SHOULD INTERFERE WITH SACRAMENT MEETINGS.

President Grant referred yesterday to a slogan of the Mutual Improvement Associations adopted about two years ago: "We stand for spiritual growth through attendance at sacrament meetings." It is our desire to avoid the conditions that have been described as existing among the young people in the City of Denver. One of the means of avoiding conditions of this sort is the partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's supper. A man in the Priesthood meeting, yesterday, said to the President of the Church: "President Grant, may we hold a meeting in our stake, once a month, at two o'clock on the Sabbath day. It will be interfering with our sacrament meeting but once each month?" The President very promptly replied: "We desire to have nothing interfere with our sacrament meetings." It is when partaking of the sacrament sincerely and worthily that we come into unusually close communion with our Father in heaven. It is then our hearts are filled with a prayerful spirit and we acknowledge before our heavenly Father our weaknesses. It is then and there we desire to be forgiven and firmly we resolve to be stronger and better. Oh, that I had the power to say something to induce all the people to put forth their best efforts all the time. We will not be judged by the sermons we preach or the sermons we hear. We will not be judged by the number of meetings we attend. Nor will we be judged by the prayers we utter or those we hear. If we are satisfied with these things only, we are like the tree that is satisfied with being cultivated and irrigated and with putting forth leaves but bearing no fruit. Partake of the sacrament, or in the language of Isaiah: "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near." Brother B. H. Roberts said yesterday he has seen men whose hands were scarlet with sin, appeal in anguish for forgiveness, and for the days of their youth to return thus giving them another opportunity to make their lives better. Among us are thousands of young men and young women whose lives are pure, whose hearts are clean. To these I appeal, "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near.

Wherever here or elsewhere there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy, these are virtues for which we seek.

SPECIFICATIONS FOR A MAN.

I have before me a copy of the prayer of an engineer. Shall I call it a prayer? This man was a product of my own Alma Mater, Cornell University. The principal business of his life was to write specifications, specifications for bridges, specifications for buildings, for trestles, for railroads, etc. For preparing such specifications he was well paid. Here is his prayer or specifications he wrote for himself. For so doing he received no money. They were not prepared for publication, but simply for his own private use. They were found among his papers, after his death, and were entitled: "Specifications for a Man."

"To respect my country," [and this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, this is the thing for which we stand] "to respect my country, my profession and myself. To be honest and fair with my fellow men as I expect them to be honest and to be fair with me. To be a loyal citizen of the United States, to speak of the United States with praise and to act always as a trustworthy custodian of the good name of my country. To be a man whose name carries prestige wherever it goes. To base my expectation of reward on a solid foundation of service rendered. To be willing to pay the price of success and to pay this price in honest effort. To look upon my work as an opportunity, to be seized with joy and to be made the most of, and not as painful drudgery to be painfully endured. To remember that success lies within my own self. To expect difficulties and to force my way through these difficulties. To turn hard experience into capital to be used in future struggles. To believe in my profession both heart and soul. To carry a ray of optimism in the presence of all whom I meet. To dispel all temper with cheerfulness. To kill doubts with strong convictions and to reduce action with an agreeable personality. To make a study of my business, to know my profession in every detail. To mix brains with efforts and with system in my work. To find time to do every needful thing by not letting time find me doing nothing. To hoard days as a miser hoards dollars. To make every hour produce me dividends, either in increased knowledge or in helpful recreation. To keep my future unencumbered with debt. To save as well as to earn. To cut out expensive amusements until I can afford them. To steer clear of dissipation and to guard my health of body and peace of mind as a most precious stock of trade. Finally, to take a firm grip on the jars of life, to play the game and to play it like a man. To fight against nothing so hard as I fight against my own weaknesses. To be a gentleman and a Christian so I may be courteous to men, faithful to friends, and true to God."

Let us, I pray, make our lives conform with these exalted specifications, and all the glorious principles of the perfect gospel of Jesus Christ, I humbly pray, Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

THE NECESSITY OF THE CIGARETTE LAW.

I believe that Brother Joseph W. McMurrin first called my attention to an article published in the Scientific American and reproduced in the Literary Digest, announcing that for fifty long years no young man in Harvard University had ever graduated at the head of his class, as the principal student, who was a user of tobacco, notwithstanding the fact that eighty-one or two per cent used tobacco and only nineteen or eighteen didn't use it—so that, taking it man for man, for those many years, the tobacco users had not become the head students of that great institution. I don't think anybody, with an ordinary, common, every-day head on him, needs any greater evidence than that of the necessity of passing anti-cigarette and other laws of this kind.

INTRODUCING PROF. PERRY G. HOLDEN.

We have with us today Professor Perry G. Holden of Chicago, a man with a national and international reputation as an extension worker. I have been handed one or two statements made by Professor Holden that I will read before we have the pleasure of hearing from him:

"Every American ought to have his own home, and every family ought to have an acre of ground. Men don't fight for their boarding houses—they usually fight in them." And we might add, with their tongues, mostly.

"Men who own their own homes don't go out on riotous strikes." That reminds me of a man who was a socialist, over in France, working for a very wealthy man. He went out two or three nights a week to his socialistic meetings, advocating the dividing up of all the property. Finally he quit going, and the wealthy man for whom he worked asked him why he hadn't gone. "Why," he said, "at the last meeting which I attended some months ago, there was a calculation which had been made, and they read how much each family would have after we got all the property divided up, and lo and behold, I have more in the savings bank already than would be my share."

"If the community will take care of its boys today, its boys will take care of the community tomorrow."

To his son leaving for the army: "My son, keep your standard." On his return: "Have you kept your standard?" "Yes, father."

"Money spent on education is not a tax. It is an investment."

"Am I a better man today than I was yesterday?"

I have very great pleasure in introducing Professor Perry G. Holden.

PROFESSOR PERRY G. HOLDEN.

I am not a "Mormon," but I am a good friend of the "Mormons." Perhaps only one other man in these United States has said more things outside of Utah, in behalf of the "Mormons," and the great work which they have accomplished, than I, and that is Doctor A. E. Winship, whom many of you know.

I am reminded at this time of a little incident. Some years ago it was my pleasure to be at a great Sunday School convention at Waterloo. They had had a great meeting and had listened to some marvelous addresses, and as the boys thought they were about through they ran for their hats, but the presiding officer said: "I have a friend here, boys, and I want him to say a few words to you." And they settled back with some discomfiture, and he stepped before them and he said: "Boys, I don't know just what to say to you this afternoon." And a boy way back in the back part of the room didn't want to take any chances. He stood up and flung his hand a little and said: "Say, Mr., I can tell you what to say. Say, 'Amen,' and sit down."

Now, good people, for the few moments that it is my privilege and supreme pleasure to be before you, I hope that you will have the Spirit of God in your souls, and that you will listen to what I say in the same spirit that I present the few things that I may be able to present at this time; and I am sure you will, because I have met you people everywhere throughout this and other states, and it is a pleasure and a privilege that I cannot describe to you at this time to have this opportunity of talking for a few moments with you.

I want to say Amen, from the bottom of my soul, to the addresses which I have heard today, and this last address is such a wonderful thing that I wish that in some way it could be heard throughout the length and breadth of this land, as something that helps to dedicate and consecrate us to the great things which we can accomplish, if we but will.

I want to refer to a little poem to illustrate a great principle upon which all progress depends. Samuel Walter Foss wrote many beautiful things. You know he wrote the wonderful little poem entitled: "Let me live in my house by the side of the road, where the race of men go by, men who are good and men who are bad, as good and bad as I." And then he wrote another wonderful little poem with a very common name, entitled: "The Calf Path." He tells the story of this calf that went out to pasture one morning from Boston, when it was a little shack of a town. At night the calf came home as all good calves do, but it made a very crooked trail, all bent askew, winding in and out and round about through the brush. The next day the old bell wether took up this same trail and all the other good sheep followed, and a path was made through those primeval woods. Then the people followed this little path, winding in and out and round about through the brush over to a neighboring settlement, and then they built little homes by the side of this path, and they cleared off the land and it became a road, and then they built houses and stores and it became a street. Then they built great manufacturing plants by the side of it, and it became the avenue over which the commerce of a continent has passed. Samuel Walter Foss then falters, and says: "But you know that was three centuries ago, and I infer that the calf is now dead." The good people of Boston cannot straighten that calf path today. You people are building, have been building and are building a great empire. The religion, the calf paths of home-making, and the calf paths of humanity-making—those calf paths that you have been making and will make for the next twenty or thirty years will be the calf paths that our children's children's children must tread for the thousands and the tens of thousands of years to come. Building so, putting the very best that we have into our lives at this time, that we may help to make those calf paths straight, that it may be said a thousand and ten thousand years from today: O, they builded better than they knew. I wonder if we begin to realize the tremendous responsibilities that rest upon us at this hour and this day. People, I am wondering if you will lose your great birth-right; and what a birth-right you have! Men and women like these who came here, came over this great continent, years ago and suffered as they suffered, lost their dear ones, as they did, and endured that they might come here and build up an empire that should represent their principles! They sacrificed much.

And now, you know, people, I am wondering if you and I are willing to cross a continent today, as they crossed a continent in those days that have gone by. If we are not willing to suffer as they suffered, if we are not willing to go through what they went through, then we are losing our birth-right. I fear there are many of us younger people that would not endure, would not think of going through all that they have gone through; and don't you think for a moment that there isn't just as much need of suffering today for principles, for rights, for our boys and girls, for our homes, and for America as there was in those days. The question is whether we are consecrated, whether we are dedicated, whether we have a vision! In my estimation your Church illustrates better than anything I have ever known in all America, the great principle of vision. Where there is no vision the people perish, and today you are blessed, because the people before you had a vision, and not only had a vision, but were willing to live and die for it if necessary. That is what made you great. I admire your great buildings, I admire your temple, I admire your fine buildings and schools that I find everywhere, all over this land of yours; but, people, more than all, do you know what I admire most? It is your people whom you have reared under this religion of yours. When I said to you I was a friend of the "Mormons," I meant all that could be said in those words. It was not to please you. It was because I believe in it. A religion that will do what your religion has done, not only for the temporal things, but for human beings, for God, is certainly a great religion, and you ought to be proud of it. I want to say to you that the time is coming when your religion is going to be understood as it should be understood, in this world, and I want to say that through some of the things that you have been doing, you have come into more favorable attention over the United States, within the last two or three years, than in all the time put together before.

You have thought of your boys, of your girls, of your homes, and it is the outgrowth of religion that made it possible to put through your legislatures that wonderful bill that prevents the use of cigarettes in this state, and I say it should go out to all of the states of this Union. It is wonderful what your religion has done. Let me say to you, that I fear sometimes that the people who enjoy it, who live here and have not been out, as some of us have, over all this great world, do not appreciate the greatness of what you have. I wish that, some way, I could say it to you.

I wonder if you will pardon me for saying one or two little things? They may seem entirely out of place, but I couldn't help but think of it as those words were uttered here by the former speaker. Last year, as I was in your state, I went out over it with the hope of holding a large meeting with the one motto in mind that a state is made of men and women, and not of houses and factories and wealth. So, I went out. I was telling them of your schools and your education, and as I was leaving Provo for a trip through to Ogden, where I was to speak, some of the people from the east with me on that commission, said: "Mr. Holden, these people look very much like other people." And I said: "Why, yes," but I said that there is a good deal of difference in some respects, and I want to tell you of one or two of the things I have noticed, as I have been out here working among these people. I will demonstrate it to you—and I said, do you know anywhere through Colorado or Illinois or Iowa, or everywhere you stop at a depot, that there you find young men about the depot, leaning up against the wall or railing, smoking and chewing and passing remarks about the people that get on and off the train? Now, I have gone up and down this state, and it has been peculiar to me that I haven't observed that anywhere. And they said nothing, and we got through to Ogden, and one of them turned to the other, and then they turned to me, and said: "Mr. Holden, we thought we would take you up on that statement," and they said, "We have made a good many stops"—I don't know how many, twenty or thirty stops—"and we have yet to see the first young man standing by the side of the depot smoking, on our trip through." Now, I was glad that it didn't happen that there were any boys smoking while they were in my company.

The other night, at Rexburg, at that wonderful little city—and I want to say to you that you have a little city up there that is setting an example to the rest of the world—throughout the year, every year, all the program which you are putting over there, and which you have been putting over there, is wonderful. It is helpful. It must go through all the United States, and you people are setting the example to us. As Mr. Ryan came down the street he was telling this little incident: By the front of the town hall, there were a bunch of young people gathered, and he went away first, then came back and walked back and forth two or three times, that he might observe. During the time that he was there not a cigarette was in evidence, not a cigar; neither was there any profane language, or any language that wouldn't be proper before the father and the mother, and he told that incident there; and that has been my observation. Now people, your principles are right, but are we realizing, are we living up to them fully, or are we drifting away just a little bit?

Now, I want to say, as I said to some people over at Payson the other day. "There are two kinds of audiences I like to speak to. One is a penitentiary audience and another is a 'Mormon' audience; for," I said, "you know that no matter what happens or how late it is you know they will all be there until you get through." And you know, good people, that one of the things that impressed so much those eastern people, as they came here last year, was that when you open your meetings you open with a prayer, and ask that the people might have open hearts and willing souls to gather from what the speaker may say something to take home; and then they closed with prayer that we shall take home some of these things and put them into our lives and into our practices. I hope you will never give up those little customs, because they are wonderful. Another thing that you are different in, the little courtesies, which you always have, that of your seeking to put respect and dignity into all things. I must compliment you upon those things because they belong to you. And there are a good many things that stand for education; and you stand for the boys and the girls, as was said in these words by the President, that if you will take care of the young men of the Church today, and the young women, the young men and the young women will take care of the Church tomorrow.

Now we must do our duty in our homes. If the spirit of the Lord is in your souls to such an extent, I may tell you of an experience and not be misunderstood, for it is not egotism. It is just my wish to help to put into your souls and hearts those things that you can take back with you to make better homes, better education and a better Church, and so I want to tell of this little thing. When growing up in our own home we had to work. It was so new, we were one hundred and fifty miles from the end of the railroad, and we grubbed the stumps and worked; and they had a ball game, and we wanted to go to the ball game on Saturday afternoon. Father didn't seem to think that was worth while, and we got a notion into our heads that we were going to the ball game, and we would run away from home. We were passing from the barbarian stage, I think, at that time. But that was, nevertheless, the situation. So, we decided we were going down to the house and tell father we wouldn't work like this all the while, unless we had a chance to play a little bit. So, finally, it was decided to do it, and then the question came as to who should go; and that was different! But finally, my brother gave a suggestion, that may be, if all went down he wouldn't lick all of us. So we all started and went pretty fast for a ways. Finally, we got to going a little slower, as the importance of the case dawned upon us; and, by the time we got pretty near to our house, we saw father go out towards the barn. We let him go, and went to the house and told mother instead of father. Father was one of those stern, New England people who always said: "Boys, I guess you had better do so and so, now,"—he never guessed but once, and so you see how it was we told mother about it! I will never forget as we came into the house, and my brother began to tell how we wasn't going to work like this, she turned and looked at us and then she rubbed out the piece of dough in her hand, looked down the side once or twice, and when she was through she turned around and with a smile, she lined us up by the crack in the floor of the old log cabin—and then she stood back and looked us over and she said: "Boys, you're not working too hard," that is not what is ailing you, it is work that will make you. If you don't work you will be tramps, you will be beggars and will be in the penitentiary somewhere." She said: "No, I know what is the matter with you, you want to go down to that ball game on Saturday." She had just touched the spot. Now, I don't know how we got away from that place. I can't remember a thing about it. I think we just evaporated, but anyway on this next Monday morning the thing happened in our home that transformed it and transformed our lives. I think father and mother had had a consultation over our difficulties, over Sunday, and as Monday morning came and breakfast was over, father stood around a little and by and by—he didn't know what else to do—he went out and cut an armful of wood.

While he was out, mother spoke up and said: "Boys, why don't you sit down and talk with your father a little while? May be you can arrange to go to that ball game Saturday." Father came in. He threw the wood in the box, and then he stood around again for a little while, and we all stood around. By and by mother saw the situation, and I sometimes think that mothers have a little longer vision than fathers, and she said: "Father, it's raining this morning a little, why don't you sit down and visit with the boys? I guess they would like to talk to you." He sat out the chairs and mother started about the work, but he said: "No, mother, we want you to sit down with us for a few minutes." When we were seated he raised up his hand like this, two or three times, and he said: "Boys, your mother and I have been trying to get a little together so that you wouldn't have quite as hard a time getting started in the world as we had, but it is all for you. We can't take it with us. Now," he said, "I want you to help plan the work for this farm for next year."

I want to say to you, fathers and mothers, that that was the richest, and I think the best, thing ever said in our home. "I want you to help me plan the work for this farm for next year!" The sun was brighter, the grove was greener. My, I got through early that day, and came around the corner to get the mail, but really to tell the boys all about what we were going to do on the farm next year. On next Monday morning, when breakfast was over, father said: "Boys don't you think it would be a good thing for us to sit down for a few minutes and plan the work for the week?" So from that day until my father's death, we sat down for a few moments, about fifteen to thirty minutes every Monday morning, and there we planned and talked over together the things we were to do.

The idea of us boys helping father plan the work! I remember this Monday morning, when we were through, father said: "Well, boys, I have no criticism only this, you planned too much." He said, "it might rain, or perhaps you would like to go to the ball game Saturday afternoon." And now I want to say another little thing. He said: "Boys, remember that when we agree to do certain things we must do them, if it takes all night." And I have been glad a thousand times over what he said, and through all the years after, father never carried out anything else that wasn't agreed on, unless we had a meeting and settled it.

And I want to say, folks, if we are to have great men and women, with richness in their souls, truth in their lives, and reliability and dependability, we must make them in the home primarily. It must not be turned over to the school alone, because it is a task that they can not handle alone, as much as they can do. And I have been thankful that through all these years, no matter how trivial a thing was promised, that thing was granted.

One of your good citizens, you would know his name if I mentioned it, at Logan the other day came to me and said: "Mr. Holden, I am sorry that I cannot hear you in the tabernacle today, because I promised my pupils that I would go up the canyon and eat dinner with them, and I mustn't disappoint them." You know how proud I was of that citizen who was keeping faith with these dear boys and girls! That is one of the grandest things that could possibly be done.

Now people, just one other thought, and I must close. I want to refer to a little thing that has had a great influence on me throughout my life, and that was a great teacher. I was a good deal of trouble to all of the teachers that came to me, and they troubled me a good deal. They seemed to think that, some way, they had to lick me in order to settle everything for the whole school, and I guess that was all right, as I think about it, though I didn't at that time; but the time came when we had a great teacher come into our midst, and that teacher wasn't looking for the bad that was in us. He was looking for the good that was in us. I want to say to you people if we go through this world looking for the bad, we find it everywhere, but if we go through this world looking for the good that is in it, we find it everywhere; and this teacher was looking for the good in it. One time as I leaped out of the door of the school house, at recess, I landed in his hands. I went out with a whoop and yell. You could hear me half a block away, and he got me, and I thought my time had come, but instead of that I felt him pulling away at my chin, and he was smiling, and that was an event in my life, because no teacher ever smiled on me before. And as he pulled, tugged away on it, he made a little remark. The great railroad had been built into Traverse city, and we had been down to see the great iron horse that pulled the train—he said: “My boy, you have lots of energy, haven’t you?” and I agreed to that all right. He said: “Do you know, my boy, it is the same steam in an engine that makes it go ahead that makes it go backward. It all depends on which way you pull the lever.” Further he said: “Do you know, my boy, it is the same energy in you that will make you go ahead and do something worth while in this world or perhaps send you back into the penitentiary? It all depends on which way you pull the lever.” And you know, good people, up at Rexburg, as we went over to that industrial school, that little saying of that great teacher came into my mind, and at other times, that they had pulled the wrong lever. Your Mutual Improvement association, nobody, or any thing, no father or great teacher had taken a hold of the very life of that very boy or girl at the right time, so they pulled in the wrong direction. You know over in Chicago that seventy-three per cent of the crimes and murders are committed by our young men, from the ages of 17 to 23 years—just the time when we lose so many of them, just the time when they are full of the ambition to do something in this world, and they simply pull that lever in the wrong direction. Well, this teacher didn’t stop there. He said: “My boy, I would like if you will do a little thing for me for thirty days and then if you like it, follow it all of your life.” And do you know what it was? It was a very simple little thing, but it has just made a wonderful difference in my life. He said: “When you get up in the morning, and look out in this great, great world again, instead of getting up dreamy like, with your hands in your pockets, with a grouch on ready for trouble, just swing those good arms of yours a little and look out and see what a great day it is, the best day of all creation, because you have back of you all that humanity has accomplished, you are heir to it all.” And he said: “It is the greatest day of all creation, because you have ahead of you all of the things yet to be accomplished,” and then he continued, “Stop just long enough to hold up your right hand and say: “This day I will beat my own record. I will put the best I have in this day’s work.”

tion gathered here, to go back of certain fundamental things that you are to put over for this year's work and accomplish it, no matter what the obstacles are; and when you put it over, it means that it will go throughout the length and breadth of this land, and among the nations of the world. It is wonderful what you can accomplish when all have the spirit of co-operation, have the spirit of working together.

I want to give just one little illustration, and that is this, to show what it means to co-operate and to aid at the same thing and at the same time. You have that opportunity in greater degree here than in any other organization that I know of in these United States. One morning as I went down to my office, in Chicago, a great plate glass window had been broken in, and the furs stolen out, and I looked a little farther and there I saw a gunny sack filled with about two pecks of sand. The burglar had gone across Michigan avenue and scooped up a little sand, and then come over and slung it through the window to break it. I couldn't help but think had he had a train full of sand, taking up a handful of sand at one time, he could have been throwing sand yet and he could not have broken the window; and yet, when he organized a peck of it, it went through easily. People, are we too much divided, a little there and here, and over yonder, throwing sand, little handful of sand? Oh, if we can unite, then set out to work at it, like you have with the anti-cigarette law; after you accomplished what you did with your cigarette law, there is nothing that cannot be accomplished that is good.

Now, people, it has been a pleasure to me to talk to you. I wish there was something I could say that would stimulate you, that would make you want every morning to put the best you have into the day's work, and into the years of your work. Let us remember that no matter what the troubles are that come to us, if we solve them they are for our own benefit, and remember that there is a worst place in every road, and we have struck it perhaps now, but that is no reason why we should lay down and give up. We must go through those worst places, we must measure up to it, and I have noticed them through all my work, throughout my life, that the people who have done things for this world are the people who have carried a burden, are the people who have crossed a continent for their principles and their religion. I thank you.

The congregation sang, "Come, come, ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I feel gratified for the very splendid compliments that have been paid to our people by the previous speaker, and on behalf of the Saints here we thank him, particularly for the words of praise that he has spoken regarding us, away from Salt Lake City. I feel, as he has said, that we are coming into our own. It was like an oasis in the desert, a few years ago, to find anybody who was willing to say anything good about the "Mormons;" but some of the finest and most energetic and most faithful men in all America today, educationally and in other lines, are beginning to say good things of the Latter-day Saints. I want to say to Professor Holden that the Latter-day Saints sang "Come, come, ye Saints," as they crossed the plains, with all their hearts and with all their souls, feeling every word of the lines:

"And should we die before our journey's through,
Happy day! all is well!
We then are free from toil, and sorrow too,
With the just we shall dwell,"

The young men and the young women of the "Mormon" Church who live up to the principles of their fathers, are as loyal and as determined and as willing to sacrifice today as were their fathers, their grandfathers, and their great grandfathers, for that which we know and proclaim to all the world to be, in very deed, the plan of life and salvation, the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Redeemer.

A baritone solo entitled, "The Golden Pathway," was sung by August Glissmeyer.

ELDER CHARLES W. NIBLEY

(Presiding Bishop of the Church.)

The responsibility of speaking to a congregation like this is a task from which I naturally shrink, but I feel honored, nevertheless, in being asked to occupy the short time that is left for our afternoon meeting.

I am one of those who sang this hymn, "Come, come ye saints," often around the camp-fires as we journeyed across the plains with our ox-teams, in the year 1860. Many and many a night around our camp-fires did we sing it. I was eleven years at that time, so I remember the incidents and circumstances of that long journey very well, and of our early settlement here in these valleys. We outfitted at Florence, just above Omaha, on the Missouri River, and started from there in June, and arrived at Salt Lake City in September; so we were just about three months in making the journey. It was a wild, Indian, desert country in those days, and on the bluffs along the upper Platte River, the buffaloes covered the ranges in great abundance.

Arriving here, we didn't know what to do nor where to go. Some friends or ours told us there was quite a colony of Scotch people who had gone up into Cache Valley that spring, and they thought that might be a good place for us to go. We didn't know in the least where that was—whether it was north or south or east or west. We didn't know anything about the elevation—whether it was too cold or too dry, or what it was. Indeed, we knew nothing about it. We simply went where there were some people whom my parents had known in the Old Country. There we settled. We lived in a dugout the first winter. A good many of you people, Latter-day Saints who are here today, hard y know what a dugout is, but we older ones know. I know very well about it, for we lived in the dugout, and lived there in extreme poverty.

The first work I did there as a child was to help my mother glean heads of wheat from the wheat fields, which had been cut with the scythe or cradle, for there were no mowing machines or reapers and self-binders in those days. After we had gleaned this wheat, the heads being tied in little bundles, we took a wash-board and rubbed the heads on it, and thus thrashed out the wheat. This was our thrashing machine. Of course, there was the chaff and some smut mixed in the heads of wheat, and I had to spread the wheat on a wagon cover and take a tin plate and throw it up in the air, and the little breeze that was blowing would blow the chaff from the wheat. This was our fan mill. We then ground this wheat between two millstones, for there was nothing to the grist mill at that time except two millstones; and being ground in that way, the flour was quite dark and it made a black bread, but a very wholesome bread, after all. We had that flour made into porridge for breakfast, baked into cakes or scones for dinner and supper. That, with baked or boiled potatoes, was pretty much all the food we had to eat.

Soon I had to act as herd boy and was sent out to watch our two cows to see that they didn't stray off, and to bring them home at night to be milked, for one of the chief parts of our living was the milk from the two cows. My suit of clothes, which my mother had made for me after we arrived in the valley, consisted of a shirt and a pair of pants, both made out of the tent cover that we had used in crossing the plains. It was pretty stiff and hard cloth, for it was weather-beaten, but it was all that I had—that and a rope around my waist to keep the suit together. That was the extent of my wardrobe.

Everybody who has crossed the plains will recall that after we got to the valley and began to get potatoes and a slight variety of food different from what we had had on the plains, that naturally we were quite hungry. My mother used to put me up a little lunch as I went out to herd the cows, and generally I would have it eaten before I got half a mile from home. Then I didn't have a thing for dinner. I simply had to tighten my rope for dinner. Now, it is all very easy to laugh and joke about it; and, to tell you the truth, I didn't realize the hardships that we were passing through, because I was not yet old enough. But my parents did suffer and sacrificed and endured very much. My heart bleeds as I think of the sacrifices they made so that I might have it easier to get on and that the path might be made more easy for me and mine. But the extreme poverty that we lived in is fresh on my mind to this day, and I repeat with pleasure the words of Shakespeare that Brother Stephen L. Richards quoted this morning, when I recall all those experiences, and I say, in truth, and with all my soul: "Sweet are the uses of adversity." The best lessons that I ever had, came through those hardships and through being compelled to practice the strictest economy and thrift, such as our children nowadays don't know anything about. In those days, it seems to me, we were more willing to render service and to sacrifice for the Church than we are today. Why, in those days, the people were called on to send their teams back to the Missouri river to help gather the poor—those who could not bring themselves to this country—and the people willingly responded and sent their oxen and wagons back to the Missouri river, year after year, without money and without price, to help gather the poor. My parents were of those who had saved enough, through Scotch thrift, so that they were able to buy two yoke of cattle and a couple of cows, and came in what we called an independent company; but there were thousands and tens of thousands of people helped to immigrate to this country by the Saints here sending back their teams and their men to gather up the poor and bring those who couldn't help themselves.

This work called "Mormonism" has been a great work of co-operation—a work of sacrifice and of helpfulness to others. We forget, sometimes, in our abundance and even super-abundance of means, about the conditions in which the early settlers existed when they were subduing the wilderness and making it "blossom as the rose." I know very well that we have our financial troubles today, and many of us, no doubt feel that they are about all we can stand; and yet, when we look around us and see our multitude of blessings and compare them with all the poverty and the sacrifices that our parents made for this work and for our blessing and salvation, we should be led rather to glorify our Father in heaven for his mercies to them and to us.

I am glad to hear such testimonies as we have heard this afternoon from Professor Holden, with respect to the good work that has been accomplished by the Pioneers and by the people who now inhabit these valleys. We hear quite often now from thinking people, a good word spoken of the "Mormon" people and what they have accomplished; but what has been accomplished is nothing in comparison with what will be our achievements, if we will only continue in the same spirit that our parents exhibited in the founding of this country and in laying the foundations of this great institution called "Mormonism." We cannot conceive of what power, union and strength will give us and how glorious and mighty this work will become if only we continue willing to give it the service and sacrifice that it merits.

On every hand we see evidences of disintegration, or disorder, of anarchy, and of the lack of the cohesive qualities that hold society together. The great moral principles, love of one another and obedience to law and order, are greatly lacking these days. One almost trembles for the condition one sees abroad in the world today. In Germany, in France, in Russia, and even in England itself, old England, the most glorious of the old countries, which I hope and pray will live as a nation and prosper for centuries to come, because of the great good she has done to all the world, in being the cradle of liberty, and in breaking down oppression and misrule and tyranny for hundreds of years; and yet in England today, it is just a question of whether the government can stand at all or not. Obedience to law and submission to the orderly procedure of civilized society are being broken down and there arises something above all that—the unions, the secret societies, the pledges that men make that they will abide by their unions and obey them, rather than obey the law of the land; and so, right at this very hour, it is a question as to whether the government of England shall stand or whether the unions shall rule, or whether society and civilization shall not be utterly broken down. The other great countries of Europe, we know, alas, too well, something of their condition. In a financial way, it seems, they are well nigh on the verge of ruin, when we see the German mark, which should be worth twenty-three cents, quoted, as you can read in the Deseret News, tonight, at one and six-tenths cents, which means that it is not worth six cents on the dollar in the markets of the world. Imagine a man or corporation composed of business men issuing due bills or notes until the paper they issue becomes worth less than six cents on the dollar. You would hardly expect that man or firm to ever pay out. And so it seems that the elements of disintegration and disorder are abroad in the world to such an extent that the scripture, which hath foretold of the perplexity of nations, is now being fulfilled. Even our own beloved nation, this nation which the Lord himself has been the means of founding, as we believe, and as we read in our Doctrine and Covenants, the word of the Lord revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith, wherein he says: "I, the Lord, raised up wise men for this very purpose;" that is, to found this Government—and even this nation today has its perplexities so that we hardly know where to turn.

Now, in the midst of it all, notwithstanding our small perplexities here at home, we have peace, the peace of the gospel; a peace that no other people have; a peace that passeth understanding. Men cannot understand it, but it is here—the peace of God; the peace that comes only through the gospel of Jesus Christ. "My peace give I unto you." Although we may be in more or less distressed circumstances, yet that we have, and we know that the Lord is at the helm; we know that this is not man's organization. It is the Lord God Almighty who revealed himself to the Prophet Joseph Smith; and through those revelations, through those instructions, this organization has been founded, and the power of the Holy Ghost, the power of the Priesthood of the Son of God, has been given to this Church, and that is what holds it together and makes it great, and will continue to hold it together and make it great, and it is not the power of man, nor do we glory in man. We do not say, we do not allow it to be said, that Brigham Young has built up this Church. Brigham Young was the honored instrument, in the hands of God, who brought that scattered, mobbed, robbed, people to this land and declared that "This is the place; here we will stay," when it was a most desolate, desert-looking place; for this is indeed the place. He didn't know, at the time, the marvelous riches of this land, but you can draw a circle around Salt Lake City three hundred miles, making this city the center, and there is more of gold, of silver, of iron, of coal, of lead, of copper, and of all the precious metals; more variety of grains and vegetables and fruit and flowers; more of everything that is needful for the use of man within that circle than in any such area in all of the known globe. This is the place. The Lord God Almighty, through his prophet, spoke it. Here is peace; here is abundance, here is the power which the Lord gave, and which he alone has given, and which no other people in the world have. Read in the same Doctrine and Covenants, the book of revelations, that the prophet Joseph Smith gave, that the rights of this Priesthood are inseparably connected—connected so that they cannot be separated from the powers of heaven—then we are as nothing, and we, too, will disintegrate and break in pieces and go down and become as nothing.

But it is true, and everlastingly true, that the rights of the Priesthood of the Son of God are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven. That being true, there is a power, there is a virility, there is a cohesive strength that holds this people together. I have seen the power and demonstration of the spirit manifested in the past few months down in the California mission. I have wondered sometimes when I have heard brethren, and some who are not our brethren, say: "Well, you wait a little while; wait and see the third generation, the fourth generation, and so on. You will see this thing going to pieces." Why, I recall when I was a boy eighteen years of age, working in a little hotel at Brigham City, that Governor Stanford, and the great men with him who were building the Pacific Railroad at that time, stayed at this hotel. I was active around the place as a youngster and had my ears and eyes open, and I recall hearing them discuss in that hotel, one evening, what a wonderful man this Brigham Young was; how he had gotten the people together here, how he could guide them, order them, manipulate them, and do as he pleased with them, and so on. But Governor Stanford and the other wise men with him said: "Wait until Brigham Young dies, and they will be broken and go to pieces." They didn't know what they were talking about. I have seen, in the California mission within the last two months, where I have traveled with President McMurrin and President Grant, the same potency, the same virility, the same strength, the same power of the Holy Ghost that my father saw seventy-seven years ago when he joined the Church in Scotland.

It is right here in the Church today, under the Presidency of Heber J. Grant, just as much as it ever was under the Presidency of Brigham Young, or Joseph F. Smith, or any other. Is it Heber J. Grant's power that is doing it? No. Is it man's power at all? No.

It is the power of Almighty God; it is the power of the Holy Ghost; it is the power of the Priesthood of the Son of God, inseparably connected with the powers of heaven; and that is what is giving guidance, and that gives guidance and direction and cohesion and strength to this great organization, and not the power of man, nor do we honor man for it. No, not to men is the honor. Thine, O God, is the honor, and the power, and the glory forever, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "The time is far spent, there is little remaining."

Benediction was offered by Elder Adolph Merz, President of the North Sanpete stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until Wednesday, 10 o'clock a. m., April 6, 1921.

FOURTH DAY

Conference was opened in the Tabernacle, Wednesday, April 6, 1921, at 10 o'clock a. m., by President Heber J. Grant who presided.

The congregation sang, "Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning."

The invocation was offered by Elder James Wotherspoon, President of the North Weber stake of Zion.

Miss Colton sang a solo entitled, "O rest in the Lord."

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

Our attention has been called repeatedly, by various of the brethren, during this most excellent conference, to the purposes of the Lord in gathering the Latter-day Saints in one place, and particularly the advantages which he had in view for our settlement in this particular place; and I have been thrilled in my contemplation of this glorious prospect, and should like to read a few passages from the revelations of the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith on this subject.

PURPOSE OF THE GATHERING.

First, I direct your attention to the Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 29:7 and following, referring to the elders of the Church and the Saints:

"And ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts;

"Wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father, that they shall be gathered in unto one place upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts and be prepared in all things against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked;

"For the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, when the earth is ripe: and all the proud, and they that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that wickedness shall not be upon the earth;

"For the hour is nigh, and that which was spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled; for as they spoke so shall it come to pass;

"For I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand."

I now ask you to consider this passage from Section 101, reading at the 39th paragraph:

"When men are called unto mine everlasting gospel, and covenant with an everlasting covenant, they are accounted as the salt of the earth, and the savor of men;

"They are called to be the savor of men. Therefore, if that salt of the earth lose its savor, behold, it is thenceforth good for nothing, only to be cast out, and trodden under the feet of men."

Still another passage in Section 103, seventh verse:

"And by hearkening to observe all the words which I, the Lord their God, shall speak unto them, they shall never cease to prevail until the kingdoms of the world are subdued under my feet, and the earth is given unto the saints, to possess it for ever and ever.

"But inasmuch as they keep not my commandments, and hearken not to observe all my words, the kingdoms of the world shall prevail against them.

"And inasmuch as they are not the saviors of men, they are as salt that has lost its savor, and is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men."

And still another passage from Section 86, reading at the eighth paragraph:

"Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the Priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers,

"For ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God;

"For they were set to be a light unto the world, and to be the saviors of men;

"Therefore your life and the Priesthood hath remained and must needs remain through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.

"Therefore, blessed are ye if ye continue in my goodness, a light unto the Gentiles, and through this Priesthood, a savior unto my people Israel. The Lord hath said it. Amen."

These inspired utterances, full of great promise, and yet guarded with caution and warning from the Lord, are blessings that shall be ours through faithfulness—these things, I say, are an incentive and an inspiration to all Latter-day Saints. When I think of their import, what the prospects of the future are, as one of the brethren remarked yesterday, great as have been the achievements of the past, they are but the beginning of glorious things that shall be sung of Zion. Notwithstanding the glory of the past, the future is more splendid than the past possibly could have been, because this work, the work of God, is to roll forth until its power, its glory, its influence, shall fill the whole earth, and not be confined to a few valleys up in the tops of the mountains.

THE WORLD'S OPPOSITION TO THE GATHERING.

Brethren and sisters, I am sure as we read the history of the various movements on the part of the Church to assemble, to establish themselves in one place, we have discovered that surely the enemy of this work, who is the devil, has been opposed to the gathering of the Latter-day Saints. We were not permitted to remain in the place where, ninety-one years ago this very day, the Church was organized. The powers of evil were arrayed upon all hands, and the result was the Church had to move. Their gathering at Kirtland again was opposed, and the powers of evil were arrayed against the movement to gather in the Saints from the various parts of the world. Again a move was made under pressure and force. Their gathering at Independence, Missouri, was fraught with the same kind of danger and difficulty, mob violence, people fleeing before their enemies, their homes consigned to the flames. Their other effort to establish themselves in another section of Missouri met with the same kind of opposition. Do you recall the individual who harangued the Saints during the time that the Prophet Joseph and his brother Hyrum were prisoners incarcerated in one of the foulest dungeons that has disgraced the footstool of God? They were told never to expect their prophet to return; that "his die was cast, and his doom was sealed," and the voluntary advice given was that if they wanted to live at peace and be happy, never to gather any more, but to scatter and not to organize wards and stakes but to be like other people. That is what the devil has desired from the beginning—that we should be like other people; but the Lord has decreed that this people should be a peculiar people unlike other people. The answer of President Young and his associates, to this advice, was that they would not desert one another but would enter into covenant to stay by one another until the poorest Saint was brought out of Missouri. Again they had a similar experience in their gathering at Nauvoo. Though they grew here to larger proportions and established themselves on a more firm basis, nevertheless, it was the same spirit of opposition to scatter this people, to divide them, to send them forth, and not to permit them to gather and to organize. The great movement into the west was undoubtedly for the purpose of giving this people the chance to be gathered and established in peace, in security, until they should become strong enough, their works understood well enough, to find favor in the sight of good men who would no longer lend their influence and power to the breaking up of this people and their being scattered any more. And transplanted here in this place, we had the opportunity to take root and to grow, and still in the time of our thriving, behold the enemy was again alert. Through the tongue of lying individuals, misrepresentations were made that brought upon this people an army. No matter what the purpose and motive was, on the part of those who sent them, in their hearts, many of those who came here in what was known as Johnston's Army came for the avowed purpose of again breaking up the foundation of this work. Thanks be to God that they did not succeed, and that the Lord used them as a means to further establish his work, and that the day of animosity that would seek to disturb us and drive us hence has passed and gone, and at last we have earned, in the estimation of the leaders of our country and a great majority of our fellow-citizens, the right to exist as organized bodies. Thank the Lord for that day of triumph.

But do not suppose, my brethren and sisters, that the enemy is satisfied or that he is content to leave us alone, for he still is opposed to the gathering of this people, and if he cannot break them up, root and branch, and drive them forth, he will lay siege against us in devious ways, with cunning craftiness. He will seek by all of his power to nullify, as far as possible, the great blessings the Lord had in view in the gathering of the Latter-day Saints, and to wean away our sons and daughters, to make paths here and there that shall divert them away from the gathering place and away from the purpose of the Lord in bringing this people together.

OUR SONS AND DAUGHTERS A HERITAGE OF REAL WORTH.

We heard some excellent advice yesterday from Brother Stephen L. Richards, on the question of the financial salvation of this people, all of which is important, of course, and I desire to speak of another phase of this work wherein we must exercise conservation to the accomplishment of the great purposes of the Lord in our assembling here. Valuable as are the material things of this world, nevertheless, more valuable are the sons and daughters of God. Our boys and our girls, as Doctor Holden said yesterday, are our heritage that is of real worth. They are worth more to us than the land, and all the wealth of the hills and the valleys, and it is to the conservation of these sons and daughters of the Latter-day Saints that I desire to direct the attention of my brethren and sisters this morning. One of the means which the adversary has employed to nullify the blessings of the gathering may be noted in our several communities in the disposition that many of our daughters have, particularly, and some of our sons, to consider their birthright lightly, to treat it as a thing of small consequence, and to jeopardize it by forming alliances in marriage with those who do not belong to our faith. My brethren and sisters, when I think of the value of these precious boys and girls, I see also the future of Zion in them. Our baptisms in the mission fields, last year, were the largest in the history of many years, if not in the history of the Church, and from that source, of course, in years that are past, we have drawn great strength to the Church, but while these baptisms shall undoubtedly continue to bring into the fold countless thousands of the honest in heart from the various nations of the earth, nevertheless the source from which we shall draw our greatest strength shall be in the conversion and salvation of our own sons and daughters, because last year, for example, there were more than three times as many children born to Latter-day Saint parents as all the baptisms that were accomplished in the world.

WE MAY LOSE OUR HERITAGE BY WRONG MARRIAGE.

So that, the future growth of this work depends upon saving these boys and girls, that is, so far as numerical strength is concerned ; and one of the most fruitful means of losing them, of causing loss to the community purpose and interest, and weakening the organization of the Church, dissipating our forces, is the movement that would have us enter into marriage with those of unbelieving faith. Then I know, because I have had the opportunity, and not many men have had a better opportunity, to study this situation as I have observed it while presiding over the Northwestern States Mission, for I saw hundreds of our Latter-day Saint girls and many boys living in Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington, and on visits to California, and President McMurrin could also testify to this thing, for he has seen it in that section—hundreds, I say, of these Latter-day Saint boys and girls who have married out of their faith who have drifted away—this movement does not look to the concentration and building up of our communities nor the establishment of this work, but it works to the very opposite. It is scattering, it is dividing, it is dissipating our forces.

THE EVILS OF BEING UNEQUALLY YOKED TOGETHER.

I have no quarrel, nor shall I engage in any quarrel, with those who do not belong to us, who have sought our daughters or our sons in marriage. I do not blame a non-“Mormon” for trying to get a “Mormon” girl, because he would not find anybody better if he went all over the world; but I do seriously question the wisdom of that boy or girl who jeopardizes the glorious purposes and privileges the Lord had for them, who, through much tribulation, brought their parents to this place, where they might provide the opportunity for believing sons and daughters to marry believing sons and daughters; where the opportunity might be provided for them to grow up, like calves in the stall, as the ancient prophet said, to inherit these blessings. I believe there was wisdom in Paul’s statement, indeed I know it, for I have heard tales of sorrow and distress too long for me to repeat here, that would make a volume, that have come from those disobedient sons and daughters who have disregarded the desires and wishes of their parents and who have made an alliance wherein they are not evenly yoked together, and Paul’s advice was good, that you should not be unevenly yoked together. I recognize that we are not the only Church which believes in this doctrine. We accord to all men the same privilege, to preach this doctrine and to hold their own within their own circle. This is not selfish. We are asking only that which we accord to others, and that which others, many of them, claim for their own; but in asking this we are asking it for the peace and the blessing of our boys and girls first of all. Is there happiness in the home of those who are unevenly yoked together? My experience is that it is utterly impossible for a Latter-day Saint girl, trained and reared in a “Mormon” home, with “Mormon” ideals of the right relationship of husband and wife, parents and children, the very family institution itself, the care of children, their education, their training, their care in times of sickness and in death—there is no possibility for that boy or girl to enjoy to the highest and the fullest extent peace on earth, joy and happiness in this present time, and salvation and glory in the celestial kingdom of God, under this arrangement; it is not possible.

AN ILLUSTRATION.

I remember receiving a letter recently from a young man on a mission, who disregarded the advice I gave him, not to take this step. He said to me that he now regretted it, because, he said, "We do not pull together, my wife and I do not have the same kind of ideals nor ambitions for our children, and when I would go ahead she holds back." He said it reminded him of an experience he had on the farm. They had a team of mules, and one day one of the mules took sick, and in order to let the work go forward, they substituted a blooded horse. When the blooded horse was hitched up with the mule, the horse being faster and more willing to go forward, every time he would get a little ahead of the mule, the mule would stop, and so, he said, it was nothing but a seesaw; they did not get anywhere. He said, "Now, that mule would have been a very good mule hitched up with another mule, but it wasn't a good thing to hitch it up with a blooded horse." The implication is again, that you cannot work successfully unequally yoked together. I do not mean to imply, of course, that the Latter-day Saints are the only ones that are blooded horses, and all the rest are mules, not at all, but I do mean to say that you do not work successfully under that combination, and I have received from more than one girl the plea to please convey to the daughters of Israel their experience and their advice not to take the step they took. Now, so much for the individual blessing.

UNEQUAL MARRIAGE IS A LOSS TO THE CHURCH.

Then again, let me say that there is a loss to the Church. How many of those born under these circumstances remain within the fold? Not many. There is a loss that we cannot afford to have constantly dissipating our forces and running away from us.

THE APPROVED AND APPOINTED WAY OF MARRIAGE.

My brethren and sisters, again, not only do we desire that our sons and daughters shall marry within the fold, but we desire that they shall come into the house of the Lord and enter into the sacred and holy obligations of matrimony in the Lord's approved and appointed way. We desire it again for their peace, for their salvation. Our records show that the divorce rate among those who enter into marriage in this holy, approved way is very much lower in the Church among that group than among the group who marry for time only. And why? Of course it is significant to all of us that those who enter into these holy bonds of matrimony for time and eternity do not begin to plan to separate and to part, but they begin to plan to live together not only in time but in eternity, for we are not building for time, we are building for eternity also. And there are connected with these blessings certain privileges, of course, that except men shall enter into them in this life, or they are performed in this life for men and women, those who fail to receive these blessings cannot come into the celestial kingdom of God where God and Christ dwell. It is a "Mormon" truism that is current among us and we all accept it, that as man is God once was and as God is man may become. That does not signify that man will become God. I am sorry to say, and yet it is a truth, that not many men will become what God is, simply because they will not pay the price, because they are not willing to live up to the requirements; and still all men may, if they will, become what God is, but only those who are heirs of the celestial glory shall ever be possible candidates, to become what God is. We desire, therefore, that these boys and girls shall have the safety and protection of this kind of marriage.

TEMPLE MARRIAGE A PROTECTION TO WOMEN

There are some states that have regulations providing for the physical examination of men and in some instances women before certificates of marriage are issued. I lived for a long time in a state where that practice was in vogue and still is in vogue, and I have wished that this were true everywhere. But even if it should be extended to all the states of the Union, still I say to the daughters of Israel there is a better protection for you than this, and a better protection than ever will be provided by any law of the land, in that you have the privilege of requiring the man who proposes marriage to you to put himself in condition so that he can pass muster before his bishop to ascertain and to know—that that man is not only physically clean but he is morally clean and that he has faith in God, that he has honored the holy Priesthood and that he is worthy to go into the house of God. That protection is the best that possibly can be provided for the daughters of Israel, and it is yours. Will you not embrace it? Do not jeopardize your happiness, your future success in time and in eternity, by ignoring this great and wonderful privilege that has been given to the daughters of Israel. Then many a boy who has entered into that solemn and holy obligation in this, the Lord's appointed way, has kept pure and clean by the covenants which he makes that he will be true to his wife, and he has stood in the hour of temptation many a time and resisted it because of the obligation which is upon him. Is that not a strength to the boy as well as a protection to the woman? For I want to tell you that no happiness can come to men or women where confidence is gone, and where there is not absolute trust in one's companion.

NO DOUBLE STANDARD WITH THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

Oh, thank the Lord that in this Church we have no double standard. We have heard it, I have, from my childhood. I received from my mother and from the organizations of the Church this admonition. She taught me to live as clean and as chaste and as pure as the girl I married and asked to be my wife, the mother of my children. She taught me that she would rather hear of my death than that I had been immoral and had debauched myself. Thank God for that advice, and that I had the courage and the strength to keep it and to live up to it.

So, by reason of this provision, there is safety and protection and happiness to the sons and daughters of Zion that cannot come when they go out of their faith and mingle and associate in these relations with those who have entered into no such covenant and have lived no such life as this. And yet I do not wish to imply for a moment that there are not those who are clean, who are chaste and who are pure, who live in the world; I do not imply that at all, but I do say that here are the institutions and organizations that require such a life of Latter-day Saint boys and girls.

THE EVILS OF DIVORCE AND CHILDLESS MARRIAGES.

One of the great sources which brings sorrow and trouble in the marriage state and that is distressing this country is the divorce evil. I notice that at a great gathering of women recently, in Washington, this problem was discussed and it was suggested that the women's vote must come forward to save America or else we shall be on the highway to moral degeneracy, because the divorce rate in this country has been mounting until it is announced that we now excel Japan in the number of divorces in this country and Japan has been leading the world. What is the answer to it? I thought, as I heard Dr. Holden yesterday, there is no problem that now distresses the world, of a moral character, of a financial character, of a social nature, except the key to solve it is in the hands of the Latter-day Saints, even as the Lord said he would make his people a light unto the world. We have just begun to solve these problems; we are going to go forward, and we will solve that problem also. The great contributing cause to divorces in this country are childless marriages, wherein men and women live to themselves the selfish life and pander to make these glorious bodies, with their divine endowment, mere harps of pleasure, and they will reap disgust, discomfiture, and condemnation, when they come to stand in the presence of Him who gave to man as his first great commandment, "Multiply and replenish the earth."

My brethren and sisters, boys and girls who enter into marriage in the Latter-day Saints Church, in the Lord's approved way, enter in properly instructed, and if they live up to their obligations to one another they will keep, by all the power God has given them, that great and holy commandment, and reap for themselves joy, peace, happiness and blessings, in this life, and blessings of an eternal character in the world to come.

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS ARE NOT TO BE ABSORBED.

Brethren and sisters, we are not to be absorbed. The Lord has decreed it. He knows how to keep us where we ought to be, and when we get straying off the track he knows how to bring us back, for he will not desert this people. His promise was that this work should never be overcome nor given to another people. He may chastise us, he may correct us, but he will not let us go astray. If we, therefore, keep his commandments, we not only shall escape chastisement, but we shall come into our glorious heritage, and the light of Zion shall continue to rise, for behold, her day has come, her light shall shine, the glory of it shall be reflected to the uttermost ends of the earth, and the men of all nations shall come and say, "Let us go up to the mountain of the house of the God of Jacob, so that we may learn to walk in his paths," and the attention of the angels of heaven shall be called to the earth, and unto this people; and behold, the King shall come and he shall receive his people and reign with them a thousand years.

God speed that day, for Zion's future is as sure as the sun shines, if we will only keep the commandments of the Lord, and all these glorious things shall come to pass. May the Lord find us, and our children, and children's children, identified with this glorious work in the day of its triumph, I humbly pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

A solo entitled, "O Lord, remember me," was sung by Mrs. Ruth Brewerton.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

My brethren and sisters: I have been very greatly impressed with what has been said from this stand during the sessions of this conference, and I believe, with all my heart, that you and I will go to our homes with a resolution in our hearts to live nearer to God than we have ever done before. This is the desire of my heart, and I trust that we will be able to retain, to a very marked extent, the great spiritual feast that we have enjoyed during the last three or four days.

Yesterday afternoon when some of the brethren were speaking of the pioneers to this state, certain thoughts came to me, and I too was impressed with a greater realization of the fact that the Latter-day Saints have always placed their faith in God and in his Son Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of the world. With the faith in God, in Christ Jesus and in the Holy Ghost, they have approached their daily lives, and their lives through all the years, and they have retained that implicit faith to this day. If there is anything in the world that is needed at this hour the world over, it is the simple faith in God and in his Son Jesus Christ.

Not long ago I walked into a school room in southern Utah, and while sitting listening to a recitation in western history, the school teacher of that grade made this remark to the boys and girls of the sixth grade: "The 'Mormon' pioneers who came to these valleys before the railroad were a good people, but they were uncultured and unprogressive; we are thankful that the generation of today is becoming cultured and realizing the day of progress."

"The 'Mormon' pioneers were a good people but uncultured and unprogressive"—that to come from a person who posed before those children as one who knew something about the history of America and the western part of this continent. I want to go on record here, holding, as I do, the Chair of Western History, at the University of Utah, and say that a finer type of people never lived than the "Mormon" pioneers who settled these valleys of Utah, and they were a cultured and progressive people; I sometimes think they were more cultured and progressive than we are today, but this is not true, if the generation of today is realizing the great power and light of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The "Mormon" people were brought from different nations of the earth. They became convinced in those very early days of the truthfulness of the gospel by the revelation of God to them individually. They became an inspired people. God never called upon cowards to do work for him, but he has given the work invariably to high types of people, high minded people, a highly spiritual people. You Scandinavians that have come from the Scandinavian countries, you English, you Germans, and all who have come from the different nations of Europe, did not accept the gospel of Jesus Christ because of your ignorance. You accepted the gospel of Jesus Christ because of your intelligence, your high mindedness; and though you were poor in worldly goods in your native lands, you were rich in spiritual endowments. The peoples of the world that have been gathered to these valleys from the nations of Europe are the highest types of those nations, because of the fact it takes a high type of man or woman to understand this gospel of Jesus Christ and to obtain a testimony of its truth.

The Latter-day Saints came to these valleys but a few years after the organization of the Church by a few men who were not educated in the sense that they had been to the great schools of America, but they were educated in the greater laws of righteousness, men who had communed with God, men who had opened their souls to the light of heaven. Those men assembled, and by the gift and the power of God, organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Then began their historic march from the Atlantic seaboard to the far West, to these mountains, and wherever they went, the Latter-day Saints were first imbued with the wonderful testimony that they had to bear to the world, namely, that God had spoken from the heavens. Could there be any greater ideal for which to work? With that ideal they came into the far west, they developed the lands; they were a progressive people. In 1840, at the time of the invention of the modern farming implements, the modern plow, the modern threshing machine, mowing machine and sewing machine, they took those machines, and adapted them to their work, to their daily lives; they brought those inventions to the valleys of Utah, and used them in developing the soil. But not only were they progressive from an economic viewpoint, but those "Mormon" pioneers thought first and foremost of the intellectual and spiritual development. In a study of seventy-two towns in the history of the Great Basin, we have found that invariably the "Mormon" pioneers, wherever they went, not only built their cabins but they built their school and meeting houses; they had their teachers, and the first school in Utah was opened less than three months after the advent of the pioneers to this valley. In 1850, by an act of the first legislative assembly of the State of Deseret, the first university west of the Missouri river was inaugurated; the faculty in the year 1850 was organized, and that university still lives on the hill that in 1850 was picked out by Governor Brigham Young and the legislature for a higher institution of learning. I know the criticism has been given that it was not a real university. It was a real university for that day, for we recall the fact that in 1845 to 1850. Harvard, Columbia and Yale universities were only high schools; in fact their curricula would not equal the curricula of the high schools of America today. The ideal of university training was indelibly stamped on the hearts of those pioneers. They developed the schools. They had their different educational organizations, their philosophical societies—Wilford Woodruff was the president of the Scientific Society, here in Salt Lake City. They held meetings, and had their various meetings of the priesthood for intellectual training. Finally the different auxiliary organizations were formed, and the youth of the Latter-day Saints invited to attend the meetings of those organizations.

When you come to study this great educational movement in the Great Basin, you will find that the "Mormon" people fostered every factor possible for the development of the youth. They built a theatre in the wilderness, and the sole purpose was that the people might have amusements of the proper kind. After they built this theatre in the wilderness, the master of the English language, Shakespeare, was studied, his plays were produced, and I remember not long ago of having the opportunity of taking Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson into the old Social Hall here, now called the "Little Theatre;" we walked in there three or four years ago during a very stormy day, and as we went down the aisle, that greatest actor of all English speaking people looked above the stage and saw the bust of Shakespeare. He took off his hat and said, "That tells the story as to whether or not your pioneers appreciated art and the finer things of life."

True, those pioneers did not have what we have today, and I know that Professor Holden, when he stood on this stand yesterday and spoke to us, realized the fact they were essentially agriculturists. They had to get down to the soil and conquer it to lay the foundation for the institutions of today; but in conquering the soil, they loved it and realized more than any other people that agriculture is the basis of our whole civilized life. Many were the times when the farmer plowed, planted his seed, and went forth to water the dry land, some weeks later, but there was no water. Many were the times that the pioneer farmer saw his wheat field dry up. Many were the times he went forth to harvest but there was no harvest. And yet he did not move to another clime. His prophet had said, "This is the place," and in those words he had faith and his faith sustained him. There was an altruism developed among those pioneers that we do not find today—a right altruism, a real spirit of co-operation. The altruism, the love of neighbor, which is fundamental to the love of God, has never been surpassed since that day, if it has been equaled.

Each town of early-day Utah was an ecclesiastical unit, with social and political tendencies. The ecclesiastical unit was based on the idea of individual power and self-development through religious principles. Each individual was responsible in this religious scheme to his God; each was independent to grow intellectually and morally in the sense that man is in the image of God. It is necessary to say this in order that we may understand the democracy of the town government of early-day Utah. Politically and socially, all rights were inherent in the people.

The power that held the people together was the religious feeling; and with this the economic interests common to all. In these social groups, the desire was to live and let live. The people were intensely practical; the physical conditions of the country made them so. They were compelled to apply their religious idealism to the immediate problems in hand.

The two ideals fundamental in traditional American thought are the ideal of individual freedom to compete unrestrictedly for the resources of the country, and the ideal of democracy, where the government is for all the people and by all the people. American democracy has always been based on free lands. Such ideals were always present in the colonizing of the valleys of Utah. But we must not forget that the "Mormon" colonists were always religious in their organization in form as well as in purpose.

I am glad to say that Dr. Turner of Harvard University has recently said in a lecture before the students there: "The 'Mormon' people, in the far west, developed the finest type of New England town government that was ever developed outside of New England." That alone stamps the "Mormon" people as fine types of Americans, and when they came here they plunged into the wilderness with the Constitution of the United States as their fundamental organic law.

Were they cultured? Yes; because they were men and women of ideals, because they had implicit faith in God; the faith that is needed in the world today. Where they cultured? Yes; because those "Mormon" pioneers planted here, I believe as no other people planted in the history of America, the five great institutions of all civilization; namely, agriculture, the home, the church, the state, and the school; and in a study of these five institutions of civilization will you find the splendid history of the "Mormon" pioneers who settled here in those early days. The teacher who spoke as she did, spoke in ignorance.

I pray God that we may retain that old-fashioned, implicit faith in God that our fathers and mothers had.

This is what has been written about those pioneers and has gone from this state to some of the universities, not only of America but the world, and it was the paragraph that closed a recent lecture at the University of California:

"Side by side with the development of the natural resources of Utah," [our temporal history] "Utah has constantly cultivated those things that make for culture. The growth of the Church has been brought about by the virility and vision of its leaders, and it has been able to solve the new problems of civilization. In the process of expansion the 'Mormon' people have won distinction not alone in industrial enterprise, but in the fine arts as well; in fact, more than in the fine arts, more than in industry, the 'Mormon' people have won distinction as the finest type of religionists living today. The bond of sympathy between the practical and the esthetic, between reality and vision, between the temporal and the spiritual, the Latter-day Saints from the beginning have ever regarded as the secret of present strength and the measure of enduring achievement."

The late Judge C. C. Goodwin once paid the following tribute to the "Mormon" pioneers in the columns of the Salt Lake Tribune:

"It is good to see the Saints bring their children in to conference. We wonder if many of them stop to tell their children the beautiful story of the evolution that, the full history pictures, since the day that the first weary company came down the eastern mountains and halted there.

"That was Salt Lake's first moving picture; there has been none like it since. Contemplating it, the temple, the hotels, theaters, churches, hospitals, great business houses and stately homes, the temples to religion, to learning, to industry, to justice and mercy, all vanish away; the roar of business becomes still; the silence which the desert broods comes back; gardens vanish, the flowers all fade; there is nothing as now seen save the surrounding mountains, the lake shimmering in the distance, the sun shining from above and the desolation that wrapped all this region round like a burial robe. Even the branches on the few stunted trees hung drooping like funeral plumes, while the sigh of the breeze coming down from the hills, or up from the lake, was as mournful as is the requiem chanted on the shores of the Styx.

"The way a state is carved out of a wilderness and rounded into form is always an interesting theme. The way the first stakes of civilization were driven in Utah was dramatic enough to be set to words for the stage. In their penury and distress the first act of the Utah pioneers was to sink upon the earth; not in prayer for help, not in lamentation and despair, but in glad praise service in thanks to the power that had led them through the wastes and over the trans-fixed billions of the everlasting hills to a place of rest.

"Then their work began. They were not dreaming of fortunes.

"The struggle before them was to live and that struggle continued almost without abatement to the end. Often only the bare necessities were vouchsafed; few comforts, no luxuries. In that rough friction their youth was worn away; the men surrendered their ambitions, the women folded fond dreams and a thousand innocent longings in their hearts and drew the silence of self-sacrifice over them forever.

"But then the miracle commenced. The desert began to transfer the wrinkles and sadness from its somber face to theirs, while in turn it began to absorb the splendor of their youth, and to cause it to be reflected in flowers and fruits and golden grain and vines in which the birds made their nests and filled all the soft air with their songs.

"Later still, as though touched with pity, the irresponsible mountains began to swing back their adamantine doors, revealing the treasures within, where they had remained secreted, waiting until the time should be ripe for the coming of progress and enlightenment. The overworn eyes of those pioneers have mostly all closed; their hands, gnarled by labor, are nearly all folded, but the miracle is still being performed. More and more fields are annually rescued from the desert; more and more flowers are blooming; more and more birds are singing; wider and wider fields grow golden under the harvest sun, recalling the old legend, that artist angels, in the long ago, came here from Summerland and with divine pencils, dipped in the dyes where light is brewed, left it all as a frame for a city beautiful which man was to build; we may believe that the building of that city has been begun and is progressing toward perfection.

"This is the story that should be told the children when they are brought in to conference, and then they should be told to listen and note if they cannot still hear the echoes of that first praise service, with which the fathers dedicated this soil to the enlightenment which comes through devotion to duty, through the omnipotence of patient labor, and through faith in God."

God grand that we may see these great things in our history, and that the truth of the faith and the development of the Latter-day Saints and their great message may yet become known to the honest in heart and to all the world. I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

(Of the Presiding Bishopric.)

To one not accustomed to occupying this position and one whose mission is to labor in helping to care for the temporal affairs of the Church, this is indeed a task. However, I rejoice in this opportunity that I have to address you, for I have discovered in my short ministry that, through service we grow best and develop most. Never in my life have I felt the responsibility that rests upon me more than I feel it at this time, and never in all my life have I had in my heart a greater desire to "keep the commandments" than I have now.

I could not help but think yesterday, while Bishop Nibley was addressing us, of the contrast in his life and my life. The seventh son, thirteenth child in order of birth, a comfortable home, a mother whose every thought was for the welfare of her children, a father whose life stands out as a shining example in service, a grandfather whose life was given in an attempt to help establish this work upon earth.

It has been my privilege to know intimately (if it can be said that a boy through having the opportunity of being in the presence of such men almost constantly, can be intimate), four presidents of this Church, with their counselors; I have seen one complete change in the quorum of the Twelve, and have known personally all of these men. Under such influences and conditions, I have grown to manhood, and when called to the Presiding Bishopric, if I had been asked what my equipment was, I perhaps would have answered that it had been my privilege to hold every office in the priesthood, from that of deacon to high priest; that under the direction of good men, faithful and true, I have been encouraged to function in each office. It has been my privilege to labor in the Sabbath school, as a student, as a teacher in the class, and as an aid in the stake organization. In the Mutual, as a student, as a class leader, as an officer in the ward, and as an officer in the stake. What a wonderful blessing has come to me. And yet, well do I remember, soon after having been called to this position, being sent to one of our stakes with a message to deliver to the bishops of that stake, upon going into the room where they had assembled, and seeing before me men whose hair was gray, or turning gray, there came upon me the feeling of fear. It seemed to me absurd, for me, a youth, to stand there before those men tried in the service, and attempt to instruct them in their duties. My first thought was to retire; how could I get away from this responsibility? And oh, how I prayed that God would bless me and give me strength equal to that responsibility. It came, but not with words of logic, not with the power of oratory to convince them, but, as I attempted to form my thoughts in words, I found, as I uttered them, that they fell upon ears long trained to patience, upon hearts that breathed forth the spirit of charity, upon souls that had faith in God and honored his Priesthood. I went from that meeting with a new vision, a new sight. I saw the bigness of the work in an entirely new light. I found that this equipment which I thought I had was only the foundation upon which I must build, and I made a survey of myself. Where must I start to improve? I found that it was much easier for me to tear down, much easier for me to find fault and to criticize, than it was to build up, than it was to construct. I found that it took no effort whatever to tear down, but it took strength, it took courage, it took the power of will to build up. And from that day to this, I have tried; God knows I have tried. I have been encouraged very much from time to time in reading the scripture. One passage that I have had on my mind, since the opening remarks of this conference, I will read, and perhaps comment upon. And let me say that this was uttered by one of the apostles of old, and I think applies in this day with the same force that it did at that time:

"Wherefore, laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings."

And I hope I will be permitted to add to that the remarks of President Penrose, in which he says avoid speculations, for in this Church there is no need for speculations, no room for lying, or for the man who indulges in it; there is no place for malice or for him who has malice in his heart. He who has guile cannot live properly his religion, and be a true servant of God. Hypocrites are undesirable and cannot become useful in the sight of God. To envy is to take a step downward and lessen our power to do good. Evil speaking of our brethren, of our neighbors, of those who are in authority, is the first step to apostasy.

"As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby:

"If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious.

"To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious,

"Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.

"Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded.

"Unto you therefore which believe he is precious; but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner,

"And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offense, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed.

"But ye are a chosen generation a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light:

I repeat:

"Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.

"Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."

I stand before you at this time, my brethren and sisters, with Joseph Fielding Smith and Hyrum G. Smith, a living testimony to the fulfilment of the promise of God to his servant, Hyrum Smith.

My greatest desire, and my fondest hope are that I shall prove faithful to the Priesthood which has been conferred upon me through God's servants, that I shall prove to these men who hold the fulness of that Priesthood, that I shall prove worthy of you, my brethren, and my sisters, from whom I gain so much strength, that I shall prove true to my God, to whom I owe all that I have and my very existence. God grant that when I shall have finished my work here upon earth, he can say of me, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," and I ask it through his Son Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I am delighted to have Elder Golden Kimball here; he has been in poor health, but we are glad that he is able to be with us at this conference, and I am very much pleased to have him talk to us.

ELDER J. GOLDEN KIMBALL

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

My brethren and sisters, I have been hanging on the hook so long during this conference that I am nearly exhausted. I have had some wonderful thoughts, but you waited so long they have nearly all oozed out of me.

When I came in the Tabernacle yesterday afternoon, I was met by one of my old missionary friends. He said, "Hello, Golden, I thought you were dead." Now, I want to notify my friends, and I have some good friends—I have tested them out, I know—not to worry about me; that when I am dead—and it is an awful job to get there, I have found that out, when I die, I have made arrangements for a brass band. I like the idea of lots of noise and confusion, people inquiring, "Who is that?" "Why, Kimball's dead." Then the people won't worry any more about me.

My brethren and sisters, I attribute my partial recovery, and I hope I will continue to improve, very largely to the kindness and sympathy of my brethren, the presidency of the Church, the council of the Twelve, and to the First Council of the Seventy and other friends. I came home last October to attend conference and was taken sick, and remained at my home nearly two months. When I got around and thought of my brethren and their kindness and sympathy for me, I want to tell you, brethren, I felt this was a mighty good world. I have repeated hundreds and hundreds of times, while I was sick, the words of Frohman when he went down to his death. He said, "Why fear death? It is the most beautiful adventure of life." I want to tell Frohman I have not got that in me yet. I think this is a pretty good world. I think I am safer here among my brethren who know me, although we have had an awfully hard time getting acquainted.

Brethren, I have learned a number of lessons. I have had several, to me, quite serious experiences. I remember thirty-seven years ago I was secretary for Brother Roberts who presided over the Southern States Mission. After I had traveled for a year without purse or scrip and had tested God thoroughly, I found the Lord's word good. He never failed me. I traveled in the state of Virginia. I went on one trip with a young elder, and I say it with a good deal of pride, six hundred miles, without purse and without scrip and without friends. No man had ever heard the voice of a "Mormon" elder where we traveled. We left a trail behind us, a trail that other elders have traveled, and at no time during that three months did I sleep outdoors, but I came mighty near it a lot of times. I thought the Lord surely had forsaken us, at times, but when it came to the last test, someone's heart was softened, and they fed us and they gave us a bed so we had no use for money.

During my labors in Chattanooga with Brother Roberts, as it was in the early history of that city, I was thoroughly poisoned with malaria. I was drunken, but not with strong drink, but with malaria. I was as yellow as a parchment. As I went along the streets one day in Chattanooga, a stranger met me. He happened to be a physician. He said, "Young man, I don't know who you are, but if you don't do something for yourself you will die." "Well," I said, "I will not, as I'm a 'Mormon,' you can't kill them." When Brother Morgan came down and relieved Brother Roberts, I was still in the office, looking worse than ever. Brother Morgan looked me over carefully. He said, "Brother Kimball, you better go home. The mission is very hard run for money. It will only cost twenty-four dollars to send you home alive, but it will cost three hundred to send you home dead." It was a matter of business in that office; they had no money. I think maybe that was all I was worth. "No," I said, "Brother Morgan, I don't want to go home. I believe I was called on this mission by revelation; at least they told me so in my blessing. Now God has been good to me and he has been faithful and true, and I want to test him out, and if he can't take care of me, when I have been as faithful and true as I have, and made the sacrifices I have, then he is not the God of my fathers." So Brother Morgan let me stay, and I filled my mission. I have my release. It is the only release I have ever had, and I prize it very much. When I was released he said, "Brother Kimball, now you'd better go right straight home." I said, "Brother Morgan, I can't. My mother suffered the pain of death to give me life. She has watched over me from my childhood to manhood, and she loves her people. She heard Brother Jedediah M. Grant, President Grant's father, preach in Philadelphia, when she was a girl twenty years old. She heard only the one discourse, and she embraced the gospel, and she took the Church works and went to her people, a good people, an honest people, a wonderful people she had, but they all rejected it, and she had to leave, and it broke her mother's heart. She went back to Philadelphia, and in company with President Jedediah M. Grant and his wife traveled by team to Nauvoo and married my father, and that is how I happen to be here today. My mother watched me grow to manhood. You know the one great vision and dream she had? It was that her son, her eldest son, should grow to manhood and go back to her people and let them see what 'Mormonism' had done." And I went, and God kept me alive, and I visited them for five weeks, and I preached in their church, and my mother's relatives told their old minister, who had preached there for thirty years, that unless he let Christine Golden's son preach, they would leave his church. So I got to preach. He was a clever old fellow, too. I thought I would ease up on him a little and get another chance. So I preached in his splendid church building, and when I got through he said to his people, "This man has told the truth. I have preached it to you for thirty years." Well, I said, "I'll fix you the next time," but I never got another chance. At any rate, while I was there I secured the names of over one hundred and fifty of my mother's people, and I brought them back to her, and her dream was fulfilled; and in the winter of 1834 my brother Elias and I accompanied our mother, and we did the temple work for the Golden family, and I am still alive.

Brethren, I have had a pretty lonely time. I have had a pretty hard struggle. I haven't suffered much pain. I have got a pretty good brain, but it has not been big enough to handle my body; I have tried to direct and control my body, but it wouldn't obey. I have been administered to by some of the best men in this Church; no better men ever lived than the men who have administered to me, but I am sorry to say, and ashamed to say, I did not have the faith to be healed. There is not a man in this Church who knows any better than I do that God the Father and Jesus Christ the Redeemer are the great physicians. I have unfaltering, unwavering faith in God the Father and in his Son Jesus Christ, but you cannot be healed without faith; you have got to have the faith. I have got the gift to heal others. I have seen wonderful healings. Few men have seen more, unless they were better men. I have witnessed all kinds of diseases healed, but I could not get the faith, I failed. I just had enough faith to keep alive, that is all. I talked with President Grant, and I thought climate would help me; I was a little short on faith, so I tried climate for nine months. As I told you, I came back last October sick, and I went back again and tried climate again. Now I am on my feet. I went to a specialist; I have had an X-ray taken of my lungs; I was scared to death he would find something, but I thought I would test him out. My family wanted to know what was the matter. Well, I found one of my batteries somewhat damaged, that is, they told me so. Then he shot me full of serum and full of iron and strychnia, at five dollars a shot. That pretty near broke my heart when I got through with that specialist. I did not want to go to him, but to please my family I went. They are very anxious for me to live, for some reason. I hardly know what it is. I have been awfully neglectful of them. My family has been secondary in my work. I hope the brethren will be awfully careful what they say about families. I hope they will be very tender of men's feelings, when they talk about our children and about parents being responsible for their children—that their sins will rest upon them. God knows, I have got all I can carry without packing anyone else. Now you want to be awfully careful and awfully tender of those things, because in the wisdom of God he will gather our children together. They are God's children. My children are God's children. God is just as much responsible for my children as I am.

Now, brethren, I want to say to you—I do not know whether you know it or not—there is a lot of things you do not know that you ought to be told—if there are any people who are neglected in the Church of Jesus Christ, it is the families of the leaders of the Church. They go out and tell you how to take care of your families, and they are away from home and their families take care of themselves. You want to be careful.

Brethren and sisters, when I am satisfied, everybody is satisfied. I can see a hole in a doughnut. I have always grieved over a doughnut. My mother was a doughnut maker. When she showed me those doughnuts, I grieved over the hole. Some of the people say there is no hole in a doughnut, but I never could agree with them. I always see the hole and forget about the doughnut. I think we have some faults and some failings. I have been worried a little. While I have been absent I was afraid that we might get too material. I have been a little afraid for God's people and myself, afraid that we would trust too much in money and forget God, and I came to this conference hungry, hungry for the word of God. While in San Francisco I attended the Latter-day Saint Church on Sundays, I took part in the worship of the people. I have watched those young elders carefully, for over a year, off and on, and have seen them develop and grow and become men. But I was hungry for the word of God, and I have come back to my people. I think of the words of Ruth. I never quoted them before; maybe I cannot now, but she said:

"Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God:

"Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried."

That expresses my feelings. God save the people.

I never felt better, I never felt surer, in all of my ministry for over twenty-eight years in this Church, that we are God's people, that God is sustaining President Grant as prophet, seer and revelator. He is sustaining his counselors and the twelve apostles.

By the way, in conclusion, I would like to admonish you people not to pray only for the Presidency and the Twelve, but once in a while pray for the First Council. I don't know of any other council that needs it worse. We need your help, we need your assistance, we need your faith to prepare that great body of priesthood to fulfil their appointment in this Church. I know as well as I know that is my right hand, if you will call that body of priesthood to the foreign ministry they will go, but we have advised them not to go until you call them, and I have told them hundreds of times, not to go until they were sent. If you will call them and get behind them, I promise you in the name of the Lord they will go. I know. God bless you. Amen.

The congregation sang, "High on the mountain top."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Thomas E. McKay, President of the Ogden stake of Zion.

CLOSING SESSION

Conference convened at 2 o'clock. President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choir and congregation sang, "Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation."

Prayer was offered by Elder Lemuel H. Redd, President of the San Juan stake of Zion.

A sacred solo, "Fear not ye, O Israel," was sung by Margaret Merrill.

ELDER HYRUM G. SMITH

(Presiding Patriarch of the Church)

I am grateful, my brethren and sisters, for the privilege of being in this gathering today, and for having the privilege of standing and bearing my testimony to the goodness of the Lord unto me, as one of the younger sons of Zion, in these the last days, and one of the younger members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

I have recently had a privilege which I have dreamed of ever since early boyhood—the privilege of going over at least some of the ground, visiting some of the places visited by the prophet Joseph Smith, and by the early members of the Church. Through my teachings, from my infancy, I have never doubted in the least the divinity of the mission of the prophet Joseph, but I have often desired to visit some of the early points of history, and just recently that privilege was granted me. From that historic town of Palmyra, New York, I visited the house or place in which the first edition of the Book of Mormon was published. I also visited the old bank at Palmyra; I do not know how long it has been used as a bank, but it looks as if it had been used for many years. It is today being occupied, and business is being conducted very much, I suppose, as it was nearly a hundred years ago, without any of the so-called modern improvements. At that bank I was permitted to view what is claimed to be a copy of the first edition of the Book of Mormon, or the printer's copy. In that little town I also noticed four distinct churches, all facing one another, one upon each of the four opposite corners of an intersection of two streets; and from residents there I learned that those churches still maintain their names and their practices, opposing one another, of course, until they all unite to oppose the "Mormons"—a very impressive lesson in Church history to me, because I had always believed, and believe today, the testimony of Joseph, the prophet, that he went to those churches and saw their contentions in his day, when he was a boy. He heard them crying, "Lo, here is Christ," "Lo, there is Christ," "Come into this church, for this is the right church," and he wondered how all four of those churches, and others perhaps, could be the right church when they were all claiming it and claiming it differently. And so, I could not help but think how natural it would be for him to go back to his home, only five miles distance, and wonder in his own heart where he could find the truth, and, with the earnestness of his soul, he sought refuge in the scripture, as it had been taught to him.

I was also permitted to go into that sacred grove where the boy sought an answer to his prayer, and I instinctively felt the very spirit that one would naturally suppose would be in that place from its sacred history, and the entire time that I was in the grove I felt the very presence of the Spirit of the Lord. It seemed to me to have a care for everything about the grove. I also had the privilege of going into the old jail where the prophet and his brother, my great-grandfather, gave their lives in testimony of this great principle and the power of the everlasting gospel. I also visited that city beautiful, Nauvoo, which today is only a very small place, but I could imagine the love that those Saints must have had for that place when they could look toward the highest point from all the surroundings and admire the workmanship of their hands as was manifest in the temple which they had erected to their God, equidistant in three directions from the river on a general slope. The river, the great Mississippi river, surrounded it in a sort of letter "D" equidistant from the temple on three sides, (north, west and south). Today those landmarks are fast passing back to their mother earth; and I was impressed with the thought that in a very few years to come, very little but history and perhaps the photographs and paintings of these beloved homes will be about all that will be left. There is no mark to-day of the temple, except a few of the stones that were once in the walls, and a little part of an old barrel that marks the place of a well from which the water was taken to supply the temple. Very few marks of that wonderful history are left today. A city where once was housed and homed twenty thousand Latter-day Saints, today only about fourteen hundred people make their homes.

I am grateful for the privileges that I have enjoyed and for the testimonies that I have received; and the experiences through which I have passed only make me more determined in my efforts to serve the Lord. As it has been said in this Conference, this is the work of the Lord, and I pray that God will bless his people and bless me as one individual member, that we altogether may go on serving him and accomplishing the great work which he gave to the prophet Joseph Smith and his associates when this Church was organized ninety-one years ago today. I desire, my brethren and sisters, to so live that I may merit the blessings and carry the responsibility that is desired of me from my Father in heaven, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, who is at the head of this great work.

I desire also to leave one word of admonition beside a word of blessing. It is natural for many of us to follow extremes, or to look for extremes. There is always danger in extremes. Therefore, I say, beware of extremes, beware of extremes. I think that nearly all of us can apply this principle in our lives. I should like to apply it as it appeals to me, as one of the officers of the Church, in a particular direction. There are many in the Church who never get a written blessing for their guide or their comfort. This is an extreme. It is the privilege and right of every faithful member in the Church to receive a written blessing, for his guide and his comfort, at the hands of certain officers in the Church, and there is little or no excuse for anyone going without this privilege. On the other hand there are others who get a multitude of written blessings, and I have discovered that some have even lost regard for, or faith in, their blessings, because they have received conflicting blessings. They have received a multitude or many, and they have discovered a conflict. Therefore, their faith is lost, or they are discouraged, and they lose regard for their blessings. Therefore, I say again, beware of extremes.

Now, to make myself plain, it is the right of every faithful member of the Church to receive a written blessing for his guide, either at the hands of a stake patriarch or at the hands of the presiding patriarch, who are authorized to pronounce and seal blessings by the laying on of hands, which is an ordinance in the Church. Now I believe that the Lord knew what he meant when he required, through revelation, that these blessings should be written for the purpose of refreshing our memory and aiding us to put them into practice rather than going back at every opportunity or every few months or weeks or so, to get another blessing. I have thought, and have been impressed, that this was one of the great reasons why the Lord required us to make a record of all of the patriarchal blessings that are given by his patriarchs in the Church. And I should like to admonish my brethren and sisters to read their copies carefully and not to be easily discouraged and think that because their blessing is short it is incomplete, or because it contains only a few promises, that there is something else that has not been written or has not been promised. Yet, it is true that all the blessings and all the promises that the Lord has in store for us are not embodied in one written blessing; why, surely, but that written blessing is a guide, and it is a key in a way, through your faithfulness, to the blessings which are promised unto the faithful, and may be an index to your whole life. And, it isn't a good thing to go without a blessing, that is one extreme that I wish to warn you of; and the other is to beware of getting a multitude of blessings, in the fear of your losing your faith in the one you have already received, and as long as you get those blessings according to the rules that have been established in the Church for our guide, there will be no danger. At the present time officers of this order in the Priesthood are placed in nearly all of the stakes of Zion. These officers are authorized to officiate only for members of the stake in which they reside and their kin, and when we go to making little side rules from that, to accommodate certain individuals, then we discover that someone else wants a special order, a special blessing, a special favor, and so we have to make exceptions to the rule, and sometimes the exception becomes the rule.

Brethren and sisters, let me admonish you to follow the rule or rules of the Church pertaining to your written blessings. Every member of the Church has access to his blessing, either at the hands of the presiding patriarch or at the hands of the patriarchs in the stake where he resides, and not here and there and everywhere, because there is order in the work of the Lord.

I am grateful, grateful indeed, my brethren and sisters, for the privilege of laboring in this wonderful ministry. There are a number of men who have been called to this great position in the stakes of Zion, who, I suppose because of their study and their experience, have feared to go ahead and exercise their callings. I also have feared. Sometimes I tremble with fear, because I feel the responsibility of officiating in this sacred calling. Nevertheless, I feel to trust in the Lord, and if I am deceived, it is due to the weakness of the flesh and not to the willingness and the humility of the spirit. And so I have often wondered out of the hundreds and hundreds of promises that have been written and made by the patriarchs, how many of those wonderful promises the Lord will be able to make come true. I am astonished at the testimonies of the Latter-day Saints as they come back, declaring that those promises have been fulfilled and are being fulfilled all over the Church; and I am grateful to be permitted to officiate in this sacred work. I see hundreds of young men as they go out from their homes into the world, to carry the message of life and salvation to the world. Under the duties of my office I am enabled to admonish these young men, to give them a blessing, which, with their faith and their works, the Lord is able to bring to pass a fulfilment of the promise or promises, and they go out to all the world, in all the nations of the world where the gospel door is open, they have faith in the promises given and they live by them, and they come back and testify, that the blessings have been a source of strength and power to them. Others go out into the world without the blessing; and many of them have written to me in this manner, "Brother Smith, here am I, away over in Liverpool; I am on a mission; I was unable to get my blessing when I went away from home, and now I am over here in the service of the Lord; my companions have blessings and they receive comfort from them; can't you send me a blessing, I need a blessing, can't you write one, and send it to me?" Well, I have to send word to them that I can pray for them, and when they come home, then I can officiate for them in the regular way and give them a blessing. And so I admonish the young elders, the missionaries, both men and women, to get their blessings before they leave home, so that they will have these comforts and guides in their missionary experiences abroad.

I also have the privilege of officiating for many young people as they start out into the great battle of life, and they receive comfort, consolation and guide, because they have faith in these promises. And I am grateful to the Lord for the privilege of officiating for them, because they frequently come back and testify that the Lord has blessed them, and that their promises have come true, and they have been a source of great strength to them in hours of trial, in hours of doubt, and in hours of sickness.

I also have been permitted, and am permitted, to officiate for many fathers and mothers in Israel, and they have testified to me that they have received comfort and consolation in their responsibilities of parenthood. And so I am grateful for the privilege of officiating for them in this sacred work.

Brethren and sisters, beware of extremes. It is not necessary that you go without a written blessing; neither is it necessary that you burden our records with your simple desires of perhaps wanting only a question to be answered rather than a desire for a written blessing at the hands of the patriarchs in Israel today.

I pray God to bless this people and those who preside in Israel today. I frequently hear my brethren pray very much as Elder Kimball hears them praying, for the leading authorities of the Church, naming only, of course, the first ones, and when I hear the remark,

"And then all the rest of the authorities," I always come in for my share, because I need the blessings of the Lord.

I pray the Lord to bless the Priesthood of God, and those who are called to bear it in the earth, even from the greatest to the least, and I pray God to bless the faithful members of the Church, both old and young. I pray God to bless our lands, that the destroying elements may not interfere with our blessings. I know that there are a great many people now wondering how much danger this wonderful storm is going to cause. Brethren and sisters, it may cause some danger, and some damage, but the Lord is not sending this wonderful storm to crush us nor to interfere with our blessings. This wonderful storm is a blessing to the multitudes of his children in these valleys of the mountains, and while it may interfere with some of us, in slight ways, the great end of this storm will be a blessing to us.

I pray also that drought as a destroying element may not interfere with the blessings of this people, and if the brethren and sisters, the members of the Church, will hearken unto the counsel they have received in this conference, as they have done unto the counsel that was given six months ago, in a like or similar manner, the Lord will continue to multiply his blessings upon us; and that his blessing may be upon us, and his name be honored and glorified forever. I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I read here last evening at the priesthood meeting some items regarding our missionary work, and I thought they would be interesting to all the Saints, so I will read these items again:

MISSIONARY STATISTICS.

The mission membership of the Church at the close of 1920 was 99,870.

Tithes paid in all missions of the Church, $456,699; an increase of more than a hundred thousand over any previous year.

Value of mission property, $1,467,571. This does not include all of the Hawaiian property.

Spent for charity in all the missions, $34,532.

Baptisms in all the missions last year, 5,087. This is the highest record in many years.

There were 1,727 missionaries in all the missions on January 1, 1921, an increase of 574 over January 1, 1920; while the average expense of the missionaries of the Church was $37 per month in 1920, or $10 per month higher than in 1919, and that is the highest expense per elder in the history of the Church.

The number of baptisms per elder in 1920 was about three.

Calls of the missionaries were answered at 2,926,416 homes, and the elders had 2,617,345 gospel conversations. They sold 34,703 copies of the Book of Mormon, and distributed 7,023,378 tracts and held 135,532 meetings.

AUDITING COMMITTEE REPORT.

The report of the auditing committee was then read as follows :

Salt Lake City, Utah, April 1, 1921.

To Presidents Heber J. Grant, Charles W. Penrose, Anthony W. Ivins, First Presidency, and to the Saints in Conference assembled:

Dear Brethren and Sisters: The Church Auditing Committee desire to report that they have carefully examined the receipts and expenditures of the Church for the year 1920, as the same appear from the books and vouchers in the office of the Trustee-in-Trust, and in the office of the Presiding Bishop. We find them correct and fully accounted for.

The usual care has been exercised in having the records disclose every detail of every transaction, besides which, during the past year, the auditing and examination has been emphasized by having the financial transactions of the Church submitted to a monthly check.

Along the lines of securing Church statistics, we think there should be some consolidation of effort; and your Committee shall take an early opportunity of submitting their views upon this subject to the First Presidency.

Your brethren in the Gospel,
W. W. RITER,
HENRY H. ROLAPP,
PETER G. JOHNSTON,

Card, Willard Young, Thos. W. Taylor, J. Wm. Knight. One vacancy had been caused by the death of Jesse Knight.

ALL THE GENERAL AUTHORITIES HEARD.

President Grant said: We have had the privilege of hearing from this stand, at this conference, from each and all of the General Authorities of the Church, without having to tell any one of them how long he could talk, which has been really a pleasure to me, because it is anything but pleasant to limit our brethren in their remarks. Quite frequently in our late conference meetings we have had to ask our brethren to speak three, five, eight or ten minutes, at most, in order to have time to hear from all of the General Authorities. We have an hour and five minutes left, and I have concluded to ask my counselors to make some remarks, and when they finish I will make some myself.

I suppose that one reason for our having a little spare time is that we have had one extra meeting during this conference, the general sessions of the conference lasting three days and a-half.

Brother John Wells is at home sick. If he had been here, he would have been asked to speak. I forgot to mention that he had not spoken.

ELDER ANTHONY W. IVINS

"And I looked and beheld a man among the Gentiles who was separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters; and I beheld the Spirit of God, that it came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land.

"And it came to pass that I beheld the Spirit of God, that it wrought upon other Gentiles; and they went forth out of captivity, upon the many waters.

"And it came to pass that I beheld many multitudes of the Gentiles upon the land of promise; and I beheld the wrath of God, that it was upon the seed of my brethren; and they were scattered before the Gentiles, and were smitten.

"And I beheld the Spirit of the Lord, that it was upon the Gentiles, that they did prosper, and obtain the land for their inheritance; and I beheld that they were white, and exceeding fair and beautiful, like unto my people before they were slain.

"And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles who had gone forth out of captivity, did humble themselves before the Lord; and the power of the Lord was with them;

"And I beheld that their mother Gentiles were gathered together upon the waters, and upon the land also, to battle against them;

"And I beheld that the power of God was with them, and also that the wrath of God was upon all those that were gathered together against them to battle.

"And I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles that had gone out of captivity were delivered by the power of God out of the hands of all other nations."

WE BELIEVE IN REVELATION.

The Church, in its very incipency, declared to the world, among other fundamental doctrines of its creed or belief, that it believed all that God had revealed, all that he does now reveal, and that he would yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God. Revelation is the revealing or making known that which was not previously known or understood. The Church has always claimed that gift. It is indispensable. It must exist in the Church.

REVELATION BELONGS TO EVERY MEMBER OF THE CHURCH.

It belongs to every member of it. The Lord has declared, in this same book from which I have read, that when the doctrines which are contained in the book are made known to the peoples of the world the truth of its contents shall be manifest by the gift of the Holy Ghost to all of those who seek God in faith with a desire to know the truth.

BUT IN AFFAIRS PERTAINING TO THE CHURCH AT LARGE, THE KEYS ARE WITH ONE MAN ONLY—THE PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH.

So that revelation, the gift of the Holy Spirit of the Lord, who manifests the truth and leads us into it, is given to all of the members of the Church, but in affairs which refer to the Church at large, its doctrines, its policies, its purposes, the keys remain with the man who has been chosen, whom we have sustained here, by our vote, to occupy that special calling and to speak in the name of the Lord for the Church at large, and revelations for the benefit of the Church, its government, its doctrine, must be so confined. They will never come through emotional women; they will never come through men whose right it is not, and never has been, to receive them. That is what we mean when we say that the key of authority vests in and belongs to the president of the Church. It has no application to other people. It applies only to the Church.

MANY NOTED CHARACTERS OF HISTORY HAVE RECEIVED REVELATIONS.

The doctrines of the Church just as fully recognize that from the beginning of time God's Spirit has striven with man and his will has often been revealed to man, just as this scripture which I have read declares that it was revealed to Columbus, who was the discoverer of this country. That fact is as fundamentally a part of the faith of the Latter-day Saints as is any other doctrine. The Church has always believed and taught that those men who came to America, guided by God our Father, inspired by him, men who sought asylum where they might worship God according to the dictates of their conscience, did come moved upon by his Spirit and his revealed will to them, that they were so established here, that they were so protected, and that it is because of the inspiration of God which has come to men that we live today under the constitution which forms the fundamental law of this government. The thought that this gift should be enjoyed by us and by us alone has never been a part of our faith.

Let me read here, but let me go back just for a moment before reading. We believe, and it is a part of the doctrine which we have always taught, that those men who in early days broke away from the mother Church, which had degenerated until all kinds of wickedness were permitted to be committed in its name through license and written permission given by the bulls of the Pope, against which Luther protested, against which he stood firmly when his very life was at stake as he stood there before the Diet of Worms and declared that except he be convinced by reason and by the scripture, he could not retract anything—acted under the inspiration of God. It was the power and Spirit of God which prompted the man to begin the opening of a better and greater dispensation. We believe that John Wycliffe, whose body was burned and the ashes of it scattered upon a river of England that it might float down to the sea and be obliterated, was raised up of the Lord to publish the Bible and make it, as he said, so common that the plow boy in the field would understand it as well as the Pope. He gave his life for it. God inspired him to do it. He inspired Tyndale, burned at the stake because he dared to raise his voice in defense of the simple truths contained in the scripture. The Lord was with him. The spirit of revelation was upon him. It marked and blazed the way which we have followed after. Now, that is the doctrine of the Church. Let me read here briefly again from the Book of Mormon:

"Behold, that which is of God, inviteth and enticeth to do good continually; wherefore, every thing which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God, and to serve him, is inspired of God.

"Wherefore, take heed, my beloved brethren, that ye do not judge that which is evil to be of God, or that which is good and of God, to be of the devil.

"For behold, my brethren, it is given unto you to judge, that ye may know good from evil; and the way to judge is as plain, that ye may know with a perfect knowledge, as the day-light is from the dark night.

"For behold, the Spirit of Christ is given to every man, that they may know good from evil; wherefore, I shew unto you the way to judge: for everything which inviteth to do good, and to persuade to believe in Christ, is sent forth by the power and gift of Christ; wherefore ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of God,

"But whatsoever thing persuadeth men to do evil, and believe not in Christ, and deny him, and serve not God, then ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of the devil; for after this manner doth the devil work, for he persuadeth no man to do good, no, not one; neither do his angels; neither do they who subject themselves unto him."

WE WISH GODSPEED TO GOOD MEN AND WOMEN EVERYWHERE.

It appears to me, my brethren and sisters, that this doctrine is made so plain in the scripture which I have read that there need be no doubt regarding it. I only wish to say to good men and women everywhere that we pray for them and wish them Godspeed and co-operate with them and bless them in every effort which they put forth for the accomplishment of that which is good, that which will uplift, that which will enlighten, that which will make better the lives of men and women, that which will draw men towards Christ, who is the Redeemer of the world, and away from the influences of the evil one, which are so dominant in the world today.

THE CHURCH DICTATES NO CREED OR POLICY TO ANY OTHER BODY.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has never assumed nor desired to dictate the creed or the policy of any other religious denomination. We grant to our fellow workers who stand and speak in the name of the Lord, the right to receive the inspiration of his Spirit for the control and government of their own congregation; and if they lack that, if there is a church in which the man chosen to represent it is not endowed with the spirit of revelation that he may communicate it to his congregation and thus lead them in the way of the Lord, woe be unto them; they need to seek after it and get it, for only by the inspiration of that Spirit can the will of the Lord be done. So we stand here not to restrain, not to withhold support, help, or blessing, from any man or woman under heaven who is seeking to do the will of God and bring other people to do it. The Lord bless them, and bless us and help us to understand that this right does belong to the Church and it cannot be taken from it, for without it, confusion and dissolution would immediately occur.

THE SHEEP KNOW THE VOICE OF THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

My brethren and sisters, I rejoice in the blessings of this conference. I felt that I would like to say just this much before its conclusion. I pray that you may understand the spirit and meaning in which I say it, as I believe you do. I have been just as thoroughly converted to this truth all my life as to any other, that I cannot stand before a congregation of Latter-day Saints and declare that which is not true and in harmony with the will of the Lord and make them believe it. The sheep know the voice of the good Shepherd, and a stranger they will not follow. Cultivate the spirit of revelation, every one of you; plead with the Lord for greater endowment of his Spirit. That it may direct us in the walks of life and help us to live in harmony with the plan which he has given us in the organization of the Church, is my prayer for us all, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. PENROSE

I believe that the remarks that have been made to us by Brother Ivins have been understood and appreciated and believed in by this congregation of Latter-day Saints in general conference assembled. He has enunciated the doctrine in great plainness that most of us have heard almost all our lives. It has been taught from this stand not only at conference times but in many discourses that have been delivered by the servants of the Lord. It was the doctrine of the Prophet Joseph Smith made plain through him by revelation from God. As quoted or read by President Grant last Sunday morning, it was proclaimed by the prophet and the president of the Church, Brigham Young. He was a great leader. He was a man of very strong mind and will and expression, and he always taught this doctrine in plainness—that while there was but one man at a time on the earth to receive revelation from God for the Church, for the whole Church, the spirit of revelation rested down on the members of the Church as well as upon men holding the Priesthood of God. So with those who succeeded him in the presidency. I do not believe there has been one of them who has not taught that doctrine.

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS' VIEW OF REVELATION.

There has been associated with that revelation read by the president on Sunday as to the right of the man who stands at the head to receive revelation for the Church, the doctrine and theory and practice that three men holding the presidency of the Church preside over it in all its departments, and that when anything was to be introduced of a new character or kind for the government of the Church, it would come from that presidency and would be submitted to the quorums of the priesthood and to the Saints generally. This was followed by President Wilford Woodruff when what is called the "Manifesto" came from him to the Church. It was presented to the Church and voted on by the Church in conference assembled as doctrine for the Church. A resolution was passed to that effect, offered by President Lorenzo Snow. We should understand this. Brother Ivins has made it very clear that the revelations spoken of by the president on Sunday morning for the government of the Church were for this Church, not for other churches or societies; and at the same time that which was said, that which we have believed in, that which we have practiced, is not confined entirely in all respects to the one man; that the spirit of revelation is for all of the Church, every member thereof, but for the government and guidance of the Church as an organized body, that authority is vested in the one man that stands at the head. And it seems to me that a little common reason would show the value of it. The Lord said we were not to receive as revelations for our government that which came from anybody but the man whom he had chosen to be at the head, and if he transgressed he should not have power except to appoint another, nominate or name another, in his stead to be at the head of the Church. Now we can see very quickly, if we will use our common sense, that if every man of prominence in the Church could introduce a revelation we would be, as Brother Ivins said, at once in confusion. There is none in the Church who has the right to introduce as divine revelation something that is new and different from that which has been revealed before, but the man who is appointed to do that, so that we might all come to the unity of the faith, and when that is received by the Church, and adopted as part of our creed, it belongs to the Church, just as much as anything that has preceded it.

AS TO MISINFORMATION.

Some time ago we were afflicted by false reports, sent out from this city by telegraph generally speaking, to the world, pretending to give sentiments expressed by the leader of the Church. Lately there has been some reformation in that respect. I am glad to know that the telegraphic wires are not now as they were at that time under the domination of men animated by the spirit of falsehood. When I was editor of The Deseret News, my time was largely taken up by making or giving refutations of statements of that kind sent over the wires from Salt Lake City by the Associated Press. I became acquainted some time after with the president of that association, Mr. Stone, a fine, splendid, able and fair-minded man, and had the pleasure personally to talk with him on this subject; and since the time when he became fully acquainted with the manner in which dispatches were sent from this city, he saw to it as far as possible, that these false reports were not circulated. Now, I am glad to say there is a change of spirit in that respect; but, at the same time, sometimes things are published and very often talked about without being published, which are filled with misinformation.

I have heard considerable about this now, concerning the remarks made by President Grant last Sunday morning. It is represented that he stated that there was no man living but him who had any right to receive a revelation from God. He did not say that. You who were here know very well that he did not make any remark of that kind. What he tried to make clear and did to my mind, and I believe he did to all the congregation, was that fundamental doctrine concerning the revelations of God to this Church as an organized religious body; that only the man who stood at the head could be authorized Revelator, the end of controversy; if there were any controversy arising, he could seek by revelation from God to be able to correct error as well as to proclaim truth.

MEN WHO PRETEND TO BE CALLED OF GOD TO RECEIVE REVELATION.

Now, I just mention the fact, not that perhaps it is of very much importance, but it is associated, too, with some things that have been done in some quarters of the Church. Men have started up pretending to be called of God to receive revelation from God to the Church. I knew one man of that kind some years ago, who came to the president of the Church and demanded the keys, for he was "the man mighty and strong sent to set in order all things in Zion." Well, he did not make much of an impression, but he came two or three times, and at last he was ordered out of the office and he stumped off on one leg—because he had only one good leg, the other was a wooden one—and he went off as the "mighty and strong" one, and we heard nothing more about it. That is not a fair sample, perhaps, of the men who have arrogated this position to themselves. Lately there have been some members of the Church who have claimed to have revelation from God to organize a United Order, without calling it that at first, but latterly they did, and so they threw in their possessions and placed them in the hands of one individual, and he received what he called revelations from God, and the people joined in with him and were induced to pray that they might find out whether it was true, and they have been led off by a false spirit. Some of them have repented, and others who did not repent but continued in their bad works of darkness, have been excommunicated from the Church. Now here is simply a warning voice from the man that stands at the head of the Church that people shall not be led astray either by ideas of that kind which I have just mentioned, or in regard to other matters that affect their condition in time and eternity.

MEN WHO HAVE ARROGATED TO THEMSELVES THE RIGHT TO MARRY.

Some men have arrogated to themselves the right to marry when it has been shown very clearly during this conference they have no such right. The right to marry for time is vested in certain officers of this Church, and the right to marry for time and eternity can only be solemnized and celebrated under the direction of the Church authorities, and there is but one man at a time, the revelation itself says, that holds the keys of this authority. And how in the world men of brains, men of standing in this Church, can be led off to the right or to the left into works of wrong and darkness by persons having no such authority, and who cannot have it, under the revelation itself on this subject—how they can do that has been very perplexing to me. But when I read in the revelations of God, as the Apostle James puts it, that “God is not tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man, but every man is tempted when he is led away by his own lust,” that explains the thing clearly to my mind.

Now I have made these few remarks in regard to this subject because I am fully desirous, with all my soul, that our people should understand, and that the world, if they want it, may understand, and that our friends who are not of our faith may not misunderstand our position, and if they choose to misinterpret and to twist and turn about the words that are uttered from this stand and proclaim them to the world as the words of our leader, why they must take the consequences.

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS BELIEVE IN ANCIENT AND MODERN REVELATION.

It has been a doctrine, as Brother Ivins has said, from the beginning, that we believe in revelation, and the trouble with our pretended friends, who are misinterpreting this matter, is they do not believe in modern revelation at all, and our conflict has been with them from the beginning. They have made the conflict. Joseph Smith received a revelation from God, and the great heads of the Christian churches and the ministers of the various conflicting denominations have declared that the doctrine of revelation in these times is false, that God does not now reveal anything for the children of men, that all the revelation that we have now that is of any account is to be found between the lids of the Bible, and they quote the last chapter of Revelation, a few words there, that if “any man shall add to these things God shall add to him the plagues that are written in this book.”

They leave out the other part, generally, strangely, "if any man shall take away from the words of the prophecies of this book, God shall take away his part out of the book of life and out of the holy city and from the things that are written in the book." And they do not dwell much upon the saying in it that "all liars and they that love and make a lie shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone."

THE RIGHT TO RECEIVE REVELATION IS COMMON TO ALL.

President Grant did not claim that he was the only man that could receive revelation from God. He has taught from the beginning, as all the leaders of this Church have, that to receive revelation is the gift of all men who seek for it. "Draw near unto me and I will draw near unto you, saith the Lord of hosts." That was the doctrine of the ancient seers and prophets. That is the doctrine of the latter-day prophets, and of the Latter-day Saints' Church. The right to receive revelation from God is common to every one. Christ taught: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" That Holy Spirit is the spirit of revelation, that which makes clear, that which reveals; whether it be something new or something old does not matter, if it is true. It is the spirit of truth, and that is the spirit of life and the spirit of light that he has given to everyone born into the world. Every sensible, every sane person, has a right to the guidance of that spirit if he will seek for it in the right way and be obedient to its whisperings and its teachings. The beneficial inventions received by leading minds come from that source. Now, it is not the right of every person to teach things that he may consider he has received by revelation, to others. I have had manifestations to me from the time when I, as a boy, went out into the world to preach the gospel without purse or scrip or means, for my personal benefit. I received them from the Lord; they were my guiding stars. I am thankful to know that I received this inspiration in my labors and duties, and there are many things I have never talked about to others, and I know just as well that they are true as that I am standing here, but it was not given me to teach them to the world or to anybody else. It was for me. Every inspiration that I have received from the Almighty has strengthened my faith in this work, this organization, this Church of Jesus Christ, for it is his Church, and I know that it is of God, and that it will prevail.

ALL REVELATION FOR THE CHURCH COMES THROUGH THE HEAD OF THE CHURCH.

There have been some persons who have been led away by an evil influence, which has caused some of them to lose their standing in the Church, and it was pertinent and timely for our president to allude to this doctrine as shown in the forty-third section of the Doctrine and Covenants, and what he said is true and it is the word of the Lord to the Church; it was then and it is now, and anything that the Lord has to reveal for the Church for its guidance and government in doctrine and principle and discipline will come through the head, and we will have the opportunity, if it is new, to pass judgment upon it. In the book of Doctrine and Covenants we have a number of revelations, all of which have been received by the body of the Church as the word of the Lord. I was present when that was done, when we were all organized in the Priesthood in our various quorums. The Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price were voted upon by the priesthood of the Lord and also by the congregation in conference during the time of President Taylor. If the Lord has anything further to reveal, it will come through the head, and then the body responding will make it the doctrine of the Church. That is the order of heaven. God reveals, God orders, God presides, and the heavenly hosts willingly and gladly receive his guidance, and his word becomes their word and they are like Jesus, they do his will, but they do it because it is the will of the Father and they know that the Father is true. And so when we get the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands and we walk in its light, we know for ourselves concerning the work, concerning all our duties as we are called upon to perform them.

WOMEN AND THE PRIESTHOOD.

One other remark I want to make, and that is this: There seems to be a revival of the idea among some of our sisters that they hold the Priesthood. President Clawson sat down on that in his remarks on Sunday. He said "No, the sisters do not hold the Priesthood." Well, is that right? Yes; but then there is a little qualification to it, perhaps, very slight. When a woman is sealed to a man holding the Priesthood, she becomes one with him. Sometimes the man is the one and sometimes he is not, but she receives blessings in association with him. The glory and power and dominion that he will exercise when he has the fulness of the Priesthood and becomes a "king and a priest unto God," she will share with him. Sisters have said to me sometimes, "But, I hold the Priesthood with my husband." "Well," I asked, "what office do you hold in the Priesthood?" Then they could not say much more. The sisters are not ordained to any office in the Priesthood and there is authority in the Church which they cannot exercise; it does not belong to them; they cannot do that properly any more than they can change themselves into a man. Now, sisters, do not take the idea that I wish to convey that you have no blessings or authority or power belonging to the Priesthood. When you are sealed to a man of God who holds it and who, by overcoming, inherits the fulness of the glory of God, you will share that with him if you are fit for it, and I guess you will be.

AS TO WOMAN'S RIGHT TO ADMINISTER TO THE SICK.

There is another thing connected with that. I have had sisters visit me and ask me if they did not have the right to administer to the sick. "Well," I have said, "yes, you have in one way; Jesus Christ said, 'These signs shall follow them that believe—in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover.'" As I say, there are occasions when perhaps it would be wise for a woman to lay her hands upon a child, or upon one another sometimes, and there have been appointments made for our sisters, some good women, to anoint and bless others of their sex who expect to go through times of great personal trial, travail and "labor;" so that is all right, so far as it goes. But when women go around and declare that they have been set apart to administer to the sick and take the place that is given to the elders of the Church by revelation as declared through James of old, and through the Prophet Joseph in modern times, that is an assumption of authority and contrary to scripture, which is that when people are sick they shall call for the elders of the Church and they shall pray over and officially lay hands on them.

It is the prayer of faith that saves the sick; faith in God not in some particular man, although some men seem to have more of the gift of healing than others, that is true, but the authority in the Church is vested in the elders. True, a priest, of course, can, a teacher can, and so can a deacon, although neither a teacher nor a deacon can exercise the power in the lesser Priesthood which is for the remission of sins through baptism; he cannot do that, he has not the authority, but he may lay hands on the sick and pray God to heal them; so can a member. So can people out of the Church, and so they have done. Having faith in God, they have asked God in the name of Jesus Christ to heal the sick by the laying on of their hands, and some of them have got well, and a good many others have died, like it is with all of us.

NO MEETINGS TO BE HELD WITHOUT CONSENT OF PRESIDING AUTHORITIES.

These sisters, too, claim the right to go around and hold meetings of their own and speak in tongues and interpret the same and to prophesy. Now they may have the gift of tongues; that is just as much for the sisters as it is for the brethren, and seems to be a little more so. One good sister said to another, "Oh, you may have the gift of wisdom, I don't say you haven't, but I have got the gift of tongues." She thought she was ahead of her sister who had wisdom. Sisters, it is not your right to organize meetings either for the sisters or for the brethren in your respective wards without the regulation and permission of the presiding authorities of the ward. Some sisters not very far from this spot used to meet together, relate visions, speak in tongues and had a glorious time, and the president of the stake was appealed to as to the right to do that. He said, "Sisters, you must not hold any meetings of that kind unless you get permission from the bishop," and they have never asked permission of the bishop nor held such meetings since that time. What does that show? It shows that they were not acting under proper authority. The Lord has declared "my house is a house of order."

DO WHAT IS RIGHT AND LOOK TO THE LORD FOR HIS WORD.

Let us do that which is right; let us avoid that which we have no right to do. Do not let us presume to hold Church meetings in our own authority. That is under the direction of the ward authorities and they will say when meetings are to be held; the quorum meetings, of course, are under the direction of the quorum authorities. Let us be wise in our generation, and let us look to the Lord for his word, through the appointed channel. And when we sing, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," let us do so in faith. Many Saints sing that song, but they do not want to do or believe what he says. That is the way with some folks; not with you, of course; we know better or ought to know better. Let us follow in the ways the Lord has pointed out, and let us not get very angry at what the wicked do. The wicked will not cease from troubling, liars will not cease from lying, unless God converts or compels them, and they will go on in their evil way; some of them, until they find they are with the wicked in that punishment which is figuratively called fire and brimstone.

CONCLUDING TESTIMONY.

God bless you, my brethren and sisters. I am thankful to the Lord today for his mercies to me; I am thankful for his goodness to me all my life long. God be praised for the revelations of the latter days, and for the revelations of ancient days that have been handed down to us; only a few have come to us, but we are living now in the full blaze of the gospel of the last dispensation. The Holy Ghost, the Comforter, is with this people; Jesus Christ the Son is at the head of the Church, and God the Father is above all, and we will find out when we learn the fulness that Providence is indeed over all, and that we are to acknowledge his hand in all things, in adversity as well as in riches. In all conditions in which we find ourselves, we will praise the Lord and give thanks to him and serve him with all our heart and might and mind and strength, and will try to love our neighbors as ourselves, as far as we can, and if we can say, "O Lord, they don't know what they do," we will say also, "Father, forgive them." I am afraid some of them do know what they are doing; that is, they are not telling the truth, but are purposely perverting it. They, too, are in the view and the hands of the Almighty.

God's peace be with you all, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

A revelation was given to the Church ninety years ago last February from which I have read during this conference, and I will read from it again. This revelation is to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or the elders in it.

A VERY IMPORTANT REVELATION.

"Oh, hearken, ye elders of my church, and give an ear to the words which I shall speak unto you.

"For behold, verily, verily, I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hands."

I want to emphasize once more, "A law unto my church."

"And this ye shall know assuredly that there is none other appointed unto you," [Who? "my church,"] "to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me.

"But verily, verily, I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him, he shall no, have power except to appoint another in his stead;

"And this shall be a law unto you," [and who is this law unto? "Unto my church,"] "that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments;

"And this I give unto you that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me.

"For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed."

And I said that anybody who taught contrary to that was a plain, simple, every-day liar. That is what I said; that is what I mean. The idea that any man claiming to believe the teachings of this revelation saying that he has today the right to perform plural marriages, is utterly absurd. We have cut such men off from the Church.

CONCERNING PLURAL MARRIAGES.

Perhaps I owe an apology—in fact I will make one—for speaking with anger in this building last Sunday night. As I came to the meeting Sunday night, I was told that a person had said that neither Heber J. Grant nor any other man had any right to say that an individual could not perform a plural marriage; that God had revealed plural marriages, and therefore that I had no right to say that they could not be performed, and that one party had remarked that it would take an angel from heaven to convince him, even if I did say it. In my remarks on Sunday evening I had no thought of referring to anybody outside of this Church, or that I ever had any right to undertake to say that I had anything to do with directing any other people than the Latter-day Saints. But I branded as plain, simple liars those who undertake to say that anybody, aside from the President of the Church, had any right to give revelations to this people. I had just heard that one more pretended plural marriage had been performed, and after all the teachings from this stand, and all the declarations, and after excommunicating, as we have done, within the last year, one man for marrying—or pretending to marry—a plural wife, I confess I was angry and “rebuked with sharpness.”

NO PERSON HAS THE RIGHT TO PERFORM PLURAL MARRIAGES.

But I want to say to the Latter-day Saints that no man upon the face of the earth has any right or any authority to perform a plural marriage, and there are no plural marriages today in the Church of Christ, because no human being has the right to perform them. Therefore, any person pretending to have that right is attempting to exercise an authority that he does not have, and therefore he does not perform a marriage and there is no marriage covenant when such ceremonies are performed.

SEVERAL PERSONS EXCOMMUNICATED FOR PERFORMING PRETENDED MARRIAGE CEREMONIES.

We have excommunicated several patriarchs because they arrogated unto themselves, the right, or pretended right, to perform these ceremonies, and after our having excommunicated several patriarchs, another one, so I am informed, has committed the same offense. I announce to all Israel that no living man has the right to perform plural marriages. I announce that no patriarch has the right to perform any marriages at all in the Church. We have delegated, at the present time, to the presidents of stakes and to the bishops of wards, the right to perform lawful marriages, and there has been delegated to some elders who held positions as county clerks, the right to exercise the authority of the Priesthood to perform legal marriages for time. And it was in view of the lie that was going out, and a desire to protect virtuous, noble, good girls who were being deceived and entrapped into doing what, under the law of God today, and under the law of the land, is adultery, that I was branding the liar.

CONCERNING INSPIRATION.

I want my friends to know that the doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints declare that God inspires men. We heard Elder Whitney read to us the twenty-ninth chapter of Alma. When I was the junior member of the council of the twelve apostles, I knew that chapter off by heart, and I used to repeat it, time and time again, in my public addresses.

“O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people!"

This same chapter further states that men are inspired, and are given all that is wisdom in God that they should have, and Alma says that he ought to be content with the things that were allotted unto him. And the thing allotted unto him was to declare repentance to the people, and he had had great joy in that many men, because of the word he had declared, had come unto God. Perhaps there is no other passage, no single chapter, in all the Book of Mormon, that I have preached from as often as I have from that twenty-ninth chapter of Alma. We believe absolutely, as has been said here, that God inspired Columbus. I commend to all Latter-day Saints when the conference pamphlet is published, to read what Elder Orson F. Whitney said about the inspiration of God being given to men in all parts of the world. We endorse his remarks.

One of the fundamental articles of faith promulgated by the Prophet Joseph Smith was:

"We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience; and allow all men the same privilege—let them worship how, where, or what they may."

But we claim absolutely no right, no prerogative whatever, to interfere with any other people. We desire the good will of all mankind, and we desire the advancement of all mankind, and we pray God to bless every man that is striving for the betterment of humanity in any of the walks of life; and we say of every man who believes that Jesus is the Christ and who proclaims it: O God, bless that man. But we cannot pray for those who pretend to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and deny the atoning blood of Jesus Christ, and who proclaim that he was only a man. Jesus is the Redeemer of the world, the Savior of mankind, who came to the earth with a divinely appointed mission to die for the redemption of mankind. Jesus Christ is literally the Son of God, the Only Begotten in the flesh. He is our Redeemer, and we worship him, and we praise God for every individual upon the face of the earth who worships our Lord and Master as the Redeemer of the world.

I rejoice in the blessings of the Lord that have come to us during this conference. God bless the Latter-day Saints. God bless every honest-hearted soul all over the world, all who are striving to do good, striving to benefit mankind. I thank the Lord for the rich outpouring of his holy Spirit during our conference. May we all go home and take the Conference spirit of love and of fellowship and good will to all the congregations of the Saints, and thus inspire them to serve God and to keep his commandments is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

I want to read just one more thing:

"We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law."

The law provides that any person performing a marriage shall record the marriage, and I haven't heard of this last marriage I referred to being recorded; and there should be a license issued also; I haven't heard of any license.

A solo was sung, entitled, "The mighty God has spoken."

The choir and congregation sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

The Conference was adjourned until October, 1921.

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Orson F. Whitney, of the Council of the Twelve.

Professor Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing in the Tabernacle. Professor J. J. McClellan played the accompaniments and interludes, etc., on the great organ, assisted by Edward P. Kimball and Tracy Y. Cannon.

The stenographic reports of the discourses were made in the Tabernacle by Franklin W. Otterstrom, assisted by Elders Clarence Cramer and Clyde Rasmussen; in the Assembly Hall, by Frederick E. Barker and Fred J. Barker.

Strength of the "Mormon" Church

(See Conference Record, April, 1921, p. 23)

(From the "Coast Banker," San Francisco and Los Angeles, March, 1921.)

Glimpses From Its History, With Reference to Its Trials, Travels, Beliefs, Achievements, and Plans for the Future, as Shown in an Address Delivered by Invitation at the Banquet of the Knife and Fork Club at Hotel Muhlebach, Kansas City, December 16, 1920, by Heber J. Grant, President of the Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter-day Saints.

One of the greatest forces, in temporal and religious affairs of the United States is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, commonly known as the "Mormon" Church. Its head is Heber J. Grant, who officiates under the title of President. Mr. Grant possesses the characteristics of a real leader—strength of purpose, nobility and humility of character, enthusiasm for all causes in which he enters, and indefatigable industry. He is well known and respected by the business men of the western third of the United States, regardless of their religious affiliations. For years he has been a banker, and he holds the office of president of the Utah State National Bank, and of the Zion's Savings Bank and Trust Company, Salt Lake City, and for many years he has been strongly identified with the insurance business as well; so that when, on the death of President Smith, he succeeded to the headship of the "Mormon" Church, he brought with him an equipment that fully qualified him to take up the leadership in the various corporations in which the "Mormon" Church either holds a dominant position or is interested in a lesser degree.

The important place the "Mormon" Church occupies, not only in Utah but in Idaho, Oregon, Washington, Wyoming, Arizona, and other parts of the Western Hemisphere, is told by President Grant in a most thorough study and analysis; therefore we recommend to our readers, the financial people of the western third of the United States, that they read this address by him, because it will explain to them, not alone his plans, but those of the organization which is so great a factor in their territory.—The Editor.

I consider it a very distinct honor indeed, gentlemen, to be invited to speak here tonight to this representative body of business men in your wonderful city. It is remarkable, to me, that your bank clearings should exceed the showing of St. Louis, although you have only one-half the population. Utah is one of the most enterprising of all the enterprising states in the United States, and the reason I consider it an honor to speak here is the fact that early "Mormons" were driven from this section of the country. (Laughter.) I am grateful for this opportunity of addressing a body of representative men in the very place from which our people were expelled by an exterminating order of Governor Boggs. This is a good illustration of the wonderful change of sentiment in the United States regarding the people with whom I have the honor to be associated. My mother was cast out as a thing of evil, by some of the Ivins family of the East, when she became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Forty-two years later, when I took her back to Philadelphia to meet her relatives and friends, her brothers and sisters having passed away, the nephews and nieces fell in love with the "very fine old lady."

Many people imagine that the "Mormons" have no faith in what is known as the Bible. You will pardon me for taking a little of your time to correct a few erroneous impressions of this kind, and to refer briefly to the travels of our people before the pioneers reached Utah. The "Mormons" accept the Bible as the word of God, but they also believe in the Book of Mormon. Comparatively few people know what the Book of Mormon purports to be. It is the sacred history of the forefathers of the American Indian.

The Latter-day Saints started in New York, where the Church was organized in 1830. They later located at Kirtland, Ohio, where they built quite a large temple, which is still standing. The opposition and ill will which they encountered were so great that they decided to move to Missouri, there locating in and around Far West. Previously they had established a colony at Independence, a few miles from this city, where they met with much opposition and were forced to leave. Afterwards, as I have stated, they were expelled from the State of Missouri under the exterminating order of Governor Lilburn W. Boggs. Later they were invited to locate at Commerce, Illinois, where there were very few people. They built a city known as "Nauvoo, the Beautiful," in which within a few years there were 20,000 inhabitants. Here, too, they met much opposition. The prejudice against them caused them to be bitterly persecuted, and the prophet Joseph Smith crossed the Mississippi River, intending with a chosen body of men to explore the Rocky Mountains for a place of settlement and gathering for the people. A short time before that he had uttered a prophecy "that the Saints would continue to suffer much affliction, and would be driven to the Rocky Mountains; many would apostatize, others would be put to death by our persecutors, or lose their lives in consequence of exposure or disease; and some would live to go and assist in making settlements, and build cities, and see the Saints become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains." At the time this prophecy was delivered, one of the foremost statesmen in the United States, Daniel Webster, is quoted as having made a remarkable statement with reference to the western part of our country, in which Joseph Smith had predicted the Saints would become a mighty people. Said Webster:

"What do we want with this vast, worthless area? This region of savages and wild beasts, of deserts, of shifting sands and whirlwinds of dust, of cactus and prairie dogs? To what use could we ever hope to put these great deserts or those endless mountain ranges, impenetrable and covered to their very base with eternal snow? What can we ever hope to do with the western coast of three thousand miles, rockbound, cheerless, uninviting, and not a harbor on it? Mr. President, I will never vote one cent from the public treasury to place the Pacific Coast one inch nearer Boston than it now is." (Laughter.)

Even statesmen, it appears, sometimes make mistakes. There are some very fine harbors on the Pacific Coast, and the whole section west of the Missouri River certainly has developed into a very marvelous country.

THE MARTYRDOM AND SUBSEQUENT EVENTS.

Joseph Smith had foreseen that his people would be forced again to leave their homes, and, as I say, he had started West with a picked body of men to find a place of refuge. But some of the people in Nauvoo accused him of running away and deserting his flock. He thereupon returned to Nauvoo, remarking that if his life was of no value to his people, it was of no value to him. He surrendered to the Governor of the State of Illinois. He, with his brother, Hyrum Smith, John Taylor, and Willard Richards, was incarcerated in Carthage jail, with a pledge of protection from the Governor. On his way to Carthage he said: "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter; but I am calm as a summer's morning; I have a conscience void of offense towards God and towards all men. I shall die innocent, and it shall yet be said of me, 'he was murdered in cold blood.'" He and his brother were killed by a mob. John Taylor, who afterwards became president of the Church, received four gunshot wounds and carried in his body some of the rifle-balls to his grave. Brigham Young, as leader of the stricken people, then entered into an agreement that the latter would move to the West. He, with others, began exploring the country, and the migration started. Quite a number of the people located at Council Bluffs; but that winter, after many of the able-bodied men had left, the mob drove the remnant of the "Mormon" people from their beloved city of Nauvoo, which was then the largest city in the State of Illinois. It was a beautiful and populous town of twenty thousand souls when Chicago was a mere trading post; and they deserted that city willingly, because they had to. (Laughter.) The first detachments of the people crossed the Mississippi River on the ice, in the dead of winter, and during that terrible night nine babies were born with no shelter save the rude tents and wagon covers under which their mothers were huddled. No tongue can tell, no pen can paint the sufferings and the hardships of the "Mormon" people in these drivings from Missouri and Illinois.

They next located at Council Bluffs, moved across the river and built Winter Quarters, now known as Florence. In the meantime, a state of war had grown out of difficulties between the United States and Mexico, and a government recruiting officer was sent to the "Mormon" camps at Council Bluffs soliciting five hundred men for military service to march against Mexico. The leaders of our people had previously petitioned the President of the United States, Martin Van Buren, for a redress of wrongs, only to have the President announce: "Your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you," a pusillanimous remark, to say the least. Yet now five hundred men were demanded from whom? From a people who were being expatriated, a people who had been driven from Missouri under circumstances of indescribable cruelty, a people who had also just been expelled from Illinois in the dead of winter. Yet Brigham Young said: "Captain Allen, you shall have your battalion; and if we haven't enough young men, we will give you old men." An American flag was hoisted, recruiting started, and in three days the five hundred men were furnished. I maintain that you will search the history of the world in vain to find elsewhere such evidence of patriotism! In spite of their expatriation, in spite of the fact that in order to save their lives they had been compelled to abandon and flee from their homes, they responded to the call of their country. And as to the nature of the service rendered by the heroic volunteers, the gallant commander, Lieutenant Colonel St. George Cooke, said in his general order announcing the completion of their march:

"History may be searched in vain for an equal march of infantry. Half of it has been through a wilderness where nothing but savages and wild beasts are found; or deserts where, for want of water, there is no living creature. There, with almost hopeless labor, we have dug deep wells which the future traveler will enjoy. Without a guide who had traversed them, we have ventured into trackless tablelands where water was not found for several marches. With crowbar and pick and axe in hand, we have worked our way over mountains which seemed to defy aught save the wild goat, and hewed a passage through a chasm of living rock more narrow than our wagons."

I might incidentally remark, as a further instance of the service of the Mormon Battalion in making the West, that some of its members were among the discoverers of gold in California, which subsequently enriched our nation many millions of dollars.

THE GREAT MIGRATION TO UTAH.

Crossing to the west bank of the Missouri River, as I have said, the "Mormon" camps established Winter Quarters, and here many log houses were built, and a frontier settlement was made. In this place Brigham Young planted a cottonwood tree, under which I had the honor of standing two weeks ago last Sunday, with some of my companions; and a snapshot was taken of us, which by the way did not come out very well. (I hope we did not spoil the camera.) It is a large tree, with its branches extending a hundred feet, and its trunk about twenty feet in circumference. It is distinctive, historically and otherwise, among all the other trees in the park where it stands. A short distance from that spot many hundreds of the early "Mormons" are buried; and from there, in 1847, Brigham Young started with his pioneer company of 143 men, three women, and two children to explore the unknown West, and find an abiding place for the homeless people.

I shall not relate the many incidents of peril and anxiety on that memorable trip, which required many weary weeks in traveling from the Missouri River to the Salt Lake Valley, which was then practically an unknown country. Nor was the prospect pleasing when they reached the spot where our chief city now stands. "Weary and worn as I am," said one of the three women, "I would gladly go another thousand miles rather than stay in such a desolate place;" and another, her sister, echoed the same sentiment. But Brigham Young had said, "This is the place," asserting that he had seen the valley in vision some time before, and that it was the spot where the Latter-day Saints should locate. He had been taken sick just before reaching the valley, and a small advance company was sent out two days ahead of the main body of pioneers to look over the country and if possible prepare a bit of land for planting. They had brought some plows, but found the ground so hard that several plowshares were broken. They finally turned the water of a small stream on the parched and baked soil, and the first day succeeded in planting a few acres of crops. So far as I know, this was the beginning of that system of irrigation which has meant so much in the development of the United States of America, a system which has reclaimed millions upon millions of acres of land, and has led to the expenditure of very many millions of dollars by the government in reclamation projects in Idaho, Arizona, Utah, and other sections of the country.

The pioneer company later returned to Winter Quarters, where in the meantime the work of outfitting and preparing for the general migration to the West had gone on apace. Large trains of ox teams were organized that took several months to cross the plains. My own father had the privilege of commanding one of those companies—the third company of emigrants that went to Utah that first season; and by the fall of 1847, there were 1600 people in the Salt Lake Valley. They had built a log fort with extensions, and a number of log houses. Their industry was prospectively to be rewarded with fruitful harvests in 1848, when myriads of crickets appeared, devouring everything before them. Immigration had continued meanwhile, and now the people felt that ruin and starvation stared them in the face, because they were a thousand miles from anywhere, so to speak, and it appeared that the crops would be utterly lost in spite of all they could do. Unless that harvest could be saved, there was nothing for them to look forward to but absolute starvation. As a people they believe God came to their rescue; that it was His providence that from the islands in the Great Salt Lake the flocks of gulls came which devoured the crickets. In commemoration of this deliverance there has since been erected a very beautiful monument, and I shall take occasion to get from Secretary Tufts a list of the members of your club, and when I return home will mail to each of you a booklet entitled "Utah," on the front cover of which is a picture of the monument, erected in remembrance of the mercy of God in saving from starvation the many hundreds of early pioneers in the Salt Lake Valley. Our Legislature has enacted a law prohibiting the killing of gulls; and the birds are so tame that they will come into our fields, and follow the plowman to feast on the worms that are uncovered by his furrow.

PIONEERING THE INTERMOUNTAIN COUNTRY.

In the next few years the "Mormons" redeemed the valleys for a hundred miles north and three hundred and fifty miles to the south. Originally, Utah included all of the present State of Utah, all of Nevada, part of Colorado, and part of Wyoming and Idaho; but pieces have been sliced off from time to time, until it is small in area compared with what it was in the early days, perhaps no more than one-half its original size.

The "Mormon" people have been not only the pioneers in settlement and in irrigation and reclamation in Utah, but they were the pioneers also in Idaho. A little settlement that was once in Utah is now in Idaho, and it is the city where the pioneers of the Gem state meet once a year to celebrate "Idaho Day," being the starting point of civilization in that section. In the other direction, the San Luis Valley in Colorado was considered altogether too high in elevation to be of any value for agriculture until a "Mormon" colony went there and reclaimed the locality. They proved that it was a good country for raising crops, notwithstanding the fact that it was seven thousand feet in elevation. The "Mormons" were also among the very first pioneers to go into Arizona. There was a great deal of prejudice against them, but it has practically all disappeared. Today there is perhaps a better feeling toward our people in Arizona than in any other section in which they are located. As an illustration of the goodwill existing there regarding the "Mormon" people: when a novelist by the name of Winifred Graham came over here from England, telling a lot of unconscionable lies about the "Mormons," a Senator from Arizona stood up in the Senate of the United States and voluntarily and emphatically branded her statements as the falsehoods which they were. The ex-Governor of the state also said that no better class of people could be found anywhere than the "Mormons" of Arizona, adding that in one respect they were being robbed of between 2500 and 3000 per cent of a certain class of taxes in Arizona—because, according to population, they were entitled to have twenty-five or thirty inmates in the state penitentiary, and they had only one (laughter); also that we were entitled to 700 or 800 per cent more of the taxes set aside for the support of the insane, being entitled, according to population, to seven or eight inmates in the insane asylum, whereas we had none.

We ask people to judge us by the standard laid down by our Savior: "By their fruits ye shall know them." I was reading last Saturday, in Chicago, from Phil Robinson's book, Sinners and Saints, in which he states that he is at the defiance of any man to find a single book, with one exception, written on the "Mormon" question, that is not absolutely untrue, because practically all the books on that subject were written by the enemies of our people, and are unfair. In the book I refer to, Mr. Robinson gives the "Mormons" a fine certificate of character, and among other things says that he nearly choked to death for "a drink" among the "Mormons" while traveling 350 miles to the south and a hundred-odd miles to the north, until after inquiring for a "backslider" he was successful in finding a demijohn. After that he got along very well. He said he had always supposed water was for the cleansing of the body until he arrived in Utah, and there he found it was used for drinking purposes. Mr. Robinson also refers to the fact that although we had 80-odd per cent of the population in Utah, the remaining 17 per cent (as I recall) furnished 80 per cent of the inmates of the territorial penitentiary.

The first great commandment is to "multiply and replenish the earth;" and Utah's best crop is babies. (Laughter.) We feel very proud of the record of our people in that particular. We can not begin to compare with other people in furnishing divorces.

Before we divided on party lines in Utah as Democrats and Republicans, I heard a Congressman say, while making a campaign speech in Salt Lake City, that hanging on the wall in one of the houses of Congress in Washington there was a map showing the states and territories of the Union. The map was black originally, but as education grew, it was painted white; and he stated that there were only four whiter spots upon that map than Utah. At that time Utah was a territory and we had no public lands to sell to help us in education; we had forged to the front without receiving one single, solitary dollar from the sale of public lands from the United States. We have been branded as an ignorant lot, and yet for ninety-odd years we have been sending our young men to Harvard and other universities to get an education, and they have made a record of which we are proud. While I was presiding over the European mission of our Church, I read in the newspapers that we have overtaken and equalled one of the states in the Union for second place in literacy. Doctor Winship, one of the great educators of our country, has given us credit, in recent lectures, for having the finest laws on education of any state or territory in the Union.

TEMPLE BUILDING AND HOME INDUSTRY.

As I have already told you, the early "Mormons" erected a temple soon after they reached Ohio, and considering the small number of people that were there, it was a wonderful accomplishment. They erected a large temple at Nauvoo, which was destroyed by the mob, after the expulsion of the people. The second day, after the arrival of the pioneers in the Salt Lake Valley, Brigham Young walked to the spot where the great temple was later erected, drove his cane into the ground, and said, "Here we will build the Temple of our God." The corners were laid forty years, to a day, before the temple was completed. For forty long years the people contributed of their means toward the erection of that temple. As a child I contributed fifty cents a month; later as a boy I gave a dollar a month, then five dollars, and finally made a contribution of several thousand dollars to aid in its completion. In the meantime the pioneers were redeeming a country which was considered absolutely worthless before they undertook its reclamation. The noted trapper, Jim Bridger, had told Brigham Young and his pioneer company that he would give one thousand dollars for the first ear of corn ripened in the Salt Lake Valley; it was quite generally considered a worthless wilderness. Yet, when years later the United States government offered a handsome prize for the best five acres of wheat raised in any part of the United States, Salt Lake Valley carried off the prize. The temple which, as I have said, was forty years in building was erected at a cost of over four millions of dollars. I imagine it could be built today, even at the high prices of labor and material, for a million and a half. But in those days it took an ox team several days to go to the mountains and bring one solitary stone for the structure. It took several weeks of work by hand to cut that stone. The footings of the building are sixteen feet; the walls are eight feet thick; and it was built, as Brigham Young advised everybody to build, "to last a thousand years." He erected, at that early day, a theatre in Salt Lake which still stands, in which all of the leading companies that visit Utah put on their plays. It was built when I was a child. Every nail in it was carried a thousand miles from the frontiers at the Missouri River, when nails were a dollar a pound. Those were the days when sugar was selling at one hundred one dollars a bag—one hundred for the sugar and one dollar for the sack. When people went to the theatre they took their molasses in a can, or brought a squash or something else to pay the price of admission. Fortunately there was no war tax; for they could not have paid it; they had no money. Within twenty years after the arrival of the piooners, the "Mormon" Tabernacle was built, with a seating capacity of eight thousand. On special occasions, when the building has been crowded, more than ten thousand people have been counted. The Tabernacle was erected without the use of nails, the roof being pinned together with wooden pins and tied with rawhide thongs. At the time of its completion, although a thousand miles from civilization, it was the largest auditorium in the United States of America without a center support to the roof; and it is today the largest except where steel girders have been used to support the roof.

A concert was given in the building, by our Tabernacle Choir of five hundred voices, for the relief of the sufferers from the Johnstown flood. The net receipts, at a $1 a seat, amounted to $7500, which was remitted to the sufferers. Yet under those conditions our people built some splendid irrigation projects. Some of them would cost today millions upon millions of dollars, and they were built by the co-operative labor of the people and the exchange of their products. Brigham Young taught the people to sustain home manufacture, to be economical, to avoid extravagant habits, and not think of getting this, that, and the other which would not add to any actual comfort. In those days we were clothed in what was known as "homespun." In nearly every home the wife would take the wool and prepare it for spinning, she would have in her home a loom on which she would weave the rag carpets. When we built a canal, the only money we needed was for the purchase of plows and scrapers and for powder to blast the rocks. Most of our early, great enterprises were made possible by co-operative labor. I know of one little canal on which the settlers worked each winter for twelve long years, and reclaimed the ground where now stands a little settlement of eight hundred or a thousand people. The accomplishments of Utah have been brought about by pulling together, by "teamwork," by absolute unity, and co-operation, which I believe existed there to a greater extent than in any other community.

Brigham Young has the honor of having established in Utah the first department store in our country—Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution, of which I am now president. This list of companies (pointing to program) of which I am credited with being president fails to mention those which come my way accidentally, one may say, because I became president of the Church, all of which are of more importance than the ones on the list here published. One of the institutions over which I have the honor to preside, and over which my predecessors from Brigham Young to Joseph F. Smith have presided, is Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution, established in early days to prevent excessive profits and to protect the people by giving them fair goods at a fair profit. That institution now does a business of some twelve million dollars a year.

ESTABLISHING BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Another institution that I have the honor of presiding over is the Utah-Idaho Sugar Company. I wish to say to you gentlemen here that we have the honor of having erected the first beet-sugar factory ever built in the United States of America with American machinery. There had been several factories built with imported machinery; in fact, away back in 1862, the "Mormons" sent John Taylor (who afterwards became president of the Church) to France to bring machinery from there to try to establish the beet-sugar industry in the Great Basin. To my mind, perhaps one of the most substantial illustrations of the loyalty and of the co-operative work of the "Mormon" people is seen in the following: In 1891 when Baring Brothers failed in London, with their investments largely in the Argentine Republic, that failure reached clear out to Salt Lake City; and as there was very little money in the country it made it very hard indeed for our people. Many of those who had subscribed for stock in the sugar company were unable to pay their subscription; but the president of the Church said: "We will build that factory if it breaks the credit of the Church itself; we must build it, because it will make an increased product from the soil and therefore be beneficial to the people." The president sent me East, West, North and South, all through the country, as his agent, to borrow money with which to build that factory. After we had failed in New York and other Eastern centers to get money to finish it, I went to San Francisco and appealed to Henry Wadsworth, then manager of the Wells Fargo Bank, to loan the last hundred thousand dollars that we needed. In my appeal I said to him: "Mr. Wadsworth, when you were in Salt Lake you believed in me as a boy when I worked for you; you gave me $100 as a New Year's present, and stated that no one else in the bank should have a dollar because all the others watched the clock to see how soon they could get out of the front door after 3 o'clock, whereas I came back occasionally and worked at night. Now that I am one of the leading officials of the 'Mormon' Church I ask you to believe in me and to furnish the hundred thousand dollars necessary to complete this factory. I have just succeeded in getting fifty thousand dollars from the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company of San Francisco; they know me well. But I must have a hundred thousand dollars more, and I must have it from you." I pleaded with him to deposit the money in Zion's Savings Bank and Trust Company, in Salt Lake City, and told him we could convince that bank that our securities were good. His reply was that "banks were failing everywhere and he could not let me have the money." Finally I said: "Mr. Wadsworth, the beet-sugar industry must and shall be established. I have no authority to offer you the note of the Church, but I pledge you four notes of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—twenty-five thousand due in six months, twenty-five thousand in a year, twenty-five thousand in eighteen months, and twenty-five thousand in two years, with twenty indorsers, individually and severally liable for the obligation; you to write out twenty-five names of the strongest financial 'Mormon' men in Salt Lake City, and I will guarantee to get twenty indorsers out of the twenty-five." He said: "My boy, that is an impossibility; no twenty men on earth would guarantee, individually and collectively, one hundred thousand dollars for any church." "Well," I replied, "we are a little different from any other church; I will get you the notes and indorsers all right." He insisted that it could not be done. "Then you don't need to give me the money," I said at last; "all I ask is that you give me the opportunity." Then he said: "I will go you one better; I will write thirty names, and if you can get any twenty out of the thirty, it will be satisfactory, and you can have your money." He wrote five or six names, tore up the paper, and said: "Heber, you were my office boy fifteen years ago. Many a man has gone broke in fifteen years. I will just write up to my successor in Salt Lake and tell him to write the names." When I got back home, his successor wrote a list of names, and as he looked at them he said: "Those names remind me of an incident in early days in a California mining camp. There was a saloon-keeper who had on his front door a list of names of the people who owed him for whisky. One day his wife in a streak of cleanliness scrubbed the floor and even washed the door, and when the man discovered it he exclaimed: 'Good heavens! you have ruined me; give me a pencil quick, and maybe I can still make them out.' Then he studied out the names as best he could, and rewrote them, and stood and looked at the list. You know some people say that 'damn' is only emphasis; and with emphasis he said: 'That is the best lot of — names that was ever on that door.' So this banker said: "This is the best lot of names I ever saw."

A FINANCIER'S FAITH AND AID.

I got twenty-four indorsers out of the thirty men on his list; three of the thirty were out of town, and one man volunteered to sign whose name was not on the list, but who happened to hear two of the gentlemen that were on the list refusing to sign the note, these taking the ground that it was not good morals for a church to borrow money to loan to a private corporation. I said to them: "I will agree, when you and I meet the Lord, if we ever do, to absolve you from all trouble if you will put your name on the back of these notes. (Laughter.) It will be time enough for you, or me, to decide the morals of the question when we become members of the presidency of the Church. The presidency have signed the notes, and they will have to answer to the Lord for the moral part of it. Will you sign the notes, or will you not?" They declined. Then I had this conversation with the voluntary signer to whom I have referred. He lived in Ogden and was worth more than any ten men who had signed the note—when he died his estate was worth fifteen to twenty millions of dollars. He had been writing a letter and after the two men declined, he said: "Heber, I have heard your story. Is my name on the list?" "No," I replied, "there are only Salt Lake men on the list." He said he would like to look at the notes. I handed them to him, and he wrote his name on the back of each one without even reading the notes. He handed them back, with the remark: "I don't think my name will hurt them." Then he said to me: "Heber, tell the president of the Church that any time he wishes those notes paid, if he will notify David Eccles thirty days ahead—I always keep from one to three hundred thousand dollars in bank, on certificates of deposit, so that on thirty days' notice I can draw it out—I will be glad to pay these notes, and the Church can pay me in one year, or five years, or ten years, or when convenient." Maybe you think I did not want to hug this man about that time. (Laughter.)

Then Mr. Eccles added: "Tell the president of the Church that if he wants my name on another hundred thousand dollars of notes, just to send you up to Ogden. You have never been in my house. I will give you supper, bed and breakfast; and we have pen and ink." By the way, I went up there some time later, and got his signature for another $100,000. (Laughter). When he told me the street on which he lived, I said: "Don't tell me what street you live on. Step across the road to my office and I will show you, a plat of your house. I have it insured." (Laughter.)

I have referred to some of the buildings erected by the Latter-day Saints, among them the great Salt Lake Temple. When I was a boy they erected a temple also at St. George, three hundred fifty miles south of Salt Lake City, at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars. Later, when I was a young man of twenty-six, they completed a temple in Logan, costing several hundred thousand dollars. Some three or four years later they erected another temple, just as large, at Manti, Utah. Last November, on my birthday, I was in the Hawaiian Islands and dedicated a temple there which cost over two hundred thousand dollars. This coming summer we will dedicate, in Canada, a temple costing over six hundred thousand dollars. We have spent millions of dollars in the erection of ward chapels and district meeting houses, also millions of dollars in erecting Church-school buildings, from Canada to Mexico. During the present year we will supply, for maintenance of Church schools alone—to say nothing of erection of buildings—three-quarters of a million dollars.

Time will not permit me to speak in detail of the part the Church has played in establishing and fostering institutions for the good of the people. I have referred to Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution and to the beet-sugar industry. The latter, the first year produced only one million one hundred thousand pounds of sugar. The Dyers of Cleveland, Ohio, who built this factory, left Utah after two or three years, believing that the sugar industry in Utah would be a failure; but among the "Mormon" people there is a considerable percent of Scotch, Dutch and Scandinavian blood, and they are somewhat stubborn. You know it is said there is nobody on earth quite as stubborn as a Scotchman, except a Dutchman. I happen to be Scotch on my father's side and Dutch on my mother's. Our people have been brought together from all sections of the country; in fact, we have converts from all parts of the world. They did not allow difficulties to discourage them; they did not give up; and in 1920, the Utah-Idaho Sugar Company will produce over two million one hundred thousand bags of one hundred pounds each of sugar, instead of one million one hundred thousand pounds as in the first year. There are other sugar companies in Utah and Idaho and their combined product will be equally as much as ours. So that the beet-sugar industry in the intermountain section will produce this year over four million bags of sugar. It is true that Colorado has outstripped us in the beet-sugar production; but the original people who went over into Colorado and built the first factory, received their education in the first factory built in Utah.

"MORMON" PIONEER HYMN.

Some day a story will be written about the sufferings and hardships of the "Mormon" pioneers while crossing the plains. I feel disposed to tell at least one little incident in connection with the pioneer journey. When the "Mormons" were at Winter Quarters, preparing to outfit their companies to travel by ox team to Utah, Brigham Young turned to a man named William Clayton and said: "Before the first company starts for Salt Lake Valley, I want you to write a hymn that will inspire and comfort and cheer and bless the people on their long journey." William Clayton went away, and is reputed to have returned the same day with what is known as the great "Mormon" pioneer hymn.

When I arrived in Liverpool to preside over the European mission, as successor to the father of Doctor Richard R. Lyman, who is here with us tonight (a professor of engineering in the University of Utah and graduate from Michigan University), President Lyman said: "We will sing your favorite hymn tonight." I replied that I hadn't any favorite. "All the leaders of the Church ought to have a favorite song," said President Lyman; "my favorite is, 'School thy feelings, O my brother; train thy warm impulsive soul.' The favorite of my bosom friend John Henry Smith, is 'Up, awake, ye defenders of Zion.'" And he named the favorite hymns of about a dozen of our Church leaders. Finally I said: "Hold on; I can choose my favorite in a quarter of a minute—'Come, come ye Saints.'"

Come, come, ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear,
But with joy wend your way;
Though hard to you this journey may appear,
Grace shall be as your day.
'Tis better far for us to strive
Our useless cares from us to drive,
Do this, and joy your hearts will swell
All is well! All is well!

Why should we mourn, or think our lot is hard?
'Tis not so; all is right!
Why should we think to earn a great reward,
If we now shun the fight?
Gird up your loins, fresh courage take,
Our God will never us forsake;
And soon we'll have this tale to tell—
All is well! All is well!

We'll find the place which God for us prepared,
Far away in the West;
Where none shall come to hurt or make afraid;
There the Saints will be blest.
We'll make the air with music ring,
Shout praises to our God and King;
Above the rest these words we'll tell—
All is well! all is well!

And should we die before our journey's through,
Happy day! all is well!
We then are free from toil and sorrow too;
With the just we shall dwell,
But if our lives are spared again

To see the Saints their rest obtain,
O, how we'll make this chorus swell—
All is well! All is well.

PATHETIC INCIDENT OF THE PLAINS.

One day my father-in-law said to me: "Heber, for twenty long years I have listened in vain for our choirs to sing the fourth verse of 'Come, come ye Saints.' I believe the rising generation know nothing whatever of the comfort and cheer which we received, while crossing the plains, from singing that pioneer hymn or they never would be guilty of leaving off the fourth verse, which we looked upon as a prayer." In one of the revelations to our Church we are told by the Lord: "For my soul delighteth in the song of the heart, yea, the song of the righteous is a prayer unto me, and it shall be answered with a blessing upon their heads." My father-in-law said that hymn was a blessing to every one who sang it, and particularly the last verse, which they sang, and meant every word of it:

And should we die before our journey's through,
Happy day! all is well!
We then are free from toil and sorrow too;
With the just we shall dwell.

Then he related the following incident: "One of the men in our company crossing the plains was late coming into camp one night. (In those early companies they traveled a day and a half or two days apart, and had three companies going practically together, so that in case of Indian trouble, having a few horses with each company, men with guns could go back or forward.) As this man had not reached camp, and it was getting late, we organized a volunteer company to go back to see if he had been waylaid by Indians. Just as we were ready to start, we saw him coming in the distance. He explained that he had been sick, and as he happened to have the last wagon in the company, he was alone, and had to lie down by the road for a few hours' rest. He was very feeble when he came into camp, so we unyoked his oxen, and got his supper ready. After supper he sat on a large rock by the campfire and sang 'Come, come ye Saints.' It was the rule of the camp that whenever any one started to sing this pioneer hymn, all the others should join in; but in this case it happened that none of us joined in the song. When he had finished, I looked around and I did not see a dry eye. The next morning, noticing that he had not yoked up his oxen, we went to his wagon and found that he had died during the night. We dug a shallow grave, buried his body, and to the head of his grave we rolled the stone on which he sat the night before, while singing, 'And should we die before our journey's through, happy day! all is well! We then are free from toil and sorrow too; with the just we shall dwell.'" My father-in-law started to tell me something else, but stopped and said: "Never mind." Years later the Burlington railroad, while surveying its line through Nebraska and Wyoming, found a broken wagon tire sticking out of the ground, on which there had been chiseled the words: "Rebecca Winters; age 50 years." The surveyors with delicate kindness and consideration went back three or four miles, and changed the line of the road in order to miss that lonely grave. The railroad company fenced the spot and wrote to Utah to find out if any one knew Rebecca Winters. She was my wife's grandmother. No doubt my father-in-law had intended to tell me during the conversation above quoted, that when he came to Salt Lake City from his home in another part of the territory, to meet an immigrant train on which he expected to find his beloved mother, he learned that she, too, had died before her journey "was through." We have erected a little monument at the grave, inscribing on one side the history of Grandma Winters, and on the other side the fourth verse of "Come, come ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear."

AS COLONIZERS AND NATION-BUILDERS.

It is this spirit among the "Mormon" people, of co-operation, this willingness to stand one by the other, and to build up the communities, that has helped to redeem the desert, that has enabled them to make a record in Canada, in Mexico, as well as in our own country—that has given them the splendid standing and reputation they enjoy. They were regarded as the foremost colonists of all Mexico, in the estimation of that great leader of the republic, the late General Diaz. No one would suspect that that iron character would be guilty of shedding a tear, and yet on the last trip he took to Chihuahua to visit the state fair, when he saw the exhibit of industry and frugality, the saddles and the harness, the canned fruit, the bottled fruit, the exhibits from the "Mormon" academy and the pictures of the "Mormon" Church schools in Juarez, the old warrior wiped his eyes and said: "What could I not do with my beloved Mexico if I only had more citizens and settlers like the 'Mormons.'"

Wherever we have gone, we have made a success. The "Mormon" people believe in education; they believe in art, in literature, in science, in advancement. They sent their tabernacle choir of two hundred fifty voices to the Chicago Fair in 1893, and won the second prize in competition with all the world, for the best choir of that number of voices. The choir that won first prize, I understand, had hired the best fifty voices from Wales to help them out. (Laughter.) We put in a little protest, but the protest did not work. One of the producers of operas, concerts, and lectures, a great theatrical man of New York, told me that he was at the fair and heard the choirs sing; and his verdict was that those fifty voices did not help the other choir, their strength and power destroyed perfect harmony; "but, of course," he said, "it never would have done to give you miserable 'Mormons' the five-thousand-dollar prize, although if I had been the judge you would have received it."

It was my intention to speak from notes on this occasion, because this is my first attempt at talking to an audience like this. The first thing I had intended to do was to read a poem, but I forgot all about it until I looked at these notes. Now that I see my time is about up, I am going to close with what should have been the beginning and use the remaining few minutes in reading this poem and a statement regarding Joseph Smith. Some four years ago I happened to buy this book, and since then I have given away over five hundred copies. I have just ordered something over a thousand to send out, at the expense of the Church, to our missionaries in the United States.

I am very grateful to be here, as I said in the opening of my remarks, and I hope you will get acquainted with me. This poem is from the pen of Edgar A. Guest, and is entitled:

WHEN YOU GET TO KNOW A FELLOW.

When you get to know a fellow, know his joys and know his cares,
When you've come to understand him and the burdens that he bears,
When you've learned the fight he's making and the troubles in his way,
Then you find that he is different than you thought him yesterday.
Then you will find his faults are trivial and there's not so much to blame
In the brother that you jeered at when you only knew his name.

You are quick to see the blemish in the distant neighbor's style,
You can point to all his errors and may sneer at him the while,
And your prejudices fatten and your hates more violent grow
As you talk about the failure of the man you do not know,
But when drawn a little closer, and your hands and shoulders touch,
You find the traits you hated really don't amount to much.

When you get to know a fellow, know his every mood and whim,
You begin to find the texture of the splendid side of him;
You begin to understand him, and you cease to scoff and sneer,
For with understanding always prejudices disappear.
You begin to find his virtues and his faults you cease to tell,
For you seldom hate a fellow when you know him very well.

When next you start in sneering and your phrases turn to blame,
Know more of him you censure than his business and his name;
For it's likely that acquaintance would your prejudice dispel
And you'd really come to like him if you knew him very well.
Then his faults won't really matter, for you'll find a lot to praise.
When you get to know a fellow and you understand his ways,

(Applause.)

TRIBUTE TO THE FOUNDER.

Brigham Young, some day, will be acknowledged as one of the greatest leaders and pioneers that the world has ever known, and yet I want you to know that all that has been accomplished, by so-called "Mormonism" and by our people, was built upon the broad foundation laid by the man who was martyred in Carthage jail. He gave the Church a book of revelations of hundreds of pages. Brigham Young gave but one revelation pertaining to the organizing of the pioneer companies. John Taylor gave but one revelation during his presidency; and his successors promulgated no new revelations. The foundation was laid by the prophet Joseph Smith for all that has been accomplished. He gave his life, in Carthage jail, sealing with his blood the divinity of his testimony, and credit is due to this wonderful leader for what has been accomplished. I desire to read a testimony given by Josiah Quincy, a man who knew Washington and others of the country's great founders, a man who was once Mayor of Boston, and a man who was on the reception committee to welcome Lafayette when he came over here from France. In his book, Figures of the Past, he says:

"It is by no means improbable that some future textbook for the use of generations yet unborn will contain a question something like this: What historical American of the nineteenth century has exerted the most powerful influence upon the destinies of his countrymen? And it is by no means impossible that the answer to that interrogatory may be thus written: 'Joseph Smith, the 'Mormon' Prophet.' And the reply, absurd as it doubtless seems to most men now living, may be an obvious commonplace to their descendants. History deals in surprises and paradoxes quite as startling as this. The man who established a religion in this age of free debate, who was and is today accepted by hundreds of thousands as a direct emissary from the Most High—such a rare human being is not to be disposed of by pelting his memory with unsavory epithets. Fanatic, impostor, charlatan, he may have been; but these hard names furnish no solution to the problem he presents to us. Fanatics and impostors are living and dying every day, and their memory is buried with them; but the wonderful influence which this founder of a religion exerted and still exerts throws him into relief before us, not as a rogue to be criminated, but as a phenomenon to be explained. The most vital questions Americans are asking each other today have to do with this man and what he has left us. * * * A generation other than mine must deal with these questions. Burning questions they are, which must give a prominent place in the history of the country to that sturdy self-asserter whom I visited at Nauvoo. Joseph Smith, claiming to be an inspired teacher, faced adversity such as few men have been called to meet, enjoyed a brief season of prosperity such as few men have ever attained, and, finally, forty-three days after I saw him, went cheerfully to a martyr's death. When he surrendered his person to Governor Ford, in order to prevent the shedding of blood, the prophet had a presentiment of what was before him. 'I am going like a lamb to the slaughter,' he is reported to have said, 'but I am as calm as a summer's morning. I have a conscience void of offense and shall die innocent.' I have no theory to advance respecting this extraordinary man. I shall simply give the facts of my intercourse with him.

"A fine-looking man——"

[Incidentally, my mother tells me he was the finest looking man she ever saw; he stood over six feet high.]

"A fine-looking man is what the passer-by would instinctively have murmured upon meeting the remarkable individual who had fashioned the mold which was to shape the feelings of so many thousands of his fellow mortals. But Smith was more than this, and one could not resist the impression that capacity and resource were natural to his stalwart person. I have already mentioned the resemblance he bore to Elisha R. Potter, of Rhode Island, whom I met in Washington in 1826. The likeness was not such as would be recognized in a picture, but rather one that would be felt in a grave emergency. Of all men I have met——"

[Remember the writer had met Washington, he had been private secretary to John Adams, and he had met Lafayette and the great men of his day]

NATURAL LEADER AND STATESMAN.

"Of all men I have met, these two seemed best endowed with that kingly faculty which directs, as by intrinsic right, the feeble or confused souls who are looking for guidance."

In passing, I may remark that you can read in one book written against the "Mormons" that Joseph Smith got all his inspiration and revelations while he was having fits. (Laughter.)

"We then went on to talk of politics. Smith recognized the curse and iniquity of slavery, though he opposed the methods of the abolitionists. His plan was for the nation to pay for the slaves from the sale of the public lands. 'Congress,' he said, 'should be compelled to take this course, by petitions from all parts of the country; but the petitioners must disclaim all alliance with those who would disturb the rights of property recognized by the Constitution and which foment insurrection. It may be worth while to remark that Smith's plan was publicly advocated eleven years later by one who has mixed so much practical shrewdness with his lofty philosophy. In 1855, when men's minds had been moved to their depths on the question of slavery, Ralph Waldo Emerson declared that it should be met in accordance 'with the interest of the South and with the settled conscience of the North. It is not really a great task a great fight for this country to accomplish, to buy that property of the planter, as the British nation bought the West Indian slaves.' He further says that the 'United States will be brought to give every inch of their public lands for a purpose like this.' We, who can look back upon the terrible cost of the fratricidal war which put an end to slavery, now say that such a solution of the difficulty would have been worthy a Christian statesman. But if the retired scholar was in advance of his time when he advocated this disposition of the public property in 1855, what shall I say of the political and religious leader who had committed himself, in print, as well as in conversation, to the same course in 1844? If the atmosphere of men's opinions was stirred by such a proposition when war-clouds were discernible in the sky, was it not a statesmanlike word eleven years earlier, when the heavens looked tranquil and beneficent?

"General Smith proceeded to unfold still further his views upon politics. He denounced the Missouri Compromise as an unjustifiable concession for the benefit of slavery. It was Henry Clay's bid for the presidency. Doctor Goforth might have spared himself the trouble of coming to Nauvoo to electioneer for a duellist who would fire at John Randolph, but was not brave enough to protect the Saints in their rights as American citizens. Clay told his (Smith's) people to go to the wilds of Oregon and set up a government of their own. Oh, yes, the Saints might go into the wilderness and obtain the justice of the Indians, which imbecile, time serving politicians would not give them in the land of freedom and equality. The prophet then talked of the details of government. He thought that the number of members admitted to the lower house of the National Legislature should be reduced. A crowd only darkened counsel and impeded business. A member for every half-million of population would be ample. The powers of the President should be increased. He should have authority to put down rebellion in a state, without waiting for the request of any Governor; for it might happen that the Governor himself would be the leader of the rebels. It is needless to remark how later events showed the executive weakness that Smith pointed out—a weakness which cost thousands of valuable lives and millions of treasure. . . .

"Born in the lowest ranks of poverty, without booklearning and with the homeliest of all human names, he had made himself at the age of thirty-nine a power upon the earth. Of the multitudinous family of Smith, none had so won human hearts and shaped human lives as this Joseph. His influence, whether for good or evil, is potent today, and the end is not yet.

"I have endeavored to give the details of my visit to the 'Mormon' prophet with absolute accuracy. If the reader does not know just what to make of Joseph Smith, I can not help him out of the difficulty. I myself stand helpless before the puzzle."

I thank, you, gentlemen, for your attention.

Elegant New Edition of the BOOK OF MORMON

Just off the press—a new edition of the Book of Mormon! It now appears in new and attractive dress, with acceptable innovations in make-up and typography. Only mechanical changes have been made, of course; the text remains the same, in all its sacred completeness of detail.

This edition of the Book of Mormon is designed for popular use, and will surely be in large demand in the home library. Its eight-point type will make reading delightfully easy.

It is set in double-column pages, after the general style of the Bible. An advantage of this arrangement is a shorter line, which greatly facilitates reading, reducing eye-strain and fatigue.

An interesting feature is a "Brief Analysis," which emphasizes vital points and clarifies certain details of arrangement that would be otherwise obscure. The volume abounds in foot-notes, which are a very helpful key to the chronological sequence of the history. The chapter headings present in terse, yet comprehensive form, the principal contents of the respective chapters, and show at a glance whose words follow. These headings, in somewhat expanded form, are compiled in the after-part of the volume as a "Synopsis of Chapters."

A glossary of words distinctly of Book of Mormon origin, will be a great aid to pronunciation of proper names and other words. But the greatest help of all is afforded by a comprehensive index, which fills 34 pages. Subjects are indexed and cross-indexed; while striking passages, telling epigrams and choice gems of thought are indicated in a way that readily leads to their source.

It is printed on high grade paper, has wide margins, and is bound in several styles, as follows:

Prophecies by Joseph Smith and Their Fulfillment

A Valuable Book, by Nephi L. Morris

Was Joseph Smith a Prophet? What answers come from the century that has rolled by since he beheld his first vision? Have the Latter-day Saints misplaced faith in him? After the progress of a hundred years, what has Time done with his claims to the title of a Prophet.

In order to make plain the outcome of Time the author has dug up old and forgotten manuscripts and prints which he lays before the readers.

Did you know that Joseph Smith foretold the War of the Rebellion, stating exactly where it should begin? Did you know that he foretold in the same prophecy exactly when the World War should occur?

Did you know that he foretold the fate of Judge Stephen A. Douglas, the man who contended with Lincoln for the presidential chair?

Did you know that he prophesied that this great Intermountain Empire should arise here as a result of the persecutions of the Saints at the hands of their enemies?

Did you know that he placed the Garden of Eden in America and that today many great scientists agree with him?

Did you know that he placed the date of the birth of the Savior as April 6th and probably the date of His crucifixion as the same date?

Does the Book of Mormon chronology of these events agree with his statements?

Did you know that the United States has faithfully pursued the path pointed out for her by the Book of Mormon Prophets thousands of years ago?

Did you know that Apostle Orson Hyde foretold the part that England should take in the restoring of Jerusalem to the Jews and that his prophecy was published in 1842—seventy-five years before the event transpired?

Read this interesting book for the answers to these questions.

Ninety-Second Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

FIRST DAY

The 92nd Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, at 10 a. m., Thursday, October 6, 1921.

President Heber J. Grant presided and announced the opening of the Conference.

AUTHORITIES PRESENT.

Of the First Presidency: Heber J. Grant, Charles W. Penrose, and Anthony W. Ivins; of the Council of the Twelve Apostles: Rudger Clawson,* George Albert Smith, George F. Richards,† Joseph Fielding Smith, James E. Talmage, Stephen L. Richards, Richard R. Lyman, Melvin J. Ballard, and John A. Widtsoe; Presiding Patriarch Hyrum G. Smith; of the First Council of Seventy: Seymour B. Young, B. H. Roberts, J. Golden Kimball, Rulon S. Wells, Joseph W. McMurrin, Charles H. Hart, and Levi Edgar Young; of the Presiding Bishopric: Charles W. Nibley, David A. Smith, and John Wells.

There were many presidents of stakes with their counselors, partiarchs, bishops of wards and their counselors, and numerous other prominent officers, men and women, representing various quorums and organizations of the Church.

The following mission presidents were in attendance: George W. McCune, Eastern states; Winslow Farr Smith, Northern States; Samuel O. Bennion, Central States; Charles A. Callis, Southern States; John M. Knight, Western States; Joseph W. McMurrin, California; Heber C. Iverson, Northwestern States; Rey L. Pratt, Mexico; Nephi Jensen, Canada; and Benjamin Goddard, Bureau of Information, Temple Block, Salt Lake City.

The Tabernacle was comfortably filled with people from all parts of the Church.

The choir and congregation sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

*Reed Smoot was absent in Washington, and Orson F. Whitney presiding over the British Mission.

†David O. McKay was absent on a world tour of the missions.

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Stephen L. Chipman, President of the Alpine stake of Zion.

The hymn, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord," was then sung by the choir and congregation.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

It is indeed a great pleasure to have again the opportunity of meeting with the Latter-day Saints in General Conference. I desire most earnestly that the prayer of President Chipman may be realized and that all of us, who may have the opportunity of speaking during the sessions of this conference, may be inspired of the Lord. I know that I not only speak for myself but for all of my associates of the General Authorities of the Church when I say that we desire only to say those things, during this conference, that shall be for the benefit, spiritually as well as temporally, of the Latter-day Saints. I know not only my own heart, but I know the hearts of those with whom I am associated, as the General Authorities of the Church, and I know that each and all of us desire more than anything else in the world the advancement of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We desire the welfare spiritually of the people, and also their temporal welfare; and it is our daily and constant prayer to God that his blessings may be and abide with the Saints in all parts of the world, and also with every honest-hearted soul who dwells upon the earth.

THE SANCTIFYING POWER OF DISTRESS, AS ILLUSTRATED IN THE HISTORY OF THE SAINTS

I would like to express my firm conviction as to the application to each and every faithful Latter-day Saint, of the last verse that we have just sung, verse number four of the hymn, "How firm a foundation:"

When through the deep waters I call thee to go,
The rivers of sorrow shall not thee o'erflow,
For I will be with thee, thy troubles to bless,
And sanctify to thee thy deepest distress.

When I think of the distress of the Latter-day Saints, the dangers and persecutions through which they went in New York, Ohio, Missouri and Illinois; when I think of the trouble and difficulties of the great pioneer journey from the Missouri river to these valleys; when I think of the reign almost of terror at different times from my childhood until now—the coming of an army against our people; when I think how near they came to starving because of the crickets; when I think of the confiscation of all the Church's property, and the many trials and tribulations through which the people have passed,—I say when I think of these things I realize that the Lord has sanctified all their trials to the good of the Latter-day Saints, for these afflictions and tribulations have fitted and qualified them more perfectly to live the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

PRESENT DISTRESS AND DEBT

At the present time the Latter-day Saints and the people of this intermountain country are in great distress financially. Perhaps there has never been a time from the early days of the settlement of the valley, when there was a greater scarcity of money in proportion to the needs of the people, and when so many people find themselves in financial difficulties, mainly due to the fact that they launched out beyond their means, and ran in debt, in many cases for luxuries. I happened to pick up in Chicago a bank advertisement which I think is very fine and timely just in this particular condition of affairs. The words are the words of that wise man, Benjamin Franklin:

Taxes are indeed very heavy; but if those laid on by the government were the only ones we had to pay, we might the more easily discharge them. But we have many others and much more grievous to some of us; we are taxed twice as much by our idleness, three times as much by our pride, and four times as much by our folly, [and they didn't even have automobiles in that day] and from these taxes the commissioners cannot ease or deliver us by allowing an abatement.

FAITH, INTEGRITY AND DEVOTION OF THE SAINTS

From my earliest recollections, from the days of Brigham Young until now, I have listened to men standing in the pulpit in the old Tabernacle, and before that in the Bowery, before we had the old Tabernacle, and from this stand, urging the people not to run into debt; and I believe that the great majority of all our troubles today is caused through the failure to carry out that counsel.

I certainly hope that the lessons that we are learning today will turn out a blessing to us, that they will be sanctified to our good, as illustrated in the words of this verse from the hymn that I have read. And I believe that they will. I have an abiding and perfect faith in the integrity and the devotion and the loyalty of the Latter-day Saints to God and their desire to serve him. I have full faith in the people that have embraced the gospel. Why? Because they know the Lord; because they know our Redeemer, the Lord Jesus Christ; because they know that this gospel, commonly called "Mormonism," is in very deed the plan of salvation; because they have an absolute and abiding knowledge that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the true and living God, and that the revelations contained in the Doctrine and Covenants are in very deed the words of God. There is no doubt in the minds of the Latter-day Saints that God our heavenly Father, the Creator of heaven and earth; did speak to Joseph Smith. There is no doubt in the minds of the Latter-day Saints that God pointed to his Son and announced that he was his Son, and told the boy to hear him, and that the Savior of the world gave instructions to Joseph Smith. I read a few months ago of one of the great "divines" in Great Britain—a great student of the Bible, declaring that Jesus Christ was not the Son of God, and quoting as part of his authority another great "divine" and a famous theological student and teacher. Thank the Lord for the revelations of God to us, for the revelations from Jesus Christ where, time and time again, he announces himself as the Son of the living God, and the Redeemer of the World! Knowing as I know, and as the Latter-day Saints do know, that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, that the revelations contained in this book are in very deed the words of God, and the words of our Redeemer, I repeat that I have full faith in the integrity to God of the Latter-day Saints; and I am convinced beyond a shadow of doubt that the work of the Lord will continue to spread, notwithstanding the hard times financially through which we have been passing.

PROGRESS IN THE MISSION FIELD

We have, at the present time in the missionary field, seventeen hundred and ninety-eight missionaries, not including hundreds of workers in foreign lands who are local missionaries, who have been working in that capacity because of the lack of material in sending elders from the stakes of Zion. Our missionary activities for the first six months of this year indicate an increase in all the missions of the Church of 65 per cent in baptisms, as compared with the same period a year ago. This proves that the work of the Lord is spreading, that notwithstanding hard times, notwithstanding financial difficulties, there is a most remarkable and wonderful increase in the number of those who are embracing the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. We have practically the same number of missionaries now that we had a year ago, so this growth is not because of the increase in the laborers in the fields, but is because of increase in the power of the missionaries and the blessings of the Lord to those who are engaged in the work. There has also been an increase of over 50 per cent in the mission fields in charities obtained during the past six months.

ABOUT THE LABORS OF MISSIONARIES

In this connection, I desire to say to all the Latter-day Saints that we wish they would refrain from writing to laborers in the mission field suggesting that it is about time they were coming home. Where parents have had sons in the mission field for, say 15, 16 or 18 months, and feel, because of financial difficulties that it is impossible to keep them longer, we advise that they state the circumstances to the bishop of their wards, who should then apply to the elders and seventies, and these should endeavor to raise the means to keep those young men in the field for at least two years or two years and a half. In most cases a young elder is just coming to himself and to a capacity and ability and power to preach the gospel with force and with the inspiration of God, when he has been in the mission field 18 months, and it is a great injustice to the boy who is growing spiritually—as he cannot grow in any other labor in all the world—that he should have to come home too soon. Those who are at home ought to realize this, and ought to feel a responsibility and a willingness and a desire to keep in the field the young men from the various wards until they have completed at least two years of service; and in many cases it would be a god-send to the young men, as well as to those who help, if their mission were extended to two and a half or even three years. I remember President Lyman's idea was that a missionary who had been in the field two years and a half could do more by remaining another six months than he had done in the entire year of his previous term; and I believe this.

APPEAL TO THE SAINTS TO KEEP MISSIONARIES IN THE FIELD

So where young men have the spirit of their missions and are themselves willing and anxious to stay, but whose parents, because of financial difficulties are unable to keep them, I appeal to the Latter-day Saints to respond to the calls of the elders and the seventies and the bishopric of the wards, and assist in keeping these young men in the field. Our mission to the world is to proclaim the gospel; one reason why the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ was placed upon the earth was that men should come to a knowledge of the truth; and the one supreme object above all other objects of every Latter-day Saint should be to bring people to a knowledge of the truth.

MISSIONARY WORK THE GREATEST OF ALL IN THE WORLD

The missionary work of the Latter-day Saints is the greatest of all the great works in all the world. We find recorded in the eighteenth section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God:
 For, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him.

And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him, on conditions of repentance;

And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth.

Wherefore, you are called to cry repentance unto this people;

And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father?

And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me?

Behold, you have my gospel before you, and my rock, and my salvation.

Ask the Father in my name, in faith believing that you shall receive, and you shall have the Holy Ghost, which manifesteth all things which are expedient unto the children of men.

And if we have not faith we cannot please the Lord, the revelation goes on to say. We should have faith in God and not only have faith, but works also, and exhibit our works by supporting those who are in the missionary field.

WONDERFUL MISSIONARY LABORS IN THE STAKES OF ZION

I wish to say that I am delighted with the excellent and wonderful labors that have been accomplished in some of the stakes of Zion in converting and baptizing people. Missionary work that has been carried on here at home during the past six months has been far more fruitful than it has ever been before. We have not really done our duty here at home in our missionary work. It is only within the last year or two that we have taken up a systematic labor of visiting those who are not of our faith and explaining the gospel; and in proportion to the amount of this work that has been done, the results in baptisms have been greater than the same amount of work anywhere. I am grateful for this labor, and commend those stakes of Zion where it has been most energetically carried on.

THE BEST LAW IN THE WORLD TO MAKE BETTER LATTER-DAY SAINTS

In these hard times financially, I want to repeat to the Latter-day Saints my firm belief that God our heavenly Father prospers and blesses and gives wisdom to those men and to those women who are strictly honest with him in the payment of their tithing. I believe that when a man is in financial difficulty, the best way to get out of that difficulty (and I speak from personal experience, because I believe that more than once in my life I have been in the financial mud as deep as almost anybody) is to be absolutely honest with the Lord, and never to allow a dollar to come into our hands without the Lord receiving ten per cent of it. The Lord does not need your money or mine. Compliance with the law of tithing and donations for ward meetinghouses, stake houses, academies, temples, missionary work and these various needs, are all for our good. They are but lessons that we are learning which will qualify and prepare us to become more godlike and to be fitted to go back into the presence of our heavenly Father. The very lessons of a financial nature that are given us are the same as lessons that are given in a school to a boy or a girl; they are for the benefit of the boy; they are for the benefit of the girl, for their advancement, for their joy and happiness in after life; because of all the knowledge and information we acquire, and in the improvement that we make, we ourselves are the ones who are benefited. God our heavenly Father has instituted laws to improve his people physically, spiritually, intellectually, and one of the best laws in all the world to make better Latter-day Saints is the law of tithing. There are many people who believe the gospel and would probably embrace it, but for the fact that they are like that young man of whom we read in the Scripture, when the Savior told him, after the young man declared that "all these things have I done," to sell what he had and give to the poor. Many people cannot endure the gospel because of financial requirements that are made of them, and they allow the things of this world, which they have grasped firmly and steadfastly, to rob them of the greatest of all God's gifts, namely, life eternal. I commend the law of tithing to the Latter-day Saints, and I am entitled to commend it, because from my childhood days I have never made a dollar that the tithing has not been honestly paid upon; and I acknowledge the blessings of Almighty God to me because of obeying this law.

THE LAW OF HEALTH AND WEALTH

I want to exhort the Latter-day Saints to observe and keep the Word of Wisdom. I consider it almost a crime for men and women who acknowledge that they know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that this gospel commonly called "Mormonism" is in very deed the truth—I consider it almost a crime that when the Lord Almighty gives to them a law whereby they can have health and vigor of body and mind, they disregard it. Every single dollar that is expended in breaking the Word of Wisdom goes out of the country. It is so much of the vital fluid, so to speak, financially drawn from the community every time a man or woman drinks a cup of tea or coffee or uses tobacco or uses liquor, because we do not produce those things at home. If they actually believed thoroughly the Word of Wisdom it seems to me you couldn't possibly persuade people not to obey it:

"A Word of Wisdom for the benefit of the Council of High Priests, assembled in Kirtland, and Church, and also the Saints of Zion.

"To be sent greeting—not by commandment or constraint, but by revelation and the word of wisdom, showing forth the order and will of God"—remember this is the will of God—"in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days."

I believe firmly that if all the money which has been sent out of this country from the day the Saints first located in these valleys, for those things that the Lord has said in this revelation are not good for man, had instead been kept here, the accumulation of wealth in our country would have been so great that this intermountain section where the Latter-day Saints are located, would be one of the richest and most prosperous in all the United States. A dollar is to the financial body what a drop of blood is in the body. We only have, as I understand, about twenty pounds of blood in the body. The heart beats about eighty times a minute and handles about four ounces every time it beats; therefore that twenty pounds of blood is handled every minute and there is about ten tons of it handled every twenty-four hours—ten tons although there are only twenty pounds of it. Of course they say we just accidentally came here, our hearts just accidentally keep a-going and handles ten tons of blood a day—a little bit of a pump, the size of your fist—and if it accidentally stopped two or three minutes, none of us would be here. The heart alone is one of the greatest testimonies of the divine power of God, because we don't even have to think to ask it to beat. If we did, we wouldn't have anything else to do but sit down and tell the heart to work. It would keep us busy all the time. There is nothing in all the world devised by the utmost ingenuity of man, that can do the same amount of work as that little piece of machinery, the human heart, operating after the manner of a pump, with twenty pounds doing practically ten tons of work every twenty-four hours. Now, as I say, money, a dollar, is just the same. It is estimated that a dollar does all the way from twenty to over a hundred dollars of work a year, going round and round, and circulating, and buying and paying and doing work; so when we stop to think that there are hundreds of thousands of dollars sent out of this country every year for breaking the Word of Wisdom—true, the great majority of it is not sent by the Latter-day Saints—we can form some idea of what could have happened if money thus sent out had been kept at home and each dollar of it permitted to do its hundred dollars' worth of work.

A PRACTICAL LESSON ON THE WORTH OF A DOLLAR IN HOME INDUSTRY

Speaking of the work a dollar does at home reminds me of an incident that I have related many times. Years ago there was a great drive in this section of the country to support home-made goods, and I was one who was deeply interested in it, being a member of several committees that were working to bring about this policy. I remember that during our conference we had a meeting in the Assembly Hall one evening and one of the speakers on that occasion was the then bishop of Smithfield, George L. Farrell. Brother Farrell said that for twenty odd years, or perhaps he said thirty, he had been coming down to conference twice a year and, knowing that all the stock in the railroad running through that country was owned by eastern capitalists, he had marked the money which he paid for his tickets to see if he ever got any of it back again. "I have also," he said, "marked the money that I paid for home-made goods to see if I got any of that back again, I never got any of my railroad money back," he continued, "but one reason that I always buy home-made goods is that I think a whole lot of George L. Farrell and I like to get my money back again, and time and time again when I have bought home-made goods and marked the money, that identical money, staying in the community and circulating around, has come back to me. And it is because I think a great deal of myself, as well as my neighbors, that I buy shoes made at home for my children, that I buy home-made cloth out of which to make clothes for those children." Then he said: "To give you a practical illustration: When starting for this identical conference, standing at the depot at Smithfield I saw a man who had made some shoes for my children, and I walked up and handed him five dollars to pay for those shoes; he saw somebody else in the group to whom he owed five dollars, and he handed him the five; this man saw another to whom he was indebted and handed him the same piece of money; and he in turn saw another man and handed it to him until finally after five or six debts had been paid with the same piece of money the last man to receive it came up to me and said, 'Brother Farrell, I owe you six dollars. Here is five on my account'—and I put my home-made shoes money back into my trousers pocket." Twenty or thirty dollars' worth of debts were thus paid by patronizing one shoemaker in Smithfield, the money was saved at home by circulating around, it paid these many debts and at length landed back into the pocket where it started from. That was a practical lesson, and a practical lesson that ought to count.

HOME MANUFACTURED GOODS

It would be a very easy matter to increase the use of this one product in this country by thousands and tens of thousands of dollars. Before me is an audience of at least five to ten thousand people, and I would like to know how many of you are standing, or sitting I should perhaps say, with your feet in home-made shoes. I dare not ask those of you who are thus shod to stand up—I am afraid the showing would be altogether too thin. I am myself standing in home-made shoes; it is the kind I have been standing in for over thirty years, and I find that they are good enough for me. Another reason why I like them is that they wear longer than any I used to get before I commenced wearing them, and in addition to wearing longer they look better; and in addition to looking better, they cost less. So I am like Brother Farrell. It is not altogether patriotism, it is because I think a whole lot of Heber J. Grant that I wear home-made shoes. I have been converted to home-made goods from the time that, as a young man, I heard a sermon from this stand by Brigham Young, that great leader, that man of wonderful foresight for the benefit of his people spiritually, financially, and intellectually, one of the greatest pioneers and most remarkable men that ever lived. In passing let me say that in conversing with a great banker in New York only a few days ago, I made the remark that Brigham Young would yet be recognized as one of the greatest organizers and one of the greatest leaders of men that ever lived, and this banker replied in substance: "There is no one who knows anything of Brigham Young's history that does not acknowledge it today. I do. I have read his history and it is one of the most intensely interesting books I have ever read." And my belief is that one of the very things which caused the banker to have confidence in the Latter-day Saints today was that many years ago he read the history of Brigham Young and was impressed by the wonderful things that had been accomplished by him.

But coming back to the sermon. President Young pleaded with the people to support the Provo Woolen Mills; and from that day until these mills shut down some years ago, I never bought a suit of clothes in Salt Lake City that was not made from Provo goods which I selected and handed to the tailor to make up for me. I was honored once with being in the legislature when we gave a ball to the members of the Wyoming legislature. I was wearing at the time a gray Provo suit; and, realizing that everybody who would be at the party in the Theatre would have a black suit—a swallow-tail or Prince Albert,—I went to the Z. C. M. I., bought me a black suit, Prince Albert coat. I didn't want to be the only white sheep in the bunch, and so went to the ball in black. The very next day I gave it away to a poor relative: the ball cost me thirty odd dollars—the cost of a black suit. A friend asked me, "Why didn't you wear it a little while, and get a little benefit out of it before you gave it to your neighbor?" I answered that I didn't want to have the suit on if I happened to want to preach in favor of home-made goods. I was afraid that it being a black suit, I might by chance wear it some Sunday, and I have always felt that I would not ask the people to do anything that I didn't do myself. I didn't know until yesterday that the Provo Woolen Mills were again making cloth for suits and overcoats and I do not propose to buy any overcoats in the future except those made from the Knight Woolen Mills goods or some other Utah establishment which is making them.

BUY HOME MADE GOODS

I call upon the Latter-day Saints to buy home-made goods of every kind that they can possibly get here at home. In other words, let cane sugar alone and buy some beet sugar. Some people think you can't make the finest kind of candy unless you have cane sugar. Well, I have been guilty of swapping sacks, you know, and lo and behold, Utah beet sugar in a cane sugar sack will "jell" all right, will make all kinds of candy; but cane sugar in a Utah beet sugar sack won't do any of these things. I had the same experience years ago with soap. As a young man I was agent for Franklin MacVeagh & Co.'s grocery house, of Chicago. The soapmaker employed by James A. Kirk & Co. had left that firm and MacVeagh & Co. secured his services and proceeded to make all the kinds and brands of soap which he had been making for his former firm. There was a good hired woman working for us who couldn't read English, but knew all the wrappers on the Kirk soap; and she insisted she couldn't create a lather on wash day. She couldn't wash clothes at all with the MacVeagh soap. But when I took the MacVeagh soap out and put in Kirk wrappers she declared it perfect; and when I took the Kirk soap and put it in MacVeagh wrappers the poor woman again insisted she couldn't lather with it.

I say to the people, buy all things that you possibly can which are produced here at home. No section of the inter-mountain country has been hit so hard financially as ours—Utah and southern Idaho—because of the tremendous slump in the prices of the products of the soil and because of the great fall in live stock values. I was given a place of honor as state chairman and I esteemed the privilege of calling upon the people to subscribe for Liberty bonds. I went to California with Mr. Farnsworth, chairman of our state defense committee, and other loyal, patriotic, men, to discuss ways and means in connection with raising money for our government and as chairman of the Liberty Loan committee for Utah. I said to Mr. Lynch, then governor of the Federal Reserve Bank: "I pledge you the absolute loyalty of the people of Utah. I promise to put over any requirement, no matter how much it is, that is placed on the people of Utah, on one condition, and that is that you will give us a federal reserve branch in Salt Lake City. We haven't got the resources, we haven't the war activities, we haven't the money. But we have the loyalty, and if you will bring the bank there, we will borrow the money and we will do our share. The Bank organized a bank and they expected that five or six clerks, ten at the most, were all they would need for some time; and it was a little less than five months, as I remember it, when we were owing that branch bank, because of financial distress, between forty and fifty millions of dollars. We did our duty. Then since the slump came, inasmuch as it was all borrowed money, it is wearing the life out of us to pay the interest. I have conversed with men from San Francisco and they acknowledge that this inter-mountain country has been hit hardest because of difficulty in getting our products to market. Our distance from market creates a discrimination—not that I am blaming this all upon the freight rates, which are costing us heavily, being in some cases almost prohibitive. But if we have to suffer in having to pay so much to get our goods to far-away markets, if we are suffering more than most other sections in this respect, all the more reason to avail ourselves of the great relief and remedy that will come from our purchasing and using every single solitary article that can be made at home. Now, I am not getting any commission for talking home manufactured goods; but I feel that it is clearly for the people's financial benefit that they should support home-made goods to the fullest possible extent.

CO-OPERATION ADVISED

I have been much delighted with the splendid work that President Alonzo A. Hinckley is doing in trying to arrange for a co-operation so that our alfalfa, which is quarantined and cannot be shipped away, can be utilized by the people who have livestock to feed. I would rejoice if we could mature our livestock, quit killing the lambs and the breeding cattle, and arrange to feed our stock here at home. I commend all the co-operative work in this direction that is going on, and hope that the farmer and the stockraiser can get together and use up all the hay and other products of the soil for the feeding of our own stock instead of carrying these products over for another year. As an illustration of the imposition in being obliged to pay so much for mutton, I ordered a couple of muttonchops—80 cents—during my recent trip east; and while I haven't such a fearfully large mouth, I honestly believe I could have taken one of them entire in just one bite, if I had cut the meat off the bone—two bites—forty cents a bite. On other occasions, I ordered and paid for chops which I am sure I could have got in my mouth without the least trouble in the world, in two bites to a chop—twenty cents a bite. Now, when you think of the stock-raiser having to sell his ewe lambs and getting about five cents a pound, it will be evident that the time has come when we need a little co-operation between the man who is running the restaurant, the man who is running the meat shop, the man who has hay and grain, and the man who has got mutton for sale. Perhaps some of us then could raise enough money so that instead of getting two bites for eighty cents, we might get three chops for a meal instead of two and get them for thirty or forty cents.

CHARITY ENJOINED

We want to try to get back to first principles, and to co-operate to carry out that second great commandment. The first is to love the Lord our God with all our heart, with all our might, mind and strength; and the second is like unto it, to love our neighbor as ourselves. Let us be charitable in these hard times. Let us not oppress our brothers who may be owing us a little, if we can possibly avoid it. Let us be hopeful and cheerful and happy. Why, we are in a magnificent condition in comparison with the time when the crickets were destroying the crops of our fathers and mothers. We are in a magnificent condition in comparison with the early days when people went around bare-footed, when they had one suit of clothes, when they had one pound of butter in a whole year, as some of us did in our houses. Let us study economy, let us be kind and charitable, and above all, let us serve God with full purpose of heart, be honest in our tithes and offerings, liberal in doing these things with our means that shall be for the benefit and uplift of God's kingdom. May the Lord bless us and pour out his Spirit abundantly upon us during this conference is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. PENROSE

I cannot express fully my gratitude to God and my brethren for the opportunity I have of being present on this great occasion. The Lord knows my heart and he knows my desires and intents, and he has abundantly blessed me, and I acknowledge his hand this morning in my presence in this congregation. During part of the time that has elapsed since our April Conference in this building, I have passed through a time of severe bodily affliction, something to which I haven't been very much accustomed during my eventful life, but I suffered very severely, and it seemed to me that I was approaching very closely to the gates that we sing about sometimes. President Grant came to me at my bedroom one morning and told me that I had to get up out of that bed and go down to the coast and spend a month there. Well, I almost laughed in his face at the idea, but he said I could go and he would see to my transportation all right, I need not worry about that, and to cut the story short I found it advisable for me to carry out good counsel. I made the effort and succeeded. I did as he requested me and stayed as long as I thought I ought to stay there, having been encouraged by him and President Ivins so to do, and returned when I thought the time had properly arrived for me to come home, and here I am this morning, revived in spirit as well as in body, and filled with gratitude and thanksgiving to God and my brethren and sisters who prayed for me.

FAITH THE BEGINNING OF OUR RELIGION.

I know that I had the faith and prayers of a great many of my friends and I thank them for the exercise of their faith, that faith which I believe and hope will abide always, as we have heard in the song. That is the beginning of our religion, faith, real faith in the true and living God. Faith in a false god does not amount to much. Still it is better to believe in some kind of a god or supreme being, to whom we feel we owe allegiance, than to have no faith at all. But true faith, living faith, which brings forth works, in the right God, the only living and true God, our Eternal Father, is a great thing, and it is the gift of God that is given to all his children in their very nature and being as his sons and daughters. That is the beginning of the religion that is called "Mormonism." "We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost." That is the first article of our belief as expressed by the Prophet Joseph in the reasons that he gave for the faith of the Latter-day Saints, and which we hold today and repeat in our Sunday Schools and in many of our gatherings.

What a blessed thing it is to have real faith and confidence in that Being who is the Author of our lives, from whom we received our organized spiritual existence. The elements as he has told us, are eternal. The elements of our bodies, as well as of our spirits, have no beginning. They always were, they always will be. It is a great consolation to know that fact, a fact that we are not beings of a moment, as it were, but we are eternal in our nature, that we are of eternal existence from an eternal parentage, and that we can approach our Father, and that our spirits can reach out to him and have communion with him, that we can realize our relationship to him, and his to us, and know that he is mindful of us as his offspring. For the spirit of man is the offspring of God. It is through the exercise of faith in my behalf by my friends, and my own faith, that I recovered from my sickness, and I was benefited greatly by the breezes of the ocean down by the beach near Los Angeles. The real revivification that has come to me has been by the spiritual life, the spirit that proceeds from our Father throughout the immensity of space, which, as he has told us, gives life to all things that have life, which is light also, as well as life, which is the Spirit of Christ in which we are told, he is in the sun and the moon and the stars and in the earth on which we stand, and by which God has told us he made the worlds through and by his Son, "and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."

The living faith that we have in that Being is our supporter under every circumstance. In the darkest hours we have spent in our mortal lives, or as a community, in the tribulations and trials through which the Church has passed, we could approach to him, the Author of our being, our Father, and feel, as Jesus of Nazareth did when he was in the flesh, that he is our Father and that we can come to him and he will lean to us. The Lord says: "Seek unto me saith the Lord, and I will draw near unto you." That is a great truth that the Latter-day Saints, I think, understand pretty well, or they are coming to understand. It is a reality and should be impressed upon our offspring, our children, our little children. Mothers and fathers should have this fact impressed upon them, that "while they have fathers of the flesh," as the Apostle Paul puts it, "and we gave them reverence, how much rather should we have reverence for him who is the Father of spirits and live." Teach your children real faith in a real God, a person, a being who exists and who understands all our feelings and our emotions, having passed through the experiences that we are now passing through and who is the very embodiment of everything that is right and true and good throughout the whole universe, all that is pure, all that is enlightening, all that is intelligent, all that is sympathetic, all that there is in life, and faith and truth are embodied in him, and he is the expression of these eternal verities to us. What a blessing it is today that we have that faith, that has been sung about here, which shall abide always.

Now these three, Paul taught, "faith, hope and charity shall abide." Faith must abide in our hearts under every circumstance in which we operate, individually and as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. And it is by that faith that the elders whom we have been hearing about go out into the mission world to proclaim the truth, to bear witness of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and to bear testimony that our Father has spoken in these last days, as he spoke many times anciently, and that he, who is the Father of Jesus Christ and who spake through him in the meridian of time, spake to and through the Prophet Joseph Smith in these last days and that his Son has been teaching, through that prophet and his successors, right along down, from the time when the boy Joseph offered that glorious prayer of faith in the Grove. He is our Father and Jesus Christ is his spokesman. All that has been revealed to the children of men from time to time has been done through that agency, that sonship, the voice of God to the Prophet Joseph, "This is my beloved Son, hear him," has been the policy of our Father from the beginning of the organization of this Church. It was through his Son and by his Son, that this earth was framed. It is through him and by him that all the revelations God has given to mankind, have come to the human family, and he is today at the head of this Church, representing the Father, and he can speak for the Father, and the Holy Ghost can speak for both, and bear witness of the truth in the hearts of the children of men.

MISSIONARY WORK AND MEANS.

One matter that President Grant has touched upon this morning is this work of our boys, and mothers and fathers, younger men and older men, who go out into the world without money and without price, so far as payment is concerned, spending their own money or their parents' money, and sometimes, I am afraid, spending it a little too lavishly. Boys that go out into the mission field ought not to go with the feeling that they have at their command large sums of money. There is no need for it. It is true that it costs a good deal more now to pay the expenses of a missionary abroad than it used to do in former times. In my early labors, in fact nearly all that I have done in foreign lands as a missionary, was done under the old law of no purse and no scrip. When I went out first as a boy I took nothing with me but the clothes I had on, except a bundle of tracts and a pair of pants and a shirt to use in baptizing. I had faith I could bring people into the Church, and I wanted something I could put on to baptize them in. I had use for those things and I did the work just as I have said. Indeed, all my ministry among the people of the world was literally "without purse or scrip." Now I do not say that this should be done now. I believe that as circumstances change, the Lord changes his commandments, to correspond therewith. As Jesus taught, a great many of you who went out in the world took "neither brass nor gold nor silver in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, nor two coats, "for the laborer is worthy of his hire," but afterwards he said: "When I sent you out without purse or scrip, did you lack anything? And they said, Nay, Lord," but now he said, "He that has no purse let him get one and he that hath no sword let him buy one." Circumstances had changed and so the word was changed. He didn't change, but the circumstances being changed the word of the Lord was different. So in these times conditions have changed very much from those times.

We find it necessary to have the boys go out two and two. Sometimes one of them is a poor boy comparatively, has no money, or very little, and the other has plenty. It is a rather difficult condition for the poor boy, but they have to lodge together and divide expenses, and this should be regulated by prudence, by economy, by wisdom, and the parents should see to it that their boys are not given too much money and that the others who are more poorly supplied are assisted so that they don't have too little money; but, generally speaking, I think our missionaries, in these latter days, are in many respects too well favored with money to spend. They are not sent out for the purpose of indulging in seeing the sights of the world, of going to motion picture shows, theatres, and other places of amusement, although occasionally something of that kind is all right, but that is not the object. What they are sent out for is to carry with them that abiding faith in God, and preach it to the people, that he is the same yesterday, today and forever, that he can be approached, that he has laws and commandments and ordinances which he requires people who desire to come to him, to attend to in the right way, and under proper authority. They go out for that purpose, and that should be their object, and be their main object. After they have been in the field for awhile, it gets to be so, even if it is not so in the beginning, some of our boys, who have done things that are wrong, who have not kept themselves as straight as they should be as the offspring of Latter-day Saints, after they have been in the mission field for a little while, begin to get their hearts softened, and in humility and faith in God they go and confess their wrong-doings to their presiding officers. When they can be forgiven, through full repentance and change of life, that blessing is extended to them. When they are still hardened in their hearts and prone to do wrong they have to be sent home, of course.

THE SPIRIT, NOT THE FLESH, SHOULD GOVERN.

Now, they should be taught from their childhood to preserve the purity of their lives and bodies, to act with purity of conduct always, and especially in their association with the other sex. This should be in the minds of our parents and they should instil it into the minds of their boys and girls. God is a being of purity, he is sacred and holy, and sacred and holy be his Name, and sacred and holy should we, his servants, be in all our conduct while we dwell upon the earth in the flesh, and we should learn the great lesson of the spirit governing the flesh instead of permitting the flesh to govern the spirit. These are simple truths that should be impressed upon the minds of our little children that they may grow up in that spirit and in that supreme faith in God which is at the foundation of our religion.

FAITH AND PURITY TO BE TAUGHT IN THE HOME.

This should be taught in the household, or privately, by the mothers to their girls, and the fathers to their boys, and they should grow up in that atmosphere. Let us see to that, my brethren and sisters, so that in our homes that faith shall prevail, faith in God, real true faith, coming from the soul, from the heart, in God our Eternal Father, and impress that upon our children, and they will grow up in the favor of the Lord and be ready to serve in his great latter-day work, and there is no work like it in the world. The privilege of a man holding the Holy Priesthood, of being an elder in the Church of Christ, ordained to preach the gospel, to administer baptism for the remission of sins, to lay his hands upon the baptized believer and say, "receive the Holy Ghost," that is a wonderful thing, but it is bestowed upon our missionary boys and if they grow up in the fear of the Lord, in full faith in him, wherever they go they will carry a power with them in the world that is not possessed by other men. We want it at home right here where we live. Every boy and every girl born to the Latter-day Saints should grow up in that spirit of purity.

Let us see to it, my brethren and sisters, that we carry this out, every ordinance and every counsel that comes from the mouth of God for our guidance and direction. This is what we should do. "Man," said Jesus Christ, "should not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." That is the celestial law. When we do that we are living the celestial law and we shall gain celestial glory if we continue to abide in it, for by abiding in these things we sanctify our nature, we make our bodies and our spirits serve God, and come in subjection to his law and his influence and Spirit, which proceed from him, and our bodies become so sanctified that they are capable of being quickened in the resurrection by a celestial glory, and if we do not live in accordance with such law we cannot gain a celestial glory. That should be in our minds, and we should teach it to our children.

OUR DUTY TO LOVE GOD AND SERVE HIM IN THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST.

Now, there is a law, as our President declared to us, that we shall love God with all our heart, and might, and mind, and strength. God told that to the people anciently. It is also in the Doctrine and Covenants. It was told to the first settlers in Zion: "The land of Zion" which is to be consecrated to be inhabited by the Saints where the great temple of God shall be reared, upon which "the glory of God shall rest." The Lord told the people there in the very beginning of their settlement to love him "with all their heart and soul and mind and strength; and, said he, 'in the name of Jesus Christ shalt thou serve him.' Don't forget that, my brethren. We serve God in the name of Jesus Christ. That is his full name. That is his name which was given anciently. You can read it in the Pearl of Great Price. That is the name given in the latter days. It is in nearly every revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants: "Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ;" we are to love God with all our hearts and serve him in the name of Jesus Christ. The ordinances we perform, all the prayers we offer, all that we do as servants of God in this Church, should be done in the name of Jesus Christ, for it is his Church, and he stands really at its head. Then we are told that we should love our neighbors, also, as ourselves. What a good thing it would be for Latter-day Saints, if we all carried out that law, would it not?

FINANCE CIRCULATION—PAY WHAT THOU OWEST.

This morning, when President Grant was illustrating so beautifully the circulation of the blood in the body of man, and the circulation in finance which he also touched upon, the thought I had in my mind was this: yes, if that blood is good, but it would not be much good if it wasn't circulating. If it remained there—sometimes a clot of blood comes into a part of the body and it brings about death instead of life, because it impedes the circulation. I was wondering if there wasn't a good deal of money owned by our people tucked away somewhere "against a rainy day." You know this is a threatening time, and we are very much perplexed, the banks are tied up, so to speak—they have money no doubt locked up somewhere, I think so, but that is their business. If we have, and we are owing anything to anybody; pay what thou owest, I believe it is a good injunction to the Latter-day Saints today, and if all people who owe money to any of their brethren, or to people that are not their brethren, or of their brethren, still unpaid, to pull that money out of that old stocking and out of that box locked up in a bank, and pay your debts. I believe it would make a great change financially among our people. There are many people in debt to their neighbors and they don't love their neighbors as they ought to love them. Take out that money and put it into circulation, and then it will accomplish much of what President Grant was referring to in that little story about Brother Farrell. I have heard him tell that before and it is very striking. It is circulation of the blood that feeds the body. It is circulation of money that feeds the body of finance, and we cannot get along as a community and be as great, wealthy, and strong as we would be if we would circulate what we have.

THE PRIESTHOOD ENTITLED TO INSPIRATION.

We have met here, my brethren and sisters, to worship God, the true and living God, and I feel that he will accept our offering. I feel that he is here by the presence of his Holy Spirit, that he is here in the presence of these good men who have been laboring in the various stakes of Zion and the wards of the bishoprics, and in the mission fields. In their personality, there is the spirit and power of God and authority in the holy Priesthood to minister in the name of the Lord. What a great influential body there is here today in this congregation! I realize it, I feel it. I believe in it with all my heart, and I know that this power that God has revealed in the latter days and which is sent down out of heaven upon the earth for the salvation of mankind is a reality, and we, all of us, can have it to the extent of the authority to which we are ordained. Every man ordained to any office in this Priesthood is entitled to the spirit and power of that office, and he can have it if he will live in accordance with that which it teaches, if he will live in accordance with the inspiration that it brings, for the Spirit of God whispers to the soul of man, and he can know the "still small voice." It doesn't come always in great manifestations.

REMEMBER THE LORD BOTH IN JOY AND SORROW.

I am pleased when people have definite manifestations, no matter how material they seem to be. I believe there is a good deal of thinking on these things in the world, and sometimes in the Church. Imagination goes a great way, sometimes, but there is a link between every man ordained to the Priesthood and his God, and that link ought not to be sundered, it ought not to be weakened. We should live in harmony, in union, in communion, with him who is our living Head, and he will not forsake us either in days of trouble or pain or sickness or anything else. By the way, we ought not to leave our prayers and our devotions to the time of trouble and of sickness and difficulty, but go to the Lord when we are happy, when our souls are full of joy and gladness, for he loves a cheerful countenance. He does not like very loud, noisy laughter—he says that is sin, but he likes to see a "cheerful countenance," when people come to worship him in the beauty of holiness, with a smile upon their faces and gladness in their hearts. Let us not forget the Lord when we are glad, when we are happy, and go to him and with all our hearts thank and praise his holy name for the mercies we enjoy, for we are a blessed people.

WE ARE WONDERFULLY BLESSED AS A PEOPLE.

Separate and apart from all these blessings that pertain to the affairs of the holy Priesthood and to the congregations of the Saints when they meet to partake of the sacrament and to worship God, as a community, we are blessed wonderfully when we come to compare our conditions to that condition which we had in the days referred to by President Grant. I couldn't help thinking, this morning, about a little thing that occurred in the ward that I belonged to once. I shan't tell where it was. And that was in those days of scarcity; when we wanted to have a dance. The boys usually contributed some tallow candles to be placed on the ward house walls for lights. One evening some of the girls took the notion that they ought to be up with "outside" customs which required waxed floors. So they used some of the candles and "waxed" the floor with tallow, and you can guess what was the condition some of the girls were in when they slipped down on the floor with their nice best dresses on. But this illustrates the kind of straits to which we were put at that time, and those early days are right before my mind, and I can contrast them with the conditions which surround us at present. Here we are blessed of the Lord financially, temporally; we have better homes, we have better clothes—I don't say that they are better than the home-made, mind you; I endorse what Brother Grant has said about home manufacture—and we are blessed very abundantly, and should be filled with gratitude for these blessings, these good things we have. The Saints are able to come up here from distant parts now with ease and comfort. In old times when I left home to come here a long distance, I came with an ox-team or sometimes on "Shanks' pony," and I rejoiced when I got here. But today our people are blessed with means of transportation which are so far ahead of the old ways that we should be filled with thanksgiving. Let us praise the Lord in our hearts and in our works, for that is the way to praise him. Our faith should be exhibited in our works. What there is to do in our accepted fields of labor at home or abroad should be done with all our minds and might and strength. "What thy hand doeth today," said the old preacher "do it with thy might." Yes, put your soul into your work, whatever it is, brethren and sisters, members of auxiliary societies as well as members of the different quorums of the holy Priesthood, and be willing and obedient, because it is the willing as well as obedient that are to get the fruits of the land.

DETERMINE TO SERVE GOD AND KEEP HIS COMMANDMENTS.

Now let us who are here together this morning make up our minds when we go back to our fields of labor, or respective abodes, to feel that we will serve our Father, that we will keep his commandments, that we will walk in his ways, that we will unite with our brethren, that we will forgive our friends of their trespasses as we hope to be forgiven of ours, and that we will love the Lord and devote ourselves with all our might, mind and strength, and all the powers that we have and the means that come into our hands, to the building up of this Latter-day kingdom. It is the greatest thing on earth, brethren and sisters. It is the grandest thing that ever has graced this globe, and it will abide and continue, and will not perish or fall away, neither will it be trampled under foot, neither will it be overcome by the evil power. It will abide and continue to grow and increase and spread forth and some of us will live to see it, and if we don't live in the flesh, we will live out of the flesh, and we will learn about it.

CROWNED WITH GLORY, IMMORTALITY, AND ETERNAL LIVES.

President Grant spoke this morning about some of our good, faithful brethren passing away. They are not lost to this Church. They have gone where they ought to be. They will labor there as well as they labored here, in a different capacity perhaps, but they will labor for this same great cause and all the good men who depart from us and go behind the veil are engaged and organized, and are in the Latter-day work, and they will add to our strength, if we will live so that they can come nigh unto us, and the angels of God will be round about us, and our Father will administer unto us, and the power of his Spirit will increase in our souls, if we continue in well-doing to labor with all our mind, to build up this great kingdom on the earth. Christ is and will be at its head. He will be King of kings and Lord of lords, and every man who has labored with him and for him in this holy ministry will be crowned with glory and immortality and "eternal lives." That means more than life, more than mere existence, it means perpetual increase of posterity, worlds without end, and these blessings shall be ours if we will prove faithful to that which we have received of the Lord, and this is what we are for in the Church, every one of us, that is our duty, that is what we are on the earth for, to build up this Latter-day kingdom, to lead the inhabitants of the earth up to God, to bring them nearer to him so that they will be obedient in their hearts and be willing to obey his commandments and walk in his ways and be prepared for the glorious future that lies before them.

BLESSINGS AND COUNSEL FOR THE LABORING AUTHORITIES.

God bless you my brethren who are laboring in this great cause, presidents of stakes and counselors, bishops and counselors, teachers who visit among the people, carry with you a good spirit of comfort and peace, and joy, into the hearts of the Saints. Encourage all good things, encourage all people in well doing. Do not be too severe in censure but when it is necessary let it come from the proper source, from the proper authority, and when things are not moving right, go to the proper authority. Don't jump over the heads of your bishops to presidents of stakes with little matters which ought not to come up to the presidency, but talk to the brethren where you are, and give them a chance to exercise their wisdom and judgment and discretion and the power of their priesthood, and let us labor together in union and concord and love, forgiving one another of our faults, overlooking what we can properly overlook, not being too severe, against the weak and faulty but act so that we will not practice nor encourage evil but act so as to make the Saints feel that we ourselves are devoted to the Lord, our eternal Father, as his sons and daughters, and that we are pledged to his service as long as we live on the earth in the flesh and then forever and ever. Amen.

ELDER JOHN M. KNIGHT

(President of the Western States Mission.)

My brethren and sisters, I am very grateful for the privilege afforded me of bearing my testimony on this occasion. As President Grant was talking, I couldn't help but think of the words of one of our hymns: "We are not ashamed to own our Lord, and worship him on earth. We love to learn his holy word, and know what souls are worth."

I am very happy in having the privilege of laboring in the ministry and of declaring the gospel of repentance to the people of the world. I am very happy that we have no compromise to make with them; that we are not ashamed of the message that we have to deliver to the people of the earth, that we really believe, with all our heart and soul, in the divine mission of Jesus Christ, that we have an abiding faith in him and in his ministry; that he was in reality the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world, and that by and through him salvation and redemption shall come to all of God's children who are upon the earth. We are told in the scriptures that he that is ashamed of the Master, the Master would be ashamed of him. "Whosoever, therefore, shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." (Mark 8:38.)

And I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, that we are not ashamed of our God and of Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of the world. I believe that the greatest mission the Latter-day Saints have is to proclaim that truth to the children of men here upon the earth.

In the Western States mission we have been very fortunate this year in reaching a great many people who are interested in our message. They have listened to the testimony of the elders of Israel. The elders have taught unto them the plan of salvation. Hundreds have embraced the gospel. Many more than in years previous. We are happy in our work. We are glad to be engaged in its labor.

I am glad that President Grant has referred to the fact that many of our young men who are laboring in the mission fields have been encouraged by people at home to believe that eighteen months, or thereabouts, constituted a full mission. Their friends at home have written and said that it was about time they returned. Some of the elders have reported to me that their friends have advised that, others having returned in so short a period, they too should return to their homes, and I am glad that President Grant has called this to the attention of the Latter-day Saints. Many of our young men are better prepared to preach at the expiration of eighteen months and do a great deal more good than they could prior to this time, and the last few months of their mission is of more worth to the cause than perhaps the first year of their experience. I rejoice that this word has gone forth to the Latter-day Saints, that our boys should remain in the service of the Master at least two years and from that to thirty months or three years, as the case may be. I was very happy to hear one of the presidents of the stakes say yesterday that a certain individual had come to him and asked that his son might be released, and wanted him to write a letter to that effect, and he said: "If you want the letter written, you would better write it yourself." If they would make a little extra effort the boy could remain and fill his mission. Our forces are very much depleted, my brethren and sisters. Many a young man has returned home, when I have felt in my heart that it was not a good thing for the young man, it was not a good thing for the cause; and with a little extra effort released missionaries could have remained and accomplished their labors and brought souls to a knowledge of the truth.

I pray that the blessings of our Father may attend the Latter-day Saints, that they may have power to keep the commandments of God, and those who have sons and daughters laboring in the mission field, that the way may be opened and means provided that they can keep them there until they have accomplished a full and complete mission.

May God help us to keep his commandments, all our days, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Choir and congregation sang, "High on the mountain top," and the closing prayer was offered by Elder Albert Olsen, Second Counselor in the Presidency of the Bighorn stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION

At 2 o'clock President Heber J. Grant stated to the large assembly that the choir and congregation would sing the hymn, "O ye mountains high."

This was done with spirit, and the opening prayer was offered by Elder Taylor Nelson, President of Oneida stake of Zion.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah."

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

I shall read, my brethren and sisters, from the seventeenth chapter of Isaiah, the twelfth verse:

Woe to the multitude of many people, which make a noise like the noise of the seas; and to the rushing of nations, that make a rushing like the rushing of mighty waters.

The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters; but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing before the whirlwind.

THE STORY OF THE IMPERIAL VALLEY.

It was not until recent years that men realized that there existed, in the extreme south-eastern part of California, and extending across the border line south into Mexico, a valley which, by the application of the intelligence of man, could be converted into a veritable empire, where before had existed only a desert waste. For ages it had lain there, a sun baked, unproductive land, avoided by the traveler, dreaded as a place where death from thirst awaited the unfortunate who might be caught in its toils.

The great Colorado river flowed past it, but its life-giving current had never been diverted that the thirsty land might drink and live.

Experienced engineers were called in for consultation, a great irrigation system was planned and finally developed, with the result that the Imperial Valley became one of the most productive in all our land, providing homes for many people.

Then, one day, word was flashed to the people of the valley which threw them into a condition of consternation and confusion. The head gates which controlled the waters of the great river had given way, at the point of diversion, and a mighty flood was pouring into the basin of the extinct Salton Sea. This basin once filled, the flood would sweep on, and the Imperial Valley would become, what in the remote past it had been, the bottom of a sea.

What was to be done to avert this disaster? The people did not abandon their homes and flee in confusion and terror, but with united front set themselves to the task of checking the on-rushing flood, and confining the raging waters to their proper channel. The Government, when appealed to, cheerfully responded, the railroads extended every aid in the effort put forth, again the engineers were called in, and as a result of the effort of these combined forces the flood was staid, the development of the valley continued, and the people, whose very existence had been threatened, remained in undisputed possession of their homes. It was from this incident that Harold Bell Wright obtained the material for his very interesting story, "The Winning of Barbara Worth."

ITS APPLICATION.

I have related this story because it appears to be applicable to the remarks which I desire, with the help of the Lord, to make. One hundred years ago the world was a barren waste so far as correct knowledge of God was concerned. His personality, his attributes, his purposes and hand-dealings with the children of men, both as they apply to the past, the present and the future, were misunderstood. The river of understanding had always flowed by, but no one appeared to realize that the thirsty earth was perishing for want of the life-giving influence of its current, until through the wisdom of an inspired engineer the waters of the river were diverted, and by the life-giving influence which flows from God, through the channel of his Priesthood, the desert waste began again to produce, and for nearly a century the Lord of the Vineyard has garnered much good fruit, and the people of the valley have dwelt in security and peace.

HAVE THE PEOPLE BECOME CARELESS IN THEIR FANCIED SECURITY?

In the meantime other streams have found their way into the channel of the river, streams coming from the summits of the storm swept peaks above, bearing in their current silt, and boulders, and up-rooted trees, which have converted the once quietly flowing current into a turbulent torrent, which is beating against the diversion dam with well nigh resistless fury. Have the people of the valley become careless and indifferent in their fancied security? Do they appreciate the fact that even cement will gradually wear away, and must be replaced? Do they realize that the abutments of the diversion dam are trembling under the pressure of the flood, and that if they once give way this great, turbulent river of humanity will rush in and engulf them? Let us see.

Since my earliest recollection I have heard the men who have been chosen to direct the affairs of the Church and give counsel to its members testify that these valleys of the mountains, to which the Lord brought the people under the leadership of his servant and prophet, Brigham Young, was a choice land. A land which had been held in reserve, that an ensign might be raised here to which modern Israel would be gathered. That it was our heritage and should never be permitted to pass from our hands into the possession of strangers. That we should be, as far as possible, an independent, self-supporting people, and above all else that we should keep ourselves clean and unspotted from the sins of the world, and free from the bondage of debt.

A WARNING VOICE.

I well remember a time when, in the county of the state where I was, for a number of years, assessor and collector, there was not a home or farm on which there was a mortgage, nor a dollar of bonded indebtedness. At the October conference, ten years ago, speaking from this pulpit, President Joseph F. Smith said:

"If there is anyone here who is in debt, I would advise that when he goes home, and when I go home, too, we will begin with a determination that we will pay our debts, and meet all of our obligations just as quickly as the Lord will enable us to do it. If there is anyone here who is intending to go into debt for speculation I would advise him to hesitate, pray over it, carefully consider it before he obligates himself by borrowing money, and going into debt. In other words keep out of debt. That means me as well as everyone else."

THE BURDEN OF THE GREAT WAR.

I know of no way by which proper conclusions may be reached except by comparison. Let us see what our condition today as it applies to this question is, as compared with ten years ago.

We have only recently, as you know, emerged from a great world war, tremendously expensive, more so than any other war has been, a war, the direct cost of which amounts, according to the most conservative figures at my disposal, to two hundred billions of dollars, an amount almost beyond the conception of the human mind. There should be added to this, for material damage wrought, and for the loss in productive power of nine millions of men who have been killed and wounded, so that they are permanently disqualified for useful labor, another fifty billions of dollars at the least, so that the war has cost the world at least two hundred and fifty billions of dollars.

This burden, of course, does not fall directly upon us. Still we are obliged to share it. We cannot deny the fact that whatever obligation has come to the world, as a result of the war, we are more or less affected by it. Our own national debt amounts to twenty-four billions of dollars, an amount, though small by comparison, is still beyond our ordinary comprehension. The interest on this amount is about one billion of dollars. Of this debt, we, as citizens of the United States, must bear our proportionate part.

OUR LOCAL FINANCIAL CONDITION.

Of more direct interest to us, because we alone are responsible for it, is the fact that our state, county and municipal indebtedness, including corporation bonds, realty mortgages, bank loans and discounts, as near as I have been able to obtain them, and I think the figures are under rather than above the facts, amount to more than one hundred and seventy-three million seven hundred and twenty-one thousand dollars. This amount the people of the state must pay. Calculating the interest at seven per cent, which I regard as conservative, they must pay twelve million, one hundred and forty thousand dollars every year in interest, and besides that we know that the debt itself must be ultimately redeemed.

THE WARNING VOICE UNHEEDED.

The value of Utah farm lands and improvements, as reported by the United States Census Bureau for 1920, is eighty-four million five hundred seventy-eight thousand one hundred and ninety dollars. That is valuing these farms at four times as much as they were valued at ten years ago, at the time the conference to which I have referred was held. These farms are mortgaged today for twenty-four million, three hundred thirty-four thousand, six hundred thirty-six dollars, according to government reports which have been furnished me from Washington. Ten years ago these same farms were mortgaged for four million, five hundred sixty-four thousand, one hundred seventy-five dollars.

Now if it is true that our farms have increased in value four hundred per cent during the past ten years, the condition is not so alarming, but if it is a fact that the value of our farms has depreciated in proportion as other securities have during the past three years, they are mortgaged for far more than their real value.

It appears, then, that the voice of the servant of the Lord fell upon deaf ears, so far as the people at large are concerned. There were some, it is true, who saw the coming of the flood and prepared to meet it.

The Lord has said that preceding the coming of the Son of man, in the dispensation in which we live, conditions would be as they were in the days of Noah. He warned the people of coming disaster, pleaded with them to enter into the ark with him, and be saved, but they laughed him to scorn, and refused to prepare, by repentance from their wickedness, for the deluge which he declared would come.

WHERE THE BONDAGE OF DEBT FALLS.

I know of no other factor which has had such potent influence, in the dissolution of nations which have flourished and passed away, as has the bondage of debt. When nations become debtors the only means of providing revenue with which to meet their obligations is by taxation. This burden falls heaviest upon the masses, the common people, who are the producers of the indispensable necessities of life.

The men who till the soil, who tend the flocks and herds, who dig from the earth the treasures which are hidden there, the men who take the raw materials which are provided by nature and convert them into the things which man requires for his convenience and comfort, who are real producers, they are the people who do the world's work, fight the world's battles, and pay the world's taxes.

I know there are those who will not agree with me in this statement, and I shall not discuss it with them at this time, only to say that I have given the subject as careful study as I am capable of doing, and have concluded that commerce, the professions, and the great industrial systems of our country find means by which the burden of taxation may be shifted until in the last analysis it falls heaviest on the classes to which I have referred.

AVOID MORTGAGING THE HOME.

My remarks are directed more particularly to my brethren who are engaged in agricultural pursuits. Israel has always been an agricultural and pastoral people. We are told that about fifty millions of dollars of our securities are now in the possession of the Federal Reserve Bank. The past we cannot well remedy, but we can, so far as the future is concerned, profit by its experiences. I feel that every mother of a family is entitled to a home, to shelter her and her children, upon which there is no mortgage, and I plead with my brethren to keep mortgages from their farms and homes so far as it is possible.

WHAT CAUSED THE DISRUPTION OF THE KINGDOM OF ISRAEL?

It was the burden of debt, and excessive taxation which accompanies it that caused the disruption of the great kingdom of Israel. At the death of Solomon, during whose reign Israel rose to the zenith of her power and glory, his son Rehoboam succeeded to the throne of David. And the people came up and said to him, Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore make thou the grievous service of thy father, and the heavy yoke which he put upon us lighter, and we will serve thee. The old men of the kingdom, men of experience, who were in sympathy with the people who made the petition, advised the young king to accede to this demand, but the young men, the companions of his youth, said, No; these old men are too conservative, they are not progressive, the glory and prestige of our court must be maintained, regardless of cost, these people are the subjects of the king; if they persist, we will go against them with our organized forces, and will subject them to the discipline of the state.

The result was that when the people returned for an answer to their appeal the king said: Whereas, my father placed heavy burdens upon you, I will make them heavier; if he made your yoke heavy I will add to your yoke, my little finger shall be thicker than my father's loin.

It was the fatal word which ruined the kingdom, for the people with one voice cried out, To your tents, O Israel, now look to thine own house, David. From that moment the decadence of Israel began.

ENSLAVEMENT OF THE PEOPLE CAUSED BY THE BONDAGE OF DEBT

I know of no better example of the inevitable consequence which follows the bondage of debt, than that recorded in Genesis, and it is the first example, so far as I am aware, where monopoly of the necessities of life resulted in the enslavement of the people.

AN EXAMPLE FROM THE SCRIPTURES.

There had been seven years of bounteous harvest in Egypt, during which time the people had done, as they always do, as we have done, in time of plenty, lived extravagantly, believing that prosperity would continue, and had neglected to make provision for changed conditions which were to come. There were far seeing men, as there always are, who were ready to take advantage of the knowledge which they possessed, and become the creditors of the people. Permit me to read:

And there was no bread in all the land; for the famine was very sore, so that the land of Egypt, and all the land of Canaan fainted by reason of the famine.

And Joseph gathered up all the money that was found in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, for the corn which they bought, and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house.

And when money failed in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came unto Joseph and said, Give us bread: for why should we die in thy presence? for the money faileth.

And Joseph said, Give your cattle; and I will give you for your cattle if money fail.

And they brought their cattle unto Joseph, and Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for the flocks, and for the cattle of the herds, and for the asses, and he fed them with bread for all their cattle for that year.

When that year was ended, they came to him the second year, and said unto him: We will not hide it from my Lord how that our money is spent; my Lord also hath our herds of cattle; there is naught left in the sight of my Lord but our bodies and our lands.

Wherefore shall we die before thine eyes, both we and our land? Buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh, and give us seed that we may live and not die, that the land be not desolate.

And Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh for the Egyptians sold every man his field, because the famine prevailed over them; so the land became Pharaoh's.

* * *

Then Joseph said unto the people: Behold I have bought you this day and your land for Pharaoh, lo here is seed for you, and ye shall sow the land. And it shall come to pass in the increase, that ye shall give the fifth part unto Pharaoh, and four parts shall be your own, for seed of the field, and for food and for them of your households, and for food for your little ones.

From that day until the present the common people of Egypt, the Fellahin, have tilled the soil as the tenants of royalty, the priests, and the military class, their masters.

It will be urged, and I admit the truth of the contention, that by the conservation of the resources of the country the lives of the people were saved, but how much better it would have been had these people been warned in advance, and being governed by the warning, conserved their own resources, instead of permitting them to pass into the hands of those who produced nothing, and then buying back, at exorbitant prices, that which they themselves had brought forth, paying for it with their own persons, their lives, and liberty.

IMPORTANCE OF THE OWNERSHIP OF LAND, DANGER OF BORROWING.

The great importance attached to this condition of debt, and the ownership of land upon which people live, is illustrated in the law given by the Lord, for the government of ancient Israel. Under this law it was impossible to transfer the title to land from the original owner, who had received it as a heritage, to the permanent possession of another. It might pass temporarily into the hands of strangers, but at the lapse of fifty years, when the great jubilee came, amid rejoicing and thanksgiving, the land reverted to the original owner, or his heirs, and another opportunity was given for independent existence. We have no such guarantee, once our heritage passes from us, it can only be recovered by infinite toil, and too often, not at all.

I do not wish to be understood to mean, by my remarks, that debt should never be incurred. That no circumstance can justify the borrowing of money, but I do say without hesitation that it is better never to be in debt, that it would be better never to borrow money, and I wish to warn my brethren and sisters of the danger which confronts us because of the great burden of debt which we are saddling upon our backs, and the backs of our children, a burden under which I fear they will faint, and fall by the way.

HOW THE PREVAILING CONDITION CAN BE MODIFIED.

There is no doubt in my mind that this condition can be greatly modified, if not entirely relieved, by returning to the fundamental principles of economy and simplicity of life which characterized the early-day administration of the affairs of both the State and the Church. I do not mean by this that we are to return to the methods employed by our fathers, but that we cease the unnecessary expenditure of money, as it applies to our every-day life. That we think less of pleasure, and more of the development of the work of the Lord. That we live within our means, and cease the frantic struggle for riches, which is taking hold upon us like the tentacles of an octopus.

Paul, writing to Timothy and foreseeing the conditions which would exist in the day in which we live, said: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disbedi-ent to parents, unthankful, unholy, highminded, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God—from such turn away.

PERTINENT QUESTIONS FOR THE PEOPLE TO ANSWER.

I have recently asked myself the questions: Are we gravitating toward this condition? Have we become pleasure seekers to the exclusion of our duty to the Church? Do automobiles, resorts, moving pictures and other sources of pleasure absorb our minds until we forget the obligation we are under to God, and our brethren and sisters in the Church? Do we needlessly waste money in the gratification of our love for pleasure and excitement, while our brethren are struggling in poverty and want? I leave you to answer the question.

Do not understand me to advocate that people are not entitled to, and should not have, wholesome legitimate recreation and amusement, I mean no such thing. It is the excess in these things to which I refer, and particularly to amusements the character of which are calculated to lead people away from the fundamentals of morality and virtue.

CONCLUSIONS BASED ON THE WORD OF THE LORD IN THE BOOK OF MORMON.

I suppose I shall be accused of being a pessimist, I suppose men will say that I am knocking business, and taking a gloomy view of the present, and the future which is before us. That I should say to you that times are good, that business is rushing, that better times are coming, that we should eat, drink and be merry, for the future is laden only with hope. Again let me read, briefly, from the word of the Lord, for it is upon his word that my conclusions are based. I read from the Book of Mormon:

O the wise, and the learned, and the rich, that are puffed up in the pride of their hearts, and all those who preach false doctrines, and all those who commit whoredoms, and pervert the right way of the Lord, wo, wo, wo be unto them, saith the Lord God Almighty, for they shall be thrust down to hell.

Wo unto them that turn aside the just for a thing of naught and revile against that which is good, and say, That is of no worth; for the day shall come that the Lord God will speedily visit the inhabitants of the earth; and in that day that they are fully ripe in iniquity, they shall perish.

But behold, if the inhabitants of the earth shall repent of their wickedness and abominations, they shall not be destroyed, saith the Lord of Hosts. * * *

For the kingdom of the devil must shake, and they which belong to it must needs be stirred up unto repentance, or the devil will grasp them with his everlasting chains, and they be stirred up to anger, and perish.

For behold, at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger against that which is good.

And others he will pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell.

And behold, others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell, and he sayeth unto them: I am no devil, for there is none —and thus he whispereth in their ears, until he grasp them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance. * * *

Therefore, wo be unto him that is at ease in Zion!

Wo be unto him that crieth, all is well! Yea, wo be unto him that hearkeneth unto the precepts of men, and denieth the power of God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost! * * * And in fine, wo unto all those who tremble, and are angry because of the truth of God!

LET US NOT BE DECEIVED, BUT FAITHFULLY DISCHARGE OUR DUTIES.

I trust, my brethren and sisters, that this scripture has no application to us; that we are not being deceived in the thought that all is well in Zion; that the Lord will take care of his work without effort on our part; that it is no longer necessary that we pray to the Lord, and put our trust in him, as our fathers have done, that we may with safety relapse into a condition of fancied security, in the belief that Satan, the enemy of God, and all that is good is no longer striving for the mastery; that our tithes and offerings are no longer necessary in the development of the work of the Lord; but let us rather ponder the words of Malachi, which were quoted by Moroni to Joseph Smith, and, returning to the Lord in faith and works, have the assurance that he will return to us, and opening the windows of heaven pour out blessings upon us until there will not be room to contain them.

May the Lord help us all to comprehend the past, and profit by the lessons which it teaches, have understanding of the present, and faithfully discharge the responsibilities which devolve upon us, that we may be prepared for the great future which is before us, is my humble prayer.

A PRAYER FOR THE WATCHMEN ON THE TOWERS OF ZION.

That my brethren who are the presidents of stakes, bishops of wards, and who preside over the auxiliary organizations of the Church, may all be awake to the fact that the flood of the great river, made filthy with the sins of the world, is beating upon the head gates of the Church, and realizing the danger, stand as watchmen upon the towers of Zion should stand, watchful and unafraid, that the gates may be kept strong and firm, and the muddy waters be confined to their proper channel, is my hope and prayer, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

Sister J. P. Shaw sang a solo, "Come, ye blessed of my Father."

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

Brothers and sisters, I ask an interest in your faith and sympathy while I stand before you. We are gathered here, a great body of Latter-day Saints, to worship God the Father and Jesus Christ the Son, and to lift up our voices in thanksgiving and praise for the many blessings which we enjoy—to lift up our voices by prayer and testimony and exhortation and the voice of melody.

SACRIFICE AND BURNT OFFERINGS TYPICAL OF THE ATONEMENT OF CHRIST.

The Lord Jesus Christ has wrought out for us a great salvation by the shedding of blood. The atonement is many times referred to in the holy scriptures of both the Old and the New Testament; and, in fact, in the very beginning this important matter was emphasized. When Adam and Eve were thrust out of the Garden of Eden the Lord commanded them to worship him and to offer the firstlings of their flock upon an altar of sacrifice. Adam was obedient to the commandment. Later an angel appeared to him and asked him why he was offering sacrifice, and he answered and said: "I know not, only that the Lord commanded it." And then it was that the angel explained the matter in very striking language. This is what he said, as recorded in the Pearl of Great Price:

"This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten Son of the Father, which is full of grace and truth. Wherefore thou shalt do all that thou doest in the name of the Son, and thou shalt repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forever."

Isaac was offered upon an altar of sacrifice by his father Abraham, and it seems that this was intended to test his faith and obedience. He readily responded, but the Lord would not suffer him to lay his hand upon the boy. Surely this offering of Abraham was typical of the great offering made by God himself, for it is said in the record that, God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

Let me remind you that there was a deep significance in the burnt offerings of the children of Israel in the Wilderness and in Palestine, because it was through these burnt offerings that the children of Israel obtained forgiveness of their sins, for the burnt offerings were typical of the great atonement that would be made by the Lamb of God in later years.

Isaiah, the Prophet, that mighty man of ancient times, speaks of the atonement in a very beautiful and expressive manner. Listen to the language of the Seer:

"But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

"All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. . . .

"He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generations? for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken. . . .

"He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities.

"Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors."

And the subject is also referred to in the book of Revelation, in chapter five, where reference is made to the Savior of the world:

"And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."

In the meridian of time the Lord required of his people a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and he introduced the sacrament saying:

"And the Lord took the bread and gave thanks and blessed it, and he gave unto them saying: This is my body which is given for you. This do in remembrance of me."

"Likewise also the cup after supper, saying:

"This cup is the new testament in my blood which is shed for you."

REQUIREMENTS OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS CONCERNING THE ATONEMENT.

And so, my brethren and sisters, it is in the dispensation of the fulness of times, for the Lord requires of us a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and the sacrament, which is regarded by the Church as a most holy ordinance, is again restored to the people of God. We are commanded to come together often and partake of the sacrament, in remembrance of him, of his suffering and death. Oh, how important is this subject. Again in one of the great revelations of the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and to the people of the Church, the Lord refers to this subject in a most touching and beautiful manner. Give ear, brethren and sisters, to these words which were uttered by revelation, in 1831:

"Hearken, O ye people of my Church to whom the kingdom has been given. Hearken ye and give ear to him who laid the foundations of the earth; who made the heavens and all the hosts thereof, and by whom all things were made which live and move and have their being. And again I say, hearken unto my voice, lest death shall overtake you in an hour when you think not, and summer shall be past and the harvest ended and your souls not saved. Listen to him who is the advocate with the Father, who is pleading your cause before him, saying: Father behold the sufferings and death of him who did no sin in whom thou wast well pleased. Behold the blood of thy Son which was shed, the blood of him whom thou gavest that thyself might be glorified. Wherefore, Father, spare these my brethren that believe on my name, that they may come unto me and have everlasting life."

THE ATONEMENT OF CHRIST THE SUPREME SACRIFICE.

These passages which I have read, and many more that occur in the Holy Scriptures, give us to understand that the atonement made upon Mount Calvary was the supreme sacrifice ever made in all the world. Oh, the height and the depth of divine love, the love of God for his children here upon the earth! We are put under an obligation that we never can repay in this life or in the life to come. The greatness of this sacrifice cannot be measured, cannot be fully understood by mortal man; but, nevertheless, we can get the benefit of it by faith and obedience to the commandments of God. That is what he requires, and I was going to say how simple it is to keep the commandments of God, and yet it may not be so simple, and it may not be so easy, because Satan very well knows the mark of our high calling, and he is seeking continually to lead away the Saints of God from the path of rectitude and from the path of life, but after all, my brethren and sisters, through faith and prayer and diligence, we will surely prevail.

May the Lord bless us to that end, may he give us a greater and a wider conception of the atonement wrought out by his beloved Son, I humbly ask it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I am indeed in a frame of mind this afternoon that I desire the faith and prayers of this vast congregation; that the Lord will bless me that I may say such things as will be profitable to all.

MISSION CONDITIONS IN EUROPE.

This is the first time I have had the privilege of being with you for more than two years, and during that time I have visited the countries of Europe where the Latter-day Saints have established missions. During my absence there has not been much change in conditions in the European field except that the way has again been opened in some nations for the elders from America to enter and preach the gospel. The same opposition exists in most countries to the teaching of the truth by our missionaries, but we have not been molested or seriously hampered in any place. Quite a change has occurred in Germany, in that our missionaries are made welcome, our congregations are so large that the meeting places are taxed to their capacity, and in some of the cities we have two congregations. Most of the work in Germany is being accomplished by local elders, about one hundred in number, with not to exceed six missionaries from America. Norway, Sweden and Denmark have limited the number of missionaries allowed to enter there. Norway has only one missionary from home, at the present time, and no more are permitted to enter. Prest. August Schow has labored there with the assistance of a few local men during the past two years. During the first year I was in Great Britain, our missionary force consisted of twelve elders from home, three sisters and a few good local men who rendered assistance. Tracting and other work of that kind was done by women in many places under the presidency of Elder George F. Richards, and that continued till about a year ago, when elders began to arrive from Zion, and today there are over one hundred missionaries from this land laboring in the British Isles. Some of the local missionaries were excellent men, and rendered splendid service.

All of the elders were withdrawn from South Africa, many of them serving long-term missions. President Nicholas G. Smith and his family, consisting of a wife and three sons, remained there nearly eight years, and were succeeded about eight months ago by President J. Wyley Sessions who took with him his wife and two children. South Africa has opened her doors to our missionaries, and others will be sent now as rapidly as possible to continue the work in that land.

Holland is a fruitful field and Switzerland has many excellent branches of the Church. Our difficulty is that millions of people in all parts of the world have been deceived and made to believe that we are a wicked people. Evil stories have been circulated about us and those falsehoods have gained ground and have been given credence by many intelligent men and women. The adversary has sown the seeds of suspicion and hatred against the Church, and but for that reason our missionaries would be made welcome in every land.

PREJUDICES AGAINST OUR MESSAGE TO THE WORLD SOMEWHAT ALLAYED.

We are teaching the same gospel that the Savior taught, and the same influences that opposed him and his associates is potent in the world today. The adversary is determined that the gospel of Jesus Christ shall not be taught in its purity. We have the truth, and he knows that we have it, and he knows that millions of our Father's children would accept it gladly if they could hear it with unprejudiced minds.

If we have the opportunity to visit with intelligent men and women with sufficient time to explain our mission in the world, prejudice that has existed in their minds is dissipated and they are more friendly to the truth. The missionaries of this Church have gone into those lands to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ as it is recorded in the Holy Scriptures. They have desired to bestow a blessing on the people, and have endeavored to inspire hope, courage, and faith in the children of our heavenly Father, whose minds have been darkened because of the absence of the gospel in its purity.

The prejudice that has existed against us in the past has in large measure been dissipated and hundreds and thousands of men and women have been made aware of the labor we are performing, but there still remains a feeling, and a determination, on the part of the leaders of some of the churches of the world, to prevent, if possible, the promulgation of the gospel of our Lord, as revealed in this latter day. Our problem is to find a way whereby we may present to all the people the gospel of our Lord. It is our problem, and with divine assistance we will find a way to solve it. It is incumbent upon us to ascertain if there is not some means whereby we may be able to do more than we have already done, if we would satisfy the requirements of our heavenly Father.

FAMINE IN THE WORLD FOR THE WORD OF GOD.

I congratulate the Latter-day Saints who have sons in the mission field. I have met many of them and they are splendid, humble, prayerful men, who are desirous of doing something to improve the conditions of the world and to teach mankind to prepare for the world to come.

There is no reason why all the children of men should not be provided with the necessities of life, if the products of the earth were equitably distributed, and they could be more evenly divided, if men would turn to the Lord and keep his commandments.

There is a real famine in the world for the words of the Lord, and many honest souls are earnestly seeking to know what our heavenly Father desires of them. I have met a number of the leaders of the churches of the world, and have found among them noble characters devoted to doing good, but I have rarely found among those who have been called to the ministry in the various church organizations, men who have an understanding of the purposes of their being, or who realize why we are here in this world. Men cannot teach what they do not themselves know. These good men, not understanding the gospel and the necessity for the ordinances of the same, confine their teachings very largely to moral lessons and to reading the psalms to their congregations. Isolated passages of scripture are chosen as texts for addresses on virtue, honesty, etc., etc., all of which are helpful and uplifting, but few sermons are preached explaining the requirements made of every soul before we can enter the kingdom of heaven. It is this information of which the world is most in need. Few ministers have a message for their congregations that inspires in them the belief in the divinity of Jesus Christ and the necessity of partaking of the ordinances of the gospel prescribed by him.

THE FOUNDATION UPON WHICH WE BUILD OUR FAITH.

I believe that we have a duty to perform and we will have to labor more earnestly in the future than we have done in the past to discharge it, if we fulfil the requirements of our heavenly Father.

The Lord has blessed us with a knowledge that he lives, and has a body, and that we are created in his image. We do not believe that he is some kind of essence or that he is incomprehensible. If you have received the witness that has come to me and know as I know that our heavenly Father has revealed himself to the children of men, that he is a personal God, that we are created in his image, that our spirits were begotten by him, that he has given us an opportunity to dwell upon the earth to receive a physical tabernacle, in order that we may be prepared to return into his presence and live eternally with him, I say, if you have received that assurance, then you have a foundation upon which you may build your faith. Take that from you, the knowledge that God really lives, the assurance that Jesus Christ was the manifestation of God in the flesh, take from you the assurance that there will be a literal resurrection from the dead, and you will find yourselves in the condition that our Father's children are in throughout the world, and I ask you, what comfort remains to you then? These are the truths that are fundamental.

THE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL SUPERIOR TO ETHICS.

The Redeemer of mankind was more than a good man who came into the world to teach us ethics. The Redeemer of mankind possessed more than ordinary intelligence. He was indeed the Son of God, the only begotten of God in the flesh. He was sent into this world to remove from the minds of men the delusion that had confounded them for many generations. He came to call men to repentance, to turn them from the error of their way. He went among them representing God the Eternal Father, proclaiming that he was in the image of his Father, and that those who had seen him had seen the Father, and told them that he had been sent to do the will of his Father, and called on all men to turn from the error that had crept in among them, to repent of their sins and go down into the waters of baptism. Following repentance there was something for them to do that was, and is, necessary to obtain salvation. Our brothers and sisters of the world in many cases do not believe that baptism is essential. They say it is an outward form of inward grace. If that were true, then why was it necessary for the only perfect man who ever lived upon the earth to be baptized? When Jesus presented himself to John, at the waters of Jordan, and bade him baptize him, John replied: "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou me?", to which the Savior responded: "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." He did not say: "John, it is not necessary for me to be baptized, because I am the Savior of the world." He did not indicate that he thought it was unnecessary, but to him it was so important that he submitted himself to a mortal man possessing divine authority to preach repentance and baptism for the remission of sins.

There is no doubt in our minds that baptism is essential to salvation. Evidently the Redeemer of mankind believed it was. He in whose name we hope to gain eternal exaltation, and through whom we hope for a glorious resurrection, who came into the world and laid down his life that we might live again, thought it was important and necessary, and yet there are many of our Father's children who do not understand and do not believe that the Lord requires it of all men. The Scriptures contain several instructions regarding it. When the Savior sent his disciples out he said unto them: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature." Was that all he required? That is what the man of today says who doesn't believe in the divine mission of our Lord. Even the ministers of many churches fail to emphasize the remainder of that same paragraph, but the Redeemer of mankind said: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel unto every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." He didn't say that they might believe just whatever they pleased. He didn't say that good intentions were sufficient. He didn't say, preach any gospel that you please, but he told them to preach his gospel and observe all the things he had commanded. He said: "And they that believe and are baptized shall be saved," but he didn't promise salvation to others. Our heavenly Father has made this clear to your understanding, my brethren and sisters, in this Church, and he will hold you responsible to teach it to others. You understand it and they do not. It is a duty of us all to see that it is made as plain as possible, and that the other ordinances of the gospel are taught to all men.

NECESSITY OF TEACHING THE FIRST PRINCIPLES AND ORDINANCES OF THE GOSPEL.

The necessity of faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost must be emphasized by us. Many leaders throughout the religious world claim authority to preach the gospel and yet they do not believe that baptism and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost are essential. The Lord has revealed to us the necessity of these ordinances. He has organized his Church in this day, and has conferred upon men divine authority and has commanded them, as he commanded men of old, to preach the gospel in all the world. We are only a little handful of people among all our Father's children, but I want to say to you that I believe we are more numerous than the members of the Church were at the time our Savior was crucified. The mission devolving upon us is the same as that given to his disciples in Palestine when he sent them into all the world with the command to teach his truth, and our reception by mankind is the same. He told his followers that they would be hated for his name's sake, should be put out of the synagogues, and some should be put to death, and the hatred that had been his portion would come upon them. The same persecutions have befallen the elders of his Church in this latter day, as a result of teaching his truth. The same influences that sought to destroy the Church in the meridian of time, and finally overcame the men who held the holy Priesthood, are active in the world today—the same power that has tried to destroy every good man who has held the Priesthood from that time until the present.

OUR DUTY TO THE WORLD OF MANKIND.

Our brethren and sisters of the world do not understand, as you do, that there is an active Lucifer; they do not realize that there are evil spirits, tangible influences, abroad in the world, seeking to lead men to do the things that will deprive them of the Spirit of the Lord. You understand these things, and some of you have known by personal contact with the powers of evil how potent they are in this world. Our Father has given us the knowledge that this life is a probation, that we are building for the future, and how grateful we ought to be for this assurance, and Oh, how sad we would be if we thought that death terminated our career. If, when our life's labor on earth was finished, we had no opportunity to go on developing, there would be little to inspire us to live as we should here. The knowledge that all the good we accomplish here, and all development we make, will enhance our happiness eternally, encourages us to do our best. Millions of our Father's children in the world do not understand that truth, but they have a right to know it. Our heavenly Father has commissioned us to take that message to the ends of the earth and to declare it in such a way that men must consider it, and either take advantage of it or be left without excuse.

The Lord has not called the great Catholic church to perform this labor, nor the Methodist, nor the Presbyterian, nor the Baptist church. There are men in all these churches that our heavenly Father loves because of their virtue and because of the good they are doing, but they have not been divinely appointed to officiate in the ordinances of the gospel. He has commissioned you for a special work. You have been ordained and had conferred upon you his holy Priesthood. He has called you out of the world that you might unite in building Zion, and in disseminating his truth. Are you doing your full duty? Are you discharging the responsibility that has come upon you in return for your blessing?

LET US FEAR THE BONDAGE OF INIQUITY AS WELL AS THE BONDAGE OF DEBT.

We are a wonderfully blessed people, notwithstanding the fact that many are in the bondage of debt. I wish that were the only bondage. I fear many of the people of this great land are suffering much more from the bondage of iniquity. Many have need of repentance, and if those who have received the word of the Lord and a witness of the divinity of this work will set their houses in order, if they will teach their sons and daughters the way of eternal life, and exemplify the gospel of our Lord in their daily conduct, I have no fear of the financial outcome. Our Father in heaven has made a wonderful promise that has been realized in the nations of the earth. He said: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Mind you, not last, but, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and other things will be added." There are those in this audience today whose parents came into this land in the depths of poverty, with scant clothing and no shelter, depending upon others for food to sustain life. They came seeking first the kingdom of God, and today their descendants live in comfortable homes, are educated in the best schools that there are in the world today, and enjoy surroundings that are ideal, as far as conditions in this world can make them so. They are honored among the children of men, known for their virtue, for their strength of character and their intellectual power. I ask you if the promise of the Lord in many of these cases has not been fulfilled? Surely "all other things have been added."

THE PROMISE OF ETERNAL LIFE CONDITIONAL.

The promise of the Lord that we may enjoy eternal life is conditional. That is, we must serve the Lord our God with all our hearts, we must serve him by caring for his children, by blessing mankind wherever our influence can be exerted to bring them into the marvelous light of the glorious gospel. We must impart of our temporal blessings as well as exert our spiritual influence for the uplift of our fellows. I stand here today profoundly grateful for the knowledge that has come to me. I am thankful that I am not dependent upon any individual for the testimony that I possess. Of course, I am grateful for the encouragement I received from others who possess light and truth, and who give encouragement by lives of righteousness, but I do not depend on any of them for a knowledge that God lives, that Jesus Christ is the Redeemer of mankind and Joseph Smith is a prophet of the Lord. These things I know for myself.

I have been in the valley of the shadow of death in recent years, so near the other side that I am sure that for the special blessing of our heavenly Father I could not have remained here. But, never for one moment did that testimony that my heavenly Father has blessed me with become dimmed. The nearer I went to the other side, the greater was my assurance that the gospel is true. Now that my life has been spared I rejoice to testify that I know the gospel is true, and with all my soul I thank my heavenly father that he has revealed it to me.

I have been permitted to perform missionary work in different parts of the world, an opportunity that I gratefully accepted. I have been permitted to live with and associate most of my life with real Latter-day Saints, the best men and women that can be found in this world, and our Father knows how thankful I am for these blessings. I love my brothers and sisters, and I have affection for my Father's children who are not members of this Church, and inasmuch as he will give me physical strength and mental power, I desire to so order my life that I may be an uplift to all those with whom I come in contact. I desire to so exemplify the teachings of our Lord, and I presume all my brothers and sisters feel as I do, that when we stand in the presence of the Great King, after the labors of this life shall have been completed, and we answer to him for the time that we have spent here on earth, that there will be none who can truthfully say we were careless about dividing the truth with any of our Father's children, that none will be able to say of us that we knew these things were true but made no effort to explain them to our neighbors. Surely we would be condemned if one of our associates in life should stand in the presence of the Great Judge and say of us that we could have taught him the gospel, if we had made an effort, but that because of our neglect he would be deprived of a place in the celestial kingdom. Let none of us, my brethren and sisters, be justly accused in that way. Unto us much has been given, and of us much will be expected by our Father in heaven. We cannot be indifferent to the teachings of the gospel, we must not drift down the stream of life without an effort. Every day we should do something worth while.

ARE WE GRATEFUL?

The Lord has revealed to us so many truths in this latter day that we are aware of, that we cannot plead ignorance, if we sin. Men have been commissioned with divine authority, our Father has organized his Church, and has placed in it the ordinances of the gospel, he has commissioned men to do the same work that the Savior and his disciples did in the Old World, and upon this western hemisphere, among the ancestors of the American Indians. The greatest blessings and opportunities of all times have been bestowed upon us, and the question that should arise in our minds for all these mercies is: Are we grateful? Are you, my brethren and sisters, thankful to the Lord for this knowledge that has come to you? Do you really appreciate what it means? If you do, and desire that the Lord shall know that you appreciate it, then divide your blessings with his children. To his disciple of old the Savior said: "If you love me, then feed my sheep." Let us render service to our Father's children, and let it be of such nature that others observing our good work will be constrained to glorify our heavenly Father. Let us sustain those whom God has called to preside over us. Let our homes be the abiding place of the Spirit that comes from on high. Let us radiate an influence for peace and happiness among the children of men, so that our lives will be happy here, and when we are summoned to the great beyond we will be welcomed by those who have been our companions in life, and by our Father in heaven because of what we have done for his children.

I am grateful to be home again, I thank you one and all for the companionship of the past, and hope that I may have the privilege of meeting you in your wards and in the stakes of Zion, and when I do that I may be favored of the Lord that through me you may receive a blessing. I desire to cooperate with you to increase the power of this Church for good, not only at home, but throughout all the world, and I humbly pray to our heavenly Father that we may so order our lives that when our work here is completed we may obtain eternal life in his celestial kingdom and enjoy the companionship of those we love who have been our associates here on earth, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang the hymn, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning," and the meeting adjourned until 10 o'clock, Friday morning, the closing prayer being offered by Elder Henry W. Lunt, President of the Parowan stake of Zion.

SECOND DAY

The meeting began at 10 o'clock a. m., Friday, October 7, President Heber J. Grant, presiding.

The choir and congregation sang, "Come, let us anew our journey pursue."

Prayer was offered by Elder Sylvester Q. Cannon, President of the Pioneer stake.

The choir and congregation sang, "Now let us rejoice."

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

My brethren and sisters, I feel very humble, indeed, to stand before you on this occasion, for I recognize how very inadequate any man is who attempts, on these occasions, to do wholly the will of God; but I desire to say to my brethren and sisters that I consider it a very high privilege, at any time, to be allowed to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as restored in these latter days by the Prophet Joseph Smith. I know, my brethren and sisters, that this is God's work. I know that God lives; that he has instituted the great plan of salvation for the benefit of his children: that he is watching over us and that we may rest ourselves and our troubles on him and that he will lead us safely to the destined end. There is nothing in my life of greater value than this testimony. There is no assurance in my life more certain than that this is the work of God, and I am happy, as I have said, to be allowed to bear this testimony to my brethren and sisters assembled. I feel tremendously the responsibility of standing before you.

PEOPLE RESPONDING TO THE REQUIREMENTS MADE OF THE LORD.

During the last three or four months, I have been allowed to visit nine or ten stakes of Zion, in conference and convention capacity assembled, and I have been greatly impressed by the abundance of the Spirit of God which prevails among the people throughout the stakes of Zion. I have marveled at the devotion and the faith of many whom I have met. It has warmed my heart to see the vigor with which the work of the Lord is being conducted by young and old. It is difficult for me to say which has impressed me most, the thorough devotion of those who are old in the cause, or the eagerness of the young to take upon themselves the harness of the Lord to carry onward the work of the Church. I feel, my brethren and sisters, that while we may have many weaknesses—indeed I am sure we do have many weaknesses—and may need constant exhortation, advice and suggestions, such as we receive at these and other conferences throughout the Church, yet this people is so strong in faith and in good works that God has made us—and I praise him for it—good material with which to build this latter-day work. I believe the spirit of God is with this people, and that the people are responding, perhaps in weak human ways, but are responding, to the demands and requirements made upon us by our heavenly Father.

A WONDERFUL FEAST AT THIS CONFERENCE.

We have had set before us during the meetings of this conference a wonderful feast. Admonitions have been given, instructions presented, and doctrines taught, ranging from the very highest, if you so choose to call it, to the very lowest; from the highest spiritual truths to the common, every-day, material needs of man. It has always seemed to me that in no particular does this work more appear to be a marvelous work and a wonder than in the great body of knowledge which has been given through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith and his successors in office. It must be a man of many troubles indeed who has sat through these two meetings of our conference and has not found, in the words spoken, some key for the solution of his needs. As I understand the body of knowledge which has been given to this people by God, it is so vast and so comprehensive that it makes light the remotest corners of human needs. There is no place in the world, no condition of human affairs, which may not be made alive, really alive, by the knowledge which God has revealed in these latter days.

Nevertheless, I am impressed to say, that although we have so wonderful a body of knowledge, the most known to any people on the face of the earth, yet knowledge of itself is a lifeless and unsatisfactory thing. Every once in a while, as we journey through life, we meet some man who is rich in knowledge, but uses his knowledge only as an ornament on his intellectual mantel-shelf simply to be looked at, to be enjoyed as an ornament and nothing more. There is no truth more certain in all the world, than that in order to make knowledge—the things that have been taught us, of value, and really beautiful, and helpful in making our lives real living lives, knowledge must be put to some use. Knowledge unused is scarcely worth the having; but knowledge once used leaps into light and life and becomes a bright flame to guide and to help man.

TWO CLASSES OF SCHOLARS.

The question that has come before me continuously, during the two sessions of our conference, has been, as I have heard the instructions from the stand: "Will I be able so to apply these truths as to make them a living force in my life?" All humanity today may be classified, I suppose, into two great classes as far as knowledge is concerned—those who have knowledge and use it not, and those who have, perhaps, lesser knowledge and use it well. Those who use the knowledge are the ones who today are leading the world in every proper human activity. We have in our universities and colleges two great classes of scholars; the non-productive and the productive scholar. We have the scholar who merely teaches what he has learned, and never attempts to use it. He is held in low esteem. We have the man, on the other hand, who believes in using knowledge as it is given to him, and he becomes a productive scholar. He carries onward the realm of knowledge, expands it, increases it, and becomes of great renown.

However, there are many ways of using knowledge. To my mind the greatest manner of using knowledge, the eternal divine knowledge which we have and which we call frequently the gospel of Jesus Christ, is to use it in such a way as to benefit the whole human race. Many men use knowledge for their own sakes. That makes it of less value. Indeed I suspect that one real difference between religion and ethics is in the manner in which truth is used. When truth is used for all men, for the carrying out of some great scheme of salvation, such as God has provided, then knowledge has its noblest use and worth. When it is used only for a few, for me and my family and those near me, the religious element tends to disappear.

ETHICS VS. A LIVING, VITAL RELIGION.

I remember that, a few years ago, we had in this city a visit from three or four members of the Chinese republic, distinguished men who came here to study the gospel of Jesus Christ as taught by this people, for the express purpose of taking back to China, if they could, some of the conclusions that we had reached, for the upbuilding of the Chinese republic. I remember the question was put to one of them at one of our gatherings: "Do you not have in your country a sufficient amount of truth to guide you? Do you need to come to this far western land, and to this far western state, to this humble people, to gain information that will help you in building the new China of which you dream?" And the wisest of them, an old man, rich in the experiences of life, through his interpreter, said to the small company assembled: "We have in China a system of ethics and that is all; we have no real religion. Our system of ethics is not so organized, does not have such life as to be of service for the whole people; and," said he, "the conclusion of four thousand years of Chinese civilization is that ethics will never save a people or make a people fully happy and contented. We need a living, vital religion."

I am impressed always with the fact, as I think about these matters, that the thing that gives us life and vigor, and makes us a peculiar people, different from all other people, that makes it possible for us to have such a great assembly twice a year as we have in this great tabernacle, is that we do know a plan of salvation that enables us and requires us to use all our knowledge for all people of all time—past, present and future—and that we do this work by the authority of the Priesthood, which means simply that back of the plan and back of our efforts is a great, intelligent Will who has laid out the plan, who is carrying it onward, and whose agents we are in conducting the work on earth. It is the Priesthood, my brethren and sisters, given to all honorable, faithful male members of the Church, the blessings of which the women share with their husbands, which gives us life, which makes this Church a living, growing Church and kingdom, which separates us, if you choose, from all other kingdoms on the face of the earth, from all other churches; for no other organization, so far as I know, makes the same claim in regard to Priesthood that we make.

A PRIESTHOOD WITH A TRUE CONCEPTION OF GOD.

The conception of God held by any group of people may well be understood by the nature of the priesthood which that people respects. In fact, the priesthood of any people is really a definition of the God in which that people believes. If we find an impotent priesthood, a priesthood that dallies Sunday mornings, in the pulpit, with the vital issues of life, the chances are that that church also has a conception of an impotent God who also dallies, Sunday mornings, with the vital issues of life. If we find a vigorous priesthood which concerns itself with man's needs and life, day and night, from the week's beginning to the week's end; which attempts to understand man, and to serve the every need of man, and which guides the conduct of man into large dreams of life; then in all probability the group of people sustaining such a priesthood has a conception of a God who is real, a true Father of the men and women of the earth, who teaches the brotherhood of man. The priesthood of this Church which deals with all the affairs, temporal and spiritual, of the members of the Church, is an evidence of our conception of God: God is our Father: we are his children: he understands us since he has had, perhaps, experiences similar to ours: he looks into our daily life, and unto him we can go day by day, with the common, ordinary troubles of life and lay them before him, feeling assured that the God we worship desires us to approach him in all things, and that he will answer our prayer, even though that prayer concerns itself with the humble, simple affairs of life. The grandest conception of "Mormonism" is our conception of God. It was by divine purpose that the first great vision to the Prophet Joseph Smith was of the Father himself in person, who to the boy explained the order of things, and gave to the world again, forever, as I believe, the true knowledge of God. It was by divine purpose when the Prophet Joseph Smith was instructed as to the real condition in the world that necessitated the re-establishment of the Church and kingdom of God, that God said to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

They have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant;

They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own God, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol * * *.

THE GREAT NEED OF THE WORLD IS A TRUE CONCEPTION OF GOD.

The first great message of this latter-day work has been with respect to God, and my testimony to you is, my brethren and sisters, that the great need of the world today is a correct understanding of God. This world is in turmoil and strife. The old paths seem insufficient. Men are seeking new ways to solve new problems. They are looking for safe principles or guides which they can apply to these new problems and test proposed new solutions. The only path to peace and happiness is through the proper knowledge of God, including his plan of salvation; and therein, and therein only, will the nations of the world find what they are seeking today. It is our duty to teach the word of God to the world. We shall have, as I view it, no real peace, no full satisfaction among the nations, until the knowledge of the true God is re-established and accepted among the nations of the earth. Many have made fun, in our day, of those who are seeking for God. H. G. Wells, the great novelist of England, has been ridiculed because, during the last few years, he has been seeking for God—a God he could understand and that his fellows could understand; a God who could help the nations in their trials; but I believe that H. G. Wells stands for a great group of men and women throughout the world who are God-hungry, who understand that the God they have been worshiping is incomplete, insufficient, mystifying and mysterious. They want a God, or a conception of a God, who may be understood by plain and simple people; who understands humanity and who, in a measure, perhaps, is of humanity.

May God bless us and help us to carry to the nations the great and wonderful truths we possess, and may we be given strength, from time to time, so to use the knowledge that we have, that it may burn as a living fire within our breasts, throughout this Church and before all the world, I ask it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE W. McCUNE

(President of the Eastern States Mission)

My brethren and sisters, I have a high sense of appreciation for this privilege of standing before you to bear my testimony; and I sincerely desire to have the Spirit of the Lord to direct me; to that end I beseech of you, sustain me by your sympathy and your love. I have enjoyed more than I can tell you the remarks that have already been made during our conference. I feel that they are timely. They are those principles which we need to apply in our lives. I am glad that I have been considered worthy to be associated with these good men who are directing the work of the Lord in this day; that I have been called into the world to preach the gospel, for I know it is the gospel of our Redeemer, that has all the elements of salvation within it, that gospel which will save us, not only spiritually at some distant far off time, but now and forever. It will save us temporally, physically, intellectually and morally as well as spiritually, and I feel highly honored to be called of God to go into the world to proclaim these glad tidings to my fellowmen.

We are meeting with fair success in the Eastern States Mission. We are being handicapped for lack of sufficient help just now. We made a good start in many places, but had to withdraw our forces from a number of localities. This I regret very much. Therefore, I appreciate the remarks of President Grant to you regarding this matter, showing you the importance of allowing your sons and daughters to stay in the field as long as possible to the completion of their missions. They have been called of the Lord and they will be released by the same authority in due time when you have done your part. O, my brethren and sisters, you cannot invest your means to a better purpose. You cannot invest them in a way that will bring you greater dividends than in sustaining your sons and daughters while they are proclaiming these glad tidings throughout the world. I beg of you, do your part and put your trust in God. Consult the bishop, as you have been instructed when you find it impossible to maintain your sons longer, and I believe you will find that the way will be opened up so you can sustain them until they have completed their mission.

I know that this is the work of the Lord, and O, the joy this sweet sentence gives: "I know that my Redeemer lives." It is the greatest blessing that has come into my life; nothing else gives me so much pleasure as to bear testimony of this. I know that Joseph Smith is a Prophet of the living God, sent in the latter days again to establish in the earth the Church and kingdom of God; and I wish I could burn that testimony into the hearts of all men with whom I come in contact, that they might partake of the joy that we experience in bearing witness of it, and the joy that it brings into my life every day. I cannot tell you how I know this. I know that I see you before me, and that is through the power of my mortal sense; but I believe it is possible for the mortal sense to be deceived; but, my brethren and sisters, it is not possible to deceive that which is divine by which power these glorious truths are revealed to my soul. It is true that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, and that we have embraced the true gospel of our Redeemer, and if we only apply it to our lives we will earn our salvation in God's kingdom. We are being saved now, not in the sense that the world understands it; for they say we are saved, and cannot sin, that there is nothing more to do. That is not true; it is a misunderstanding, as I see it; but we are being saved just as fast as we apply to our lives the glorious principles of the gospel of our Redeemer. We are being saved temporally just as fast as we live the laws pertaining to our temporal salvation; and if we continue therein we shall earn our salvation and exaltation in God's kingdom.

I feel that I ought not to take more time this morning. I am glad I am here, and to bear testimony of these things. My heart is filled with love for you, my brethren and sisters, and for the brethren who are directing the work of the Lord in the latter days. I realize it is an honor to be associated with them. I love them, and I too, sustain them by my faith and prayers and I hope also by my works. Brethren and sisters, let us be free in giving expression of our love in our daily lives. I sometimes think we are too backward in this matter. I would rather have the expressions of your good will now than your bouquets upon my casket when I am gone. Let us be free in facing our fathers and mothers, putting our arms about them and telling them, face to face, that we love them. Let us greet our brothers and sisters cordially and whole-heartedly and tell them we love them and delight to be associated with them. This should bring to their hearts good cheer.

Now, may the Lord bless you, my brethren and sisters. May his peace and blessings be with you in your homes, that you may apply in your lives the wonderful truths that have been spoken in our conference, is my sincere prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus. Amen.

(Of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church.)

I feel a deep sense of responsibility in trying to express my thoughts to this vast congregation of Latter-day Saints. The one thought above all others that has come to my mind is how thankful I am to my heavenly Father that I am permitted to be a Latter-day Saint; that I, as a member of the Church of God, have an opportunity of mingling with you. How thankful I am, too, that the Lord permits me to hold the holy Priesthood, with the privilege of ministering among my brethren and sisters. I feel that a tremendous responsibility rests upon all who hold this Priesthood; that it shall be magnified righteously before our heavenly Father; that we shall labor in the ministry with kindness, sympathy, helpfulness, and with love unfeigned, so that the great work of our heavenly Father may progress in the earth and accomplish its mission among the children of men.

I am thankful for the opportunity of mingling my voice in song and prayer, and to listen to the advice and counsel of my brethren. I hope we shall all go home determined to follow the splendid instructions to which we have listened, all of which are for our spiritual and temporal welfare.

I am particularly impressed by President Grant's advice that we get out of debt. Indebtedness is one of the great problems of the day facing the Latter-day Saints. We are today living under a commercial system of competition which has come from the world, and has replaced the conditions which prevailed in the early settlement of the valleys.

Our present financial situation should set us all to serious thinking. Is not the time coming when it will be necessary for the Latter-day Saints to return to those earlier methods of living—the old rules of co-operation and mutual helpfulness—each doing his share in the community? It was this system of co-operation that built the roads, canals, bridges, cleared away the brush, organized towns and villages, and laid the foundation for the great communities of Latter-day Saints who now occupy these mountain valleys. Co-operation results from the great truth that human beings must depend upon one another. Now we finance all undertakings with money in the form of bonds. These bonds and certificates of indebtedness are usually sold outside the state, and must be paid by our labor, whether we are engaged in the office, on the farm, or on the range. Are we not over-reaching ourselves and becoming the "hewers of wood and drawers of water"?

We cooperate wonderfully in spiritual things. Our system of organization, and the operation of the stakes, wards and missions, are the admiration of all unbiased investigators. In all the affairs of the wards and stakes, cooperation is the basic idea. But when it comes to business, we are actuated purely by the spirit of competition. That competition is for the profit of individuals or groups of individuals, and not in the interest of the community. Under our present competitive system of living, you will find in the small communities a number of people in commercial pursuits, supplying our needs for the purpose of making profit for themselves. Why not develop the spirit by which the community owns these institutions? Why not develop cooperative purchasing as we are now developing cooperative selling? This cooperative spirit could be developed in the cultivation of large tracts of land, in flocks and herds, merchandising, banking, canals and water problems, and in many other ways, some of which have already been developed in the older states and in the countries of Europe.

I just want to leave this thought to set us thinking more about this great problem of living, to see if, in the near future, we can put into operation some of the earlier methods in vogue among the Pioneers and early-comers to these valleys; when there was no money, when labor was wealth, and the ability to work and apply labor intelligently created wealth for the community.

I again testify to you, my brethren and sisters, of my thankfulness and appreciation for the gospel. I know this to be the work of God, for the Lord has manifested it to me in many ways, and I thank him with all my heart, and with all my mind and with all my soul that I am a Latter-day Saint.

May he bless us with the disposition to understand the gospel, to manifest it in our daily lives, so that we may grow spiritually day by day stronger in the faith and more willing to keep his commandments, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER REY L. PRATT

(President of the Mexican Mission.)

I esteem it a very great privilege, my brethren and sisters, to stand before you this morning and bear my testimony because I know that the gospel is true. I know that it has been restored to us in this day and age in which we live, with all the gifts and blessings and the powers and privileges that have ever pertained to it in any age of the world. I am very grateful to the Lord that I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Later-day Saints. I am thankful to the Lord for the holy Priesthood that I bear and for the calling that has come to me to minister in the world as a missionary. The happiest time of my life and I think the most profitable to me, has been spent in missionary labors among the children of men who have not been acquainted with these glorious principles of the gospel that we as a people enjoy. I feel that if the Lord requires it at my hands, I can feel happy in spending the rest of my life, or as much of it as he requires of me, in ministering the gospel to the people of the world who are not acquainted with these glorious and saving principles. I am very grateful that at this conference the president of the Church, whom we sustain as prophet, seer and revelator, has spoken to Israel concerning the missionary work that is expected of us. I think that there is no work or responsibility resting so heavily upon the membership of this Church today as that of disseminating the gospel among the children of men. As I travel up and down the country and see the millions of people who are in spiritual darkness but who are honest in heart, who are desirous of doing right, and who, if they err, err in ignorance, I feel greatly resting upon me, my brethren and sisters, the responsibility of carrying to them the gospel. We are grateful to have your sons and daughters laboring with us in the mission field and I trust that the admonitions that have come from the president of the Church at this conference, will be followed by the fathers, mothers and brothers and sisters, and by the bishops of this Church, in that they will encourage their sons and daughters and the members of the wards to remain in the mission, rather than to suggest to them that they discontinue their labors at an early date. When we are cultivating the fruits of the field, my brothers and sisters, we do not pick the peach or apple, or garner the wheat before it is ripe.

I sometimes think that those fathers and mothers who are so anxious for their sons to come home are doing that very thing, and their boys have not ripened in the service of the Lord. They come home and sometimes are not in as fair a way to make a success after they return as they would be were they left a little longer in the missionary field.

Our work has prospered during the year that has passed, in the Mexican mission. We have never baptized in any single year of the history of that mission so many people as we have baptized during the months that have passed of this year of 1921. With sixty missionaries laboring we have baptized two hundred and twenty-five people, and they are wonderfully faithful in their living of the gospel. I am grateful to the Lord that he has privileged me with my brethren to re-open the mission in the Republic of Mexico, after a term of years that we have not been able to labor there due to the revolutionary conditions; and I am thankful to him for the faithfulness and integrity and the faithful lives of the Saints who were left there for years, as it were, as sheep without a shepherd. They have remained faithful. We have been able to hold conferences with them recently as in the years that are past and they gather around the elders and are anxious to hear again the gospel taught among them, and their lives are an example worthy of imitation before the people with whom they are surrounded.

I bear you my testimony, my brethren and sisters, that I know that God lives; and that Jesus Christ is his Son and is the Redeemer of the world. I bear you my testimony that I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, raised up to establish this work in the day and age we live in, and I know that he who stands at the head of the Church today is in very deed a prophet, seer and revelator unto the world, and I for one wish to follow his counsel and advice and admonition and put my life, so far as I can, in harmony with the principles of the gospel. The Lord bless you, my brethren and sisters, and help us all to serve him with full purpose of heart, is my prayer in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER WINSLOW FARR SMITH

(President of the Northern States Mission)

I believe in the gospel of Jesus Christ. I believe that when God opened the heavens, one hundred years ago, and gave to the children of men the knowledge of himself and his purposes, he commenced a most momentous work, and that when he gave to us, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the responsibility of carrying his message to all corners of the earth, he meant that we should do the work. I believe in the principles of the gospel, not only in the first principles of faith, repentance, baptism by immersion, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but I believe also in the temporal principles of the gospel, those all important ordinances, those vital laws, those rigid rules of conduct that have been given to us by which we should order our lives, and I believe implicitly that God had a purpose when he gave to us a strict and a rigid plan for us to live. He will have a tried people and in order for us to be a tried people we must keep his commandments and live up to the rigid law he has given. I believe that the purpose of the gospel of Jesus Christ is not only to save the souls of men, but to save also their bodies, and that if we strive to save our bodies and shape our lives here on earth in harmony with the temporal plan, the rest will take care of itself. In the Book of Alma we read:

Behold, now I say unto you that he commandeth you to repent; and except ye repent, ye can in no wise inherit the kingdom of God. But behold, this is not all—he has commanded you to repent, or he will utterly destroy you from off the face of the earth; yea, he will visit you in his anger, and in his fierce anger he will not turn away. Behold do ye not remember the words which he spake unto Lehi, saying that: Inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper in the land? And again it is said that: Inasmuch as ye will not keep my commandments ye shall be cut off from the presence of the Lord.

I believe the Lord knew whereof he spoke and that he had a purpose, a definite and a positive purpose, in giving to us the commandments that we have. I believe also that unless we strive to keep these commandments; unless we exert ourselves to the utmost to obey his divine law, we cannot look for, hope for, nor will we receive, the blessings that are promised upon the keeping of those laws. We have been blessed as a people. We have been gathered from all the corners of the earth. We have been sustained by our heavenly Father in times of adversity. We have triumphed, as it were, over the most momentous obstacles, and today the light of Zion stands here shining from the tops of the mountains, and the world is looking up and admiring the wonderful work we are doing. We dare not, my brethren and sisters, feel that we have accomplished all. No, we have merely begun. The work stands before us. The great field is here to be harvested. The world must be prepared. God has given us the responsibility. The charge is on our heads, and the burden is ours. Our duty is to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ by precept and by example. Our calling is to prepare the world for the coming of the Lord, and if we will do our duty, if we will exert ourselves to the utmost, if we will work, full of faith, full of zeal, full of determination, and give everything that we have, our hearts, our souls and our strength, the world will be prepared, and when the Lord Jesus Christ comes to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords, we, his people, will be accepted by him. God help us and sustain us to do that which he has given us to do, is my prayer in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

(President of the Central States Mission.)

I am very happy, my brethren and sisters, to have the privilege of attending this conference; I feel that the Lord has greatly blessed all who have been here. The success which comes to this Church I think is largely the result of its members meeting together, in general conferences and in local gatherings, where they can receive instructions and counsel which they try to carry out in performing the work they have been sent into the world to do.

A great responsibility rests upon the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints: The gospel which our Savior gave to his apostles in the dispensation of time in which he lived has been revealed anew in this dispensation and the same Priesthood that has been in the earth always under his direction is here today in the valleys of the mountains in Israel, where Israel is gathered and centered to carry out the great plan which our Father in heaven made before the earth was. This people are a great people; I feel that we owe a great debt to our Father in heaven for what he has done. We have assuredly been blessed. There isn't any doubt in the mind of any man or woman, I am sure, who has followed in his life the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ but that he has seen the return of the Lord's blessings to latter-day Israel with greater force than they were bestowed in former days. I am sure that the Church of Christ in the earth is stronger today than it was yesterday, but that it will never be weaker than it has been in the past, but that it will grow; and as the days come and go, the strength of the Almighty will be manifested in greater power upon the children of men than it has ever been before, until he comes.

When I look into the faces of men and women who are not of this Church, I feel that I owe unto them a testimony, if it is within my power to give it. For they lived at a former time and they kept their first estate. I often tell this to our missionaries in the field—that when they look upon the face of any man or woman they must remember one thing, that that man or woman kept the first estate. They may not have kept their estate as well as others have, but the fact nevertheless remains that they lived and were advanced as a result of their obedience. They received the blessings of the Almighty which gave them the privilege of living here in the flesh and receiving the blessings of the flesh, for it is a blessing to be permitted to live in a body of flesh and bone. It is our duty to warn them, to warn ourselves, to receive admonition and to give it unto others; for just so surely as the sun shines, as the Lord has said, there will come a time when men will be rewarded according to their works; and when men and women find out what they have lost as a result of their disobedience, the Lord's word will be fulfilled, and there will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

It is the duty and labor of Latter-day Saints to deliver unto the children of men the message which the Lord has revealed in these the last days. He spoke unto Joseph Smith. He said the things Joseph Smith declared he said. He delivered unto him the gospel, and the Prophet wrote and preached it. There isn't any doubt about it. I know as I stand here, and I say it to all the world: If there is an honest man, a man or a woman with a heart that desires to know the truth, that knowledge can come unto them. It is easy to receive, easy to understand. The gospel is not full of mysticisms or of things that cannot be understood, but it is a plain and simple plan which the children of men may follow and thereby go back into the presence of our Father in heaven. And unless they do this they cannot return where he is, worlds without end; so says the scripture given by the Prophet Joseph Smith.

These things are given to the world and the words that he gave to the world have stood the test ever since they came into the earth. For nearly one hundred years the Book of Mormon has been before the people, and it has never been proved to be untrue; but, on the contrary, as every year comes and goes it is proved to be a truth by many hundreds of men and women. More witnesses are added to the divinity of that work. And so it is with the revelations of the Lord in this dispensation of time. This gathering itself is a witness—it is a witness unto any man or woman who might walk into this building with a desire in his heart to know whether this is the work of God—this great congregation and the Spirit and power of God felt here are witnesses and will stand for or against men at some future day.

May the Lord give us the privilege to live faithfully unto the end of our lives, that we may return unto him, that we may send our sons, and daughters, and our message unto the world to bring as many souls unto Christ as is possible in the few short years we remain on the earth, I humbly pray, in the name of Christ. Amen.

A cello solo, "Andante," was rendered by Seymour Fisher, accompanied on the great organ by Edward P. Kimball, Assistant organist.

ELDER DAVID A. SMITH

(Of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church)

I feel weighing heavily upon me, my brethren and sisters, the responsibility that comes to me at this time. Nevertheless, I am grateful unto God for this privilege of bearing testimony to you, and I sincerely pray that he will give me strength to speak words of encouragement. It is a wonderful privilege to stand here and look into the faces of those gathered together in this conference, and a great responsibility to endeavor to instruct you in your duties. This truly is a marvelous work and a wonder.

I thought yesterday, when President Grant mentioned the fact that we have nearly eighteen hundred missionaries in the world, preaching the gospel, how many of us here at home fully realize, or in a sense realize, the great missionary work that is being done. Every man holding the Priesthood of this Church, who is magnifying his calling before God, is preaching the gospel, and when I have seen the work that is being done on this block by Brother Goddard and his associates, directed by the Spirit of God, I am sure I am safe in saying that the missionary work being done right here, where the temple of the living God is located, "the mountain of the House of the Lord established in the tops of the mountains, exalted above the hills," is a "marvelous work and a wonder." How many of us realize that hundreds of thousands are coming here to our very doors each year to hear the word of the Lord. I wonder sometimes if the power of the Priesthood, and the manifestations of the power of God through it, are not so common to us that we pass them by, day by day, giving little heed to the warnings and encouragement they bring.

The other day it was my privilege to meet a reverend gentleman on this block. After discussing some of the principles of the gospel with him, he expressed a wish to know something more concerning "Mormonism," so called. It was my privilege later to take him to visit one of our Sabbath schools where those holding the Priesthood were meeting as quorums. He passed from one class to another, ending where the High Priests were in session. In going from the classes where he saw young men ranging from twelve to twenty years of age present in goodly numbers, he said, "Bishop Smith, how do you do it? How do you get them here? We can't do it, we can't touch men of this age." I answered: "See what they are studying. These young men hold the Priesthood; they are deacons, teachers and priests, having been ordained by those who have authority from God to do so. This Priesthood fills them, if they keep themselves clean, with a desire to study the principles of the gospel. There is a place in the Church for them to function. Their greatest desire is to honor the Priesthood and magnify their calling so that some day they will be found ready and worthy to go into the world to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ—this gospel which they are studying. That is the desire that actuates them and brings them here Sunday after Sunday". He said, "How do you get these young men here who are acting as instructors? How much do you pay them for this work?" I referred this question to the superintendent of the Sunday school, who answered: "There is only one man in this building who receives a salary for his work, and he is paid for doing the janitor work." The gentleman's reply was: "It is marvelous! It is a wonder! I am bewildered with it all. The only thing I can compare it with is, if you will pardon the comparison, a three ring circus. You have given me so much to think about, I am bewildered. I think I am safe in saying that you have here in this house today more people assembled for the purpose of worshiping God than we have in the whole county where I live." His home is in another state.

Now, my brethren and sisters, those of us who hold the Priesthood have great responsibility. You, fathers and mothers, have a great responsibility. My special calling in this Church is to guard and guide the youth of Zion, and to encourage those who have been ordained to the Lesser Priesthood, which Priesthood holds the keys to the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel, which is the gospel of repentance, and of baptism, and the remission of sins. It prepares young men to do the greater work required of them in later life. In that Priesthood, as we are today, the duties of the priest are to preach, teach, expound, exhort, to baptize and administer the Sacrament; to visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray, vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties. The duty of a teacher is to watch over the Church always, and be with and strengthen them, to see that there is no iniquity in the Church, no backbiting, evil speaking or lying. The duty of the deacon, the little fellow, the beginner, is to assist the teacher, to keep order in the meeting house, and be on hand at all times to labor as directed by the bishop, to perform outward ordinances which help him to grow and become strong in the faith and useful in the hands of God. How many of us realize the blessings that have been promised to us through the Priesthood?

And the inhabitants of Zion, also, shall remember their labors, inasmuch as they are appointed to labor, in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord. Now, I the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness. (Doc. & Cov. 68:30-31.)

There is work provided for all, and all are expected to work, and are rewarded according to their faithfulness.

For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two Priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies; they become the sons of Moses and of Aaron, and the seed of Abraham, and the Church and Kingdom and the elect of God; and also all they who receive this Priesthood receiveth me, saith the Lord; for he that receiveth my servants receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth my Father; and he that receiveth my Father, receiveth my Father's kingdom; therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him"; [not a part, not a portion, but all that my Father hath shall be given unto him]. "and this is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the Priesthood. Therefore, all those who receive the Priesthood, receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he cannot break, neither can it be moved; but whoso breaketh this covenant, after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come. (Doc. & Cov. 84:33, 41.)

Oh, I sincerely pray, my brethren and sisters, that we will magnify our calling in the Priesthood. Oh, elders of Israel, let us see that there is work for those holding the Lesser Priesthood. See that these young men whose mission is to labor in the Lesser Priesthood have work to do, and as we are commanded here, take them with us:

And if any man among you be strong in the spirit, let him take with him he that is weak, that he may be edified in all meekness, that he may become strong also. Therefore, take with you those who are ordained unto the Lesser Priesthood, and send them before you to make appointments, and to prepare the way, and to fill appointments that you yourselves are not able to fill. Behold, this is the way that mine apostles, in ancient days, built up my Church unto me. Therefore, let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling; and let not the head say unto the feet, it hath no need of the feet, for without the feet how shall the body be able to stand? Also the body hath need of every member that all may be edified together, that the system may be kept perfect." (Doc. & Cov. 84:106-110.)

God help us to do our duty, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER NEPHI JENSEN

(President of the Canadian Mission.)

With all my heart I am thankful for membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I am thankful that I know that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is in this Church. I am thankful that I have had the privilege of telling, in a humble way, some of the children of men of the great things which God has wrought in our day and time. I sincerely pray in my heart that I shall always have the strength and the desire to do my part in proclaiming the knowledge of these great things to the children of men.

I have had occasion, frequently, while laboring in the Canadian Mission, to discover the marks of truth in the gospel which we teach. Jesus said, "I came not to bring peace but a sword." Carlyle stated the same idea in the terse phrase, "Every fact is a battle." The greater the fact, the greater the battle. Truth is the greatest fact in the world. I have noticed that the truth that we teach does have the characteristics of a battle. Just a few weeks ago a very intelligent gentleman in the city of Toronto visited three street meetings upon the same evening. These three meetings were all being conducted at the same time. In two of them bitter attacks were being made upon the Latter-day Saints. The other meeting was being conducted by our elders. The gentleman visited the two anti-"Mormon" meetings and then finally came to the meeting in which our elders were preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. He remained at this meeting to the close. At the conclusion of the service, he approached one of the elders and told of his attendance at the other two meetings and asked the question, "Are the 'Mormons' the only people in the world?" Well, I hardly think that the Mormons are the only people in the world, but I am quite sure that they have the only religion in the world that has substance enough in it to keep the devil awake at nights.

I have had occasion to witness the purifying and ennobling power of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Some months ago a young man came to our mission. He was a graduate of the University of Utah. In the course of our conversation I asked him how he was going to maintain himself in the field and he said, "I have been teaching school for four years and I have saved a little money. I am going to spend this money in maintaining myself in the mission field." That remark is one of the most eloquent sermons I have ever heard. It is also one of the best testimonies of the divinity of the gospel of Jesus Christ I have ever heard.

I have also had occasion to notice the greatness and generosity of the Saints at home, in maintaining their sons and daughters upon the firing line of truth. A few days ago one of my companions came to me regarding his release. In the course of our conversation he said, "I have just received a letter from my father, in which he writes: 'It is hard to get money at the present time. I have kept five sons in the mission field, but I don't want you to think about coming home until you receive an honorable release.'"

I recall another letter which was received from a good mother in Israel, who had reared ten children. This letter was written to a sister of one of our missionaries. The good mother wrote his sister, "I would rather take in washing every day to keep my son in the field, than to think of his coming home until he has completed his mission."

I want you to know that I treasure the memory of these things above the price of rubies. They testify of great souls, of souls that have been made pure and great by the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ. With all my heart I am thankful for my membership in the Church that produces this kind of souls. I am thankful for the testimony of the truth which God has written upon my heart by the fire of the Holy Ghost. I know that this is the kingdom of the living God. I know that there is in this Church the power and the Priesthood of God. I know that there is in this Church the riches of God's truth and God's wisdom. I do know that Heber J. Grant is a Prophet of God. The promise which he sealed upon my head when I was set apart for my last mission has been fulfilled—a promise which no human power could make come true.

My brothers and my sisters, let us remember who we are and what our mission is in the world, and let us humbly and faithfully do our part, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen

ELDER CHARLES H. HART*(Of the First Council of Seventy)*

No doubt all of us who have had the privilege of attending these conference meetings have felt that it was good for us to be here. I think that upon each occasion of one of these annual or semi-annual conferences a little different situation confronts the people. They are in need of a little different line of advice; and I felt, as President Grant gave his opening speech, that we had heard the right word, and that it only remained for us to follow the good advice, and that the work of the Lord, spiritually and temporally, in this intermountain country, would be greatly heightened thereby, I think the one thing that we need, perhaps more than any other, is obedience. Our third article of faith declares that salvation by the atonement is conditioned upon obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel. Another article of faith calls for obedience to the sovereign civil power and its laws. Many of the evils of the day result from the lack of obedience to the gospel and to the laws which govern us. Our modern scriptures, the revelations unto the Prophet Joseph Smith, are particularly strong in expressions as to the necessity of obedience, in order for us to have the benefit of the great sacrifice made by our Lord and Redeemer. In simplest form, perhaps, it is expressed thus: "My blood shall not cleanse them if they hear me not."

In the Old Testament there are many strong passages indicating the necessity of obedience in order for us to have the benefit of the principles of the gospel and of the atonement and of the promises. When our brother quoted from the Book of Mormon, from Alma, I thought of a similar doctrine, as expressed in the eleventh chapter of Deuteronomy, in the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth verses, that there would be a blessing by obedience, and a curse for those who did not obey. We have some very striking examples in scripture of the view which the Lord took of disobedience. In the instance of the taking of Jericho, the very taking of it was based upon obedience. It would not have been sufficient if they had not complied with the direction as to the number of times that they should march around the city before it would be their privilege to take it. They were under strict command that it was not an expedition for spoils, and when one Achan disregarded that injunction and had to confess later that he had within his tent, the Babylonish robe, and the wedge of gold, and the shekels of silver, he was taken out and stoned by his comrades, because they realized then the necessity of obedience. King Saul no doubt learned his bitter lesson when the same rule applied to him, that it was not an expedition for private profit that he entered upon in proceeding against one of the heathen nations that merited destruction. When there could be heard the bleating of the sheep and the lowing of the cattle, which he had saved contrary to instructions, and he felt that he had incurred the displeasure of Samuel and also of the Lord, how deep must have been his regret; how he would have retained Samuel to have him, if possible, wipe out the penalty for the act of disobedience. Another instance is the healing of the blind man by bathing in the pool under the directions of the Savior. Of course, he could not have received his sight by disobeying or any failure to comply with the directions that had been given him whereby he might receive his sight. So, not only in the Church, but in the family circle, there is need of obedience. If time permitted I think we might read with profit at this point, the second epistle of the Apostle Paul to his "son in the common faith," as he called Titus, but time will not permit. Let the Latter-day Saints read this scripture and read more of the scriptures, for I feel that there is great profit to us in so doing.

We are living in a time of commotion. We are still in the struggle of what has been called the "back-wash of the war." It is a time of unsettled conditions. The right of suffrage has been widely extended throughout the earth. There has come within the scope of governmental powers increased duties and increased powers, and men are trying to keep their bearings by fixing their gaze upon the land marks. I thank the Lord for the marks that we have in this latter-day revealed religion of ours; that we have been kept steady, just as an ex-secretary of state found during the war evidences of steadiness here among our people. We might now have fewer instances of suffering and more evidences that we are prepared to stand not only the shock of war but the shock of war's aftermath, if there had been more obedience. People have passed through a stressful time during the last few years. You people within the sound of my voice can testify to that, if not from personal experience, from the instances in the lives of your friends, some of whom have gone down in the financial struggle. I know of one instance of creditors pursuing their debtor, and after the struggle of the debtor had been so severe that he in the meridian of his life had been a victim of adverse circumstances, and had given his life as forfeit, the merciful creditor then greatly rejoiced. In speaking to me of it, he expressed great joy that he had exercised mercy and forbearance and had not contributed in any way to the untimely taking off of his brother. Some find themselves in the position they now are in as the result of disobedience, failure to hearken to the counsel of their stake presidents. I know of some neighborhoods where there is financial distress, and the people feel the pinch of indebtedness, just now as a result of failing to obey the caution given them by their respective stake presidents. I feel sure that the remedy has been offered for any little, or any considerable, inconvenience that the people may be passing through just now, if they will hearken to the voice of our prophet, seer and revelator. You are familiar with the story of the necessity for the cleaning up of a municipality in olden times, in order to properly receive certain guests; and the consideration by the municipal authorities as to how they could do it upon short notice. Someone suggested that each one clean in front of his own property. That is all we have to do, it seems to me, each one of us, whether we belong to the Church or not, each one to whom this message of the opening address of this conference comes, to be obedient, to give heed to the suggestions, and the distress and discomfort, if any exists, will surely disappear.

I rejoice in the blessings and truths of the gospel. I felt, as Elder Widtsoe gave his testimony at the opening of his speech this morning, that that would be my testimony, and I would like it as such, without taking your time more to repeat it. I would simply like to make his testimony and the testimony of others of the brethren whom we have listened to today, my testimony. I rejoice in the knowledge of the truth. I marvel as I read the scriptures at the evidences that have been given, line upon line, chapter upon chapter, section upon section, of the fact that Joseph Smith was indeed a prophet of God: that not only knowledge, but wisdom dwelt with him. Someone has given us the distinction between the two and said: "Knowledge dwells in heads replete with thoughts of other men: wisdom in minds attentive to their own. Knowledge is proud that it knows so much; wisdom is humble that it knows no more."

We can learn even from that people whose representatives were referred to by Elder Widtsoe. I have often admired the emphasis they place upon honoring parents. They have said that out of a hundred virtues, the first to be listed would be "filial piety," the honoring of parenthood; and they also said that "out of ten thousand evils, lewdness would be placed as the first," as the most offensive.

May the Lord bless us and help us to be obedient to the will of our Father, and to live according to the conditions upon which blessings are predicated, that we may be the happy recipients of the same, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

Elder Hart has asked you to read from the scripture. I thought I would do the same; and then while considering it, I believe that nine out of ten of you would not do it, so I am going to read an entire section of the Doctrine and Covenants: Remember this is the word of the Lord Almighty, a revelation from God to his people, the very first section in the Doctrine and Covenants:

Hearken. O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say, hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together.

For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated.

And the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed.

And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days.

And they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I, the Lord, have commanded them.

Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my preface unto the book of my commandments, which I have given them to publish unto you, O inhabitants of the earth.

Wherefore, fear and tremble, O ye people, for what I, the Lord, have decreed in them shall be fulfilled.

And verily, I say unto you, that they who go forth, bearing these tidings unto the inhabitants of the earth, to them is power given to seal both on earth and in heaven, the unbelieving and rebellious;

Yea, verily, to seal them up unto the day when the wrath of God shall be poured out upon the wicked without measure;

Unto the day when the Lord shall come to recompense unto every man according to his work, [not according to his profession, not according to his knowledge, not according to the testimonies he bears, but according to his work] and measure to every man according to the measure which he has measured to his fellow man.

Wherefore the voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all that will hear may hear:

Prepare ye, prepare ye for that which is to come, for the Lord is nigh;

And the anger of the Lord is kindled, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of the earth;

And the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles shall be cut off from among the people;

For they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant;

They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own God, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall.

Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments;

And also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; and all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets;

The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh,

But that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world;

That faith also might increase in the earth;

That mine everlasting covenants might be established;

That the fulness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers.

Behold, I am God and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding,

And inasmuch as they erred it might be made known:

And inasmuch as they sought wisdom they might be instructed:

And inasmuch as they sinned they might be chastened, that they might repent;

And inasmuch as they were humble they might be made strong, and blessed from on high, and receive knowledge from time to time:

And after having received the record of the Nephites, yea, even my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., might have power to translate through the mercy of God, by the power of God, the Book of Mormon;

And also those to whom these commandments were given, might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity and out of darkness, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually,

For I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance;

Nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven;

And he that repents not, from him shall be taken even the light which he has received, for my spirit shall not always strive with man, saith the Lord of Hosts.

And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh,

For I am no respecter of persons, and will that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the devil shall have power over his own dominion;

And also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world.

Search these commandments for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled.

What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself: and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same;

For behold, and lo, the Lord is God, and the Spirit beareth record, and the record is true, and the truth abideth for ever and ever. Amen.

A revelation from the Lord God to the Latter-day Saints.

Elder Melvin J. Ballard, the choir, and the congregation sang, "Who's on the Lord's side, who?"

Benediction was pronounced by Elder John A. Elison, President of the Raft River stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The meeting was opened at 2 o'clock by President Heber J. Grant, who announced that the choir and congregation would sing, "Do What is right, the day dawn is breaking."

After the singing, the opening prayer was offered by Elder Clarence Gardner, President of the Star Valley stake.

The choir and congregation sang, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah."

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

(President of the Southern States Mission)

To the man who communed with Jehovah was given a wonderful promise. The Lord said to him: "Thy people shall never be turned against thee by the testimony of traitors." This promise has been enjoyed, is enjoyed, and will be enjoyed by every president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; and with our leaders we will go on to victory, the victory which will win for us eternal life, growing up in all good things, perfected in doctrine, in Jesus Christ, our head.

It was a soul-thrilling message that our president delivered unto us yesterday morning. He stirred up our minds by way of remembrance to the divine mission of this Church: this mission is—"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." "Where there is no vision, the people perish." In this Church this vision is a broad and glowing light, and whenever we do not sense sufficiently our mission of preaching the gospel, it is a sign that our vision is dimming, and hence the necessity of prophets and apostles to remind us of our duties, and to make more clear this glorious vision which should always be before the eyes of every Latter-day Saint.

The testimony of Jesus Christ abides in this Church. Some of our young men may grow slack, seemingly indifferent; but sooner or later will come in their lives a great awakening. The testimony will flame up in their hearts in time of need. It may be that it will require the winds of opposition to make this flame spring up in their souls, but sooner or later, in their direst need, it will come to them; and this is a comfort and joy to the hearts of the Latter-day Saints. A young man laboring in the Georgia conference, several years ago, said he believed in the gospel, came on a mission because he felt it was his duty to come, but he could not say in his heart that he knew the gospel was the power of God unto salvation. After he had labored in the conference a couple of weeks, he and his companion were attacked by a mob. The mobocrats chased these young men for about two miles, and when the young man who said he had not a testimony, had outdistanced his pursuers, he faced about and, pointing his hand in the direction of the mob, said: "I know this gospel is true." Thus there came into that young man's soul the great awakening light.

The Church is the mother of men grown strong in giving. I believe that affiliation and adversity play an important part in our lives. I am reminded of the words of Alma, the Nephite prophet, in the thirty-second chapter of the book bearing his name. Some poor people came to him and declared that they had been cast out of their synagogues because of their exceeding poverty. Alma had the courage to give them the counsel they most needed. I believe it takes as much moral courage sometimes to teach the poor as it does to counsel the rich. These people were poor in this world's goods, and poor in spirit. God said: "Blessed are the poor in spirit who come unto me." Unto these poor in heart Alma said:

I say unto you, it is well that ye are cast out of your synagogues, that ye may be humble, and that ye may learn wisdom; for it is necessary that ye should learn wisdom; for it is because that ye are cast out, that ye are despised of your brethren, because of your exceeding poverty, that ye are brought to a lowliness of heart; for ye are necessarily brought to be humble, blessed are ye; for a man sometimes, if he is compelled to be humble, seeketh repentance; and now surely, whosoever repenteth, shall find mercy; and he that findeth mercy and endureth to the end, the same shall be saved. And now as I said unto you, that because ye were compelled to be humble, ye were blessed, do ye not suppose that they are more blessed who truly humble themselves because of the word."

Brethren and sisters, will future historians write the melancholy story that the Latter-day Saints were compelled to be humble? I don't think they will. I believe that, aside from afflictions, from prosperity, we should always humble ourselves because of the word, because we know that this gospel is the power of God unto salvation. This personal testimony that comes to our sons and daughters, this testimony that they receive when they are baptized, when eight years of age and receive the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands by the servants of God, this testimony is the secret and the reason for the steadfastness of the members of this Church. Against this testimony—which is the heritage of God's sons and daughters—the gates of hell shall never, no never, prevail. Amen.

ELDER NICHOLAS G. SMITH

(Late President of the South African Mission.)

What an inspiration it is to look upon this sea of faces, of people who have lived the gospel and who are striving to live it. What a joy it is, I say, to be here in your midst. I come as a foreigner. For eight years I have been in the South African mission. I remember when I was called to go there some of my friends said: "O, get it changed. Don't go down among the heathen," and I said to them: "But who am I that I can have my mission changed? I believe that the authorities of this Church are men called of God, and if they ask us to do anything it is from God himself, and who am I that I can tell the Lord that he does not want me in South Africa? These men who preside over the Church are God's servants and when they speak to us they speak with authority: and we have no right to suggest to them, or to the Lord, that he does not know where he wants us. Wonderful has been the manifestations of the Lord shown to me in that land. They said I was going down there among the heathen. How surprised I was to find out the laws and rules under which they live! When I came home I discovered that in some respects we are following in the footsteps of the heathen. I found when we landed in New York, that we wore just about as many clothes as the heathen did in South Africa (Laughter). They have some other customs that would be well for us to copy after, as well as this custom. They have a rule or law down there which compels all the stores to close down one-half day each week; and upon that half-day the populace go out, and they have their sports and their games. They have another law which compels every store, even the drug stores, to close upon the Sabbath day—down amongst the heathen, if you please; and there are no moving pictures there upon the Sabbath day. Why, I was preaching in one of the wards one evening when an ice-cream wagon came along, clanging its bell, and some of the folks went out and bought a cone—I suppose to keep themselves awake until I finished talking. But these things are not right to my mind—speaking as a foreigner, as one of the members of the Church who comes from a foreign country to Zion, to learn of uplifting laws and ways; why can't we, Latter-day Saints, see to it that the Sabbath day is honored and respected in our midst? Why, the law should go out of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Then why do we not have these rules in our own places of residence—right here in Zion? Another law they have down there: no one can buy fire-arms in that country who has not a permit from the magistrate; so that only loyal citizens are enabled to secure fire-arms. I never heard of a hold-up in that country all the while I was there. Think of it. Here in Zion, every time I pick up a paper, I read of dozens of them. Why is it? We might well copy after some of the laws and rules that the heathen have. Let me tell you, down there they have good laws, for it is one of the dominions of the British Empire, and the people make their own laws.

The Lord did not fail us in that mission, thank heaven. He sent a man down there in my place who is in very deed a servant of God, and now the way is opened up so more missionaries can go to South Africa. One of them has already arrived there, a young lad who went all the way to South Africa; he has been permitted to enter, and he is there now with President J. Wyley Sessions, who is presiding over that mission. And let me say to you, brethren and sisters, if you have a son who is called to that mission, rejoice in the fact, for he is down there with a man of God, and there is no better place to be in all the world.

By way of closing I desire to bear my testimony to you, to show you all how the Lord takes care of his own. You remember in that awful October when the "flu" came over the earth, we had it down there. My mother wrote me from Salt Lake City and said: "Son, nearly one hundred people have died here during October." In return I answered and said: "O mother, if only one hundred had died in a day how happy we would have been here; but it was one hundred, two hundred, three hundred, four hundred, five hundred in a day; and when a week had passed five thousand people had died in the city of Cape Town alone, which is about the size of Salt Lake City. When the second week had ended ten thousand people had been taken by the scourge."

Think of it, brethren and sisters; and yet here we complain because one hundred had died in a month. During this time of death and desolation, it crept into the mission house. Our elders went down with the dread disease. Only one besides myself was left upon his feet—Elder Aaron U. Merrill, a grandson of the late Apostle Merrill, of Cache valley. I said to Elder Merrill: "Are you prepared to go with me to bless the people?" He said: "I will go, President." Mind you, we saw children dragging their parents' coffins along the street. But soon the coffins were all gone, and then we saw forty and fifty bodies wrapped in sack-cloth, placed upon motor trucks and taken off to the cemetery and thrown into trenches. Some of our friends we carried away in bread wagons, others in wheel barrows, others were carried away on the shoulders of men. Death and desolation all about us! When it came, there were fifty-seven members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints who went down to their beds with this dread sickness. Elder Merrill and I went from door to door. Half of these people should have died, according to the rules of the game. The first door we came to we found a young woman, a girl, who had married a man outside the Church. We opened the door and walked in, because, mind you, people were unable to answer knocks. Some places they went into, they found as many as eight dead lying around in different rooms, some in the bed room, others out by the water, where they had been trying to get a drink, and where they had died. When this man saw us, he told us, in his delirium, to get out; but we refused. We got him on to the bed. We saw that he was dangerously ill. The doctor had been there just a little while before, and had said that both of them were dying. We administered to this young woman, according to the pattern which was set by our Lord and Savior, and which James tells us of; and the Lord raised her up. We went from house to house administering to the members of the Church who were sick with that dread disease, and the Lord raised up every one of them. Not one Latter-day Saint died in the city of Cape Town. One of the elders, Elder Charles Elmer Sessions from Kimberly, wrote to me and said: "President, the Lord has not refused to acknowledge a single one administration." Think of it, brethren and sisters. Why, we have God with us here, here in Zion. We have the Priesthood here. The miracles are not to be read about in only the scriptures. Christ did not perform the last one, nor his apostles; but he said that greater things than he did should we do; and we have that power here with us. Let us exercise our faith, to the end that we might raise even the dead; because I testify to you that I have seen the dead raised. God bless us here in Zion, help us to live the gospel and to follow in the foot-steps and take the advice of the leaders of this Church, is my prayer, in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER HEBER C. IVERSON

(President of the Northwestern States Mission)

I feel I can do no better during the brief moments I occupy this position than to add my humble testimony to the inspiring one to which we have just listened, concerning the spirit and power of the Almighty in the Church of Christ, wherein his authority is recognized and his blessing bestowed upon those who receive, through the ordinances of the gospel, the administration of the elders. I shall refer briefly to an incident of recent occurrence in my own home, in which, as many of my friends here know, Sister Iverson was seriously ill, and the manifestation of God's power on her behalf was marvelous in very deed. I think of it with unspeakable gratitude in my heart; but I shall pass to another incident even more striking than this one, though this was a marvelous manifestation of our Father's love and power in response to the prayers that were offered and the fast that was observed, not alone in the mission field but by the hundreds of kind, sympathetic friends here in Zion. To them we feel obligated and extend our sincere thanks and gratitude.

The incident I desire to refer to is an experience which came to a sister residing in Portland, the president of the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association, who, when set apart by President Melvin J. Ballard, shortly before I came into the mission, protested that she should not accept the position because of the state of her health. But by him she was promised, in a blessing given in connection with her setting apart, that if she would accept the position the Lord would give her sufficient strength to attend to the duties of this calling and the meetings of the organizations. Her testimony is that she has never absented herself from these meetings, notwithstanding she has made equally great efforts on other occasions to attend Sunday evening services, but often was unable so to do. Her health seemed to continue to fail her and last November her condition became serious, and grew rapidly more serious until June of the present year. In the meanwhile many eminent physicians were consulted, and lastly a clinic of specialists, the senior member of which is a very distinguished surgeon and physician, concerning whom the Mayos have said so long as they have him in the northwest, it is useless to send patients to Rochester. Under these specialists, she passed for examination from nine o'clock one morning until five in the afternoon, seven men having examined her, and the conclusions were that she was afflicted with cancer of the abdomen. I do not know the exact location, but every indication and every conclusion of these men was that she was suffering from cancer. Moreover I am told that she was also suffering from a dropping of the stomach and bowels. The growth in the abdomen was not only perceptible to the touch but plainly visible to the eye. When it was decided that she undergo an operation, after she had been administered to, about two weeks before her going to the hospital for this examination, and the decision was reached on the afternoon preceding the morning on which the operation was to be performed, word was sent out to the Saints and the elders, requesting that they meet in fasting and prayer on that particular morning. At nine o'clock in the morning she was placed upon the table, the anaesthetic was administered, and the surgeon rolled down the sheet and he was just about to make the incision when the abdomen, inflated highly as it was, deflated before his eyes. In perfect amazement he shook his head and said: "I have never seen anything like that before in my life. I can't understand it." He made a hasty examination which revealed nothing but normal conditions. He turned away and the nurses looked into each other's faces in astonishment. They too turned away. She was taken to her room, and when she regained consciousness she began to inquire as to why they had not operated. The nurses said: "We do not know. The physician said it was unnecessary." Shortly thereafter the physician appeared and she said: "Doctor, what is the reason you have not performed the operation?" He said: "Because I think it unnecessary, and I cannot tell you the reason why." She said: "I can. It is because the Lord has healed me in answer to the prayers offered by the members of the Church," and she bore her testimony to him.

He was a little fearful as to subsequent developments and desired she should remain there for two weeks for safety; but the following day she insisted that she return to her home. To him she said: "I am here on borrowed money. I am well. The Lord has made me well, and I desire to return to my home and children. If you do not believe I am well, you may call any physician you desire, or any number of nurses, and make a thorough examination, and if you decide I am not thoroughly healed and well, I shall remain as long as you desire me to." He said: "That is fair enough." They made a thorough examination, only to find that every organ of the body had resumed its normal position and condition, so to her he said: "Go home." Since that day she has enjoyed health that she never before enjoyed in her life. She looks ten years younger, has put on fifteen pounds of flesh and looks almost like a different being. The doctor said: "I cannot account for it," but I know, as she knows, that it was the power of the Lord in answer to the prayer of faith that healed this woman. I have heard upon several occasions, though I have not verified this statement, that to this circumstance the doctor has referred, while speaking to some of his professional associates, as the " 'Mormon' miracle."

I testify that the power of the Lord is in this Church, that he hears and answers prayers, that our Father rules on high; that his Son is the Redeemer of the world, that Joseph Smith is his prophet, and this is the Lord's work. This is my testimony in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

I am glad, my brethren and sisters, for the opportunity of attending this conference. My soul has been made to rejoice in listening to the splendid counsels that have been imparted, and in hearing the testimonies that have been delivered concerning the wonderful work of the Lord. It falls to my lot, at the present time, to labor in the California mission. California, as you all know, is a state of considerable renown. There are things transpiring there that perhaps do not occur anywhere else in the world, as far as I know. There are a great many people in California who are there for pleasure, who have come from other sections of the nation, and from other nations, in order to enjoy the wonderful climate of California, and to spend the money that they gathered together. It is a common thing in Southern California for Canadian people to hold a reunion, and people who are from New York, and from Iowa, and from Illinois, and practically all of the other states of the Union; they come together in large numbers. It is astonishing at times, to note the number who congregate in these various reunions from other nations and states in the United States. I do not know whether anything of this character is found elsewhere in the nation or not.

I think there is a general feeling that the people of California are not seeking for religion. Nevertheless, I am very happy to be able to report that there are many very excellent people in the State of California, and that many of them give the missionaries opportunity to expound the principles of the gospel which they have been sent to teach; and there are a few who are convinced of the truth of that message, who yield obedience to the doctrines and become identified with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. There are many people of our own faith who appear to be attracted to that state, and we are receiving hundreds of men and women who come from the various wards and stakes here in Zion to identify themselves with the branches of the Church that are located in California. We have some very excellent Latter-day Saints, just as good as can be found in any other part of the Church or in any other mission, men and women who are devoted to the service of the Lord, who feel that they are under obligation to live the principles of the gospel and to convince others, by the example they set, they have indeed received the truth; men and women who are that willing to give their time for the building up of the Church and for the strengthening of the organizations that have been effected in various parts of the mission. In fact, there is a spirit, in connection with missionary work, which seems to seize hold of many people who have been indifferent to their religious duties here in the wards at home, and they become aroused to the necessity of devoting a little of their time to the service of God and the advancement of his work. We have had the joy of seeing a good many who formerly have been quite careless and neglectful, turn their attention to the work of God and render special service in advancing our Master's interests. I am very glad to be able to report that we have a corps of missionaries who are interested in preaching the gospel, and who, notwithstanding they feel weak, are bearing testimony, to the truth as it has been revealed; and even in California, the power of God is made manifest.

Just a few weeks ago, a telephone message was received, answered by a young elder of just a few months' experience. A person desired to know if he could be administered to. He was not a member of the Church, but expressed a belief in the truths of the gospel as it has been taught by the missionaries. He was informed that if he had faith to believe that God, our Father in heaven, would hear and answer the prayers of his servants, there would be no objection to his coming to receive the healing ordinance. He came into the office on crutches, and two young boys, in the fear of God, anointed him with holy oil, and laid their hands upon him. They rebuked the trouble that had been preying upon him for a long period of time, and when the ordinance was completed and one of those elders took his crutches and offered them to the man, he looked up into his face, smiled, and said: "My brother, you don't know what has taken place. I am healed!" He walked from the building without his crutches; and, on the following day he accompanied the missionaries on a ten-block walk to show them the residence of a person they were seeking; and he has continued free from the ailment that held him down for a long time.

So that, God is in California, notwithstanding its pleasures, and the fact that there are tens of thousands of people who think little of him, and who are not seeking for religion. There are other men who love the Lord, who are willing to listen to the testimonies borne by his servants, who hearken to the doctrines that are expounded, who are going to believe by the power of God and the Holy Ghost that they come in contact with the truth, who have the courage, even in pleasure-seeking California, to cast their lot with the people of God, and to give of their time and their substance that the purposes of God may be accomplished.

In California, in this time of stress, we have asked the people to think of the missionaries. I would like to say to the fathers and mothers, here at home and in that mission, that Latter-day Saints have responded quite liberally and have contributed of their means, that others who were in distressed financial conditions might be aided, and possibly prevented from returning home. I am glad to say that we have missionaries today who are faithfully pursuing their labors, who have been preserved in the mission field by the faith and liberality of the Latter-day Saints who are in California; for, in every conference of the California mission, there are people who have contributed of their substance, that they might help the missionaries, that none of them should return home before their labors are completed. Of course, they have not been able to prevent some of the missionaries from returning; but they are helping, according to their substance, to provide for them.

I suppose it is natural, when one is engaged in missionary work, that he feels that the important thing, as announced in this conference, is the message that has been delivered by President Heber J. Grant in relation to missionary work. I hope fathers and mothers will take to their hearts the message as it has fallen from the lips of the prophet of the Lord. I think there is very great necessity for such a message. I have never before come in contact with a spirit like the spirit which prevails in some sections, at the present time—the spirit of the missionaries and some fathers and mothers, that they know when their sons and daughters should be released from the mission field. I have had considerable experience in the mission field and I have never before come in contact, in any other missionary labor, with a spirit of this sort. I know what my own feelings were and the feelings of my companions, in my early missionary experience. Why, we would have died in the mission field before we would have suggested to the mission president that we ought to be released to return home. I myself have recommended men to be released because of ill health, when I have had fear in my heart that they would lay their bodies down in a foreign land, and they have pleaded, in tears, that they might be permitted to remain in the mission field. They had an absolute feeling of opposition to such a release, and a determination to remain and fulfil the mission to which they had been appointed. I have had men, right on this temple block, almost command me as the president of the California mission, to release their sons to return home. I have received letters from fathers, from various sections, intimating that they will no longer provide the means to sustain their sons in the mission field. I recognize the fact that we do live in strenuous times, that fathers and mothers are having great difficulty to provide the necessary means to meet the expenses of their missionary sons and daughters, but I do not believe that it is the right or the prerogative of any father to write to the mission president demanding the release of his son or daughter. I believe the proper course to pursue is to confer with the authorities at home, those who know the conditions and circumstances, and if it be necessary for them to be called from the missionary field, let them be called because of recommendations that have been made by the bishops, or stake presidents, who are familiar with all the circumstances. There is no desire to hold men in the missionary field to the injury of fathers and mothers; but there is a desire, a strong desire, that when the Lord God Almighty has touched the souls of young men, has made them know the truth, and has fired them with a desire to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, they shall be given the opportunity, and not be called home to their sorrow and disappointment, and to the weakening of their own faith. I would that the men of Israel might sense the obligation that rests upon them in relation to the preaching of the gospel. It is not only the call of the president of the Church, but, as he quoted from the Scriptures, it is the call of God. He that is warned, let him warn his neighbor. When I think of the great hosts of men who have been specially ordained as witnesses of the Lord, Jesus Christ, men of power, men of experience, men of capacity, and not one of them in the missionary field, I do not think that a very extravagant statement.

There are only boys in the mission field, boys in their teens. You men of thirty years of age, forty years of age, filled with physical power, and the power of God, is there not responsibility upon you in relation to the preaching of the gospel? I think there is, and I think it ought to be possible, in the midst of the hosts of men who have this experience and ability, for a few of them to be standing by the side of the boys and girls who manifest their faith and their willingness to preach the gospel of the Redeemer. I thank God that notwithstanding their feeling of weakness, wonderful development takes place among these young men and women. I thank God that the boys and girls in the mission field have been made to know the truth of the gospel just as thoroughly as their fathers and mothers know it, by the experience that has come to them as preachers of righteousness. We ask for help, I wonder if there is any mission president who could say, when one of his missionaries found financial difficulty, that a bishop has felt that responsibility was upon the community that he represented, and that the people have been called upon to contribute a little of their means, that their boy or girl might preach the gospel? There are many of that kind, I fear, but I believe this responsibility is upon every ward, and upon every stake; and that, notwithstanding financial stress, there are means in the land to provide for missionaries, if the people have the disposition. I think this disposition should be cultivated, that the gospel message might be carried to the people, that repentance may be called among the people, and men and women may be invited to the waters of baptism, to receive, by the holy ordinance, the remission of their sins, and by the laying on of hands, be brought in communication with the Holy Ghost and receive from God our Father a knowledge of the truth as it has been revealed.

That is your business just as much as it is my business. I happen to be in the mission field today; it may be your turn tomorrow. All of us should be lending assistance, that our skirts may be free from the blood of our fellow men. I thank God for the gospel. I rejoice in preaching it. I am glad to be a missionary. I am proud of my associates. I am glad to bring to fathers and mothers the glad news that their sons and daughters love the truth, and that they comprehend, measurably, the great plan of salvation. I bear record to the work of God, to the power of God. I bear record of the truth of the promises of God, in relation to the development of his purposes and the triumph of his work. God help us all to do this, for ever and for ever, and be found at the post of duty by night and by day, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A duet, entitled, "Glory Forever," was sung by Emily Grant Young and Elma Young, violin obligato by Willard Weihe, with Tracy Y. Cannon at the organ.

ELDER JUNIUS F. WELLS

(Assistant Church Historian.)

I esteem it a very high privilege to mingle my voice with the voices of my brethren, in declaring the kingdom of God and his righteousness before the great congregations of his people. I esteem it a very great privilege to be present at this conference, the first I have attended since President Grant succeeded to the presidency of the Church. I rejoice in seeing the manifestation of the spirit and power of his high office resting upon him, as I have witnessed it resting upon all of his predecessors, except Joseph Smith, the prophet, whom I did not know. I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, in the progress of the work of the Lord. I recall fifty years ago sitting in this house listening to that great prophet and apostle of our Lord Jesus Christ, Elder Orson Pratt. Upon that occasion he told of his conversion to the gospel at the age of nineteen, immediately after which he set out afoot, on a journey of between two hundred and three hundred miles, that he might visit Joseph Smith and gaze upon the face of that remarkable man. He was satisfied, when he did so, that he stood in the presence of a prophet of God, and he received the ministry of that prophet. He was called immediately into the service of the Lord and the prophet told him that it was his destiny to be a preacher of the gospel; that the time should come—this was only five months after the organization of the church, in 1830—when twelve apostles should be chosen such as there had been in the days of Christ, and that he should be one of them. This astonished Elder Pratt, beyond measure, but he lived to realize the fulfilment of that prophecy, within five years, in 1835, when the apostles' quorum was organized. I recall upon the occasion of this wonderful discourse that Elder Pratt expressed his happiness and joy in the great progress that the work of the Lord had made up to that time. He foretold, in quoting from the scriptures, from the prophets and from the Psalms, the time when the fulness of times of the gentiles should come in. He still declared, after preaching for forty years, ever since the organization of the Church, that the time was coming and should be fulfilled within the generation in which the Church was organized. He did not pretend to say just how soon it should be fulfilled, but he said: "Forty years have passed since we commenced to declare that this time was approaching. I do not know that I shall live to see the fulfilment of the prophecy concerning it, when the ambassadors of the Church, the elders, shall go forth, not so particularly to the gentiles, but shall turn from them and go forth particularly to declare the word of the Lord to the Jews and to the descendants of Jacob, others of the house of Israel. That time is coming, he said, when there shall come forth from God a direct commandment to His servants that they should carry this message to the house of Israel, and, that they should go swiftly. They should be welcome when they then go in their ministry. He said that hundreds would receive them, and thousands and tens of thousands would welcome them for they should go in power: "In the day of my power, saith the Lord, my people shall welcome me." He pointed to the young men who were assembled in the congregation. I happened to be one of them, and it seemed to me that he was pointing at me. Anyway, I was thrilled to the marrow of my bones, for he said: "You young men, who are sitting before me, will see the fulfilment of the times of the gentiles, when this message shall be taken to all the house of Israel. The responsibility of carrying it rests upon you, and God will require it at your hands." A year after that, very much to my surprise, I was called to go on a mission. I was but a boy, and I desired to go to college instead; but my father said he could not send me to college, and proposed that I should go on a mission. I said: "Very well, I will go, get through with my mission, come home and go to college on my own account." He placed his hands on my shoulders and said: "You will never get through going on a mission, not as long as you are a Latter-day Saint." That seemed a hard saying. Instead of then giving me two or three hours' instruction he said: "Get the spirit of your mission. Don't know too much but believe all you can. I guess I needed that. I had not been in my field of labor, in old England, more than a few weeks when I obtained the spirit of my mission; then I understood what my father meant, and I declare to you, my brethren and sisters, that from the moment I received the testimony of my mission, of my calling in the priesthood, and of my right to speak in the name of the Lord to my fellow creatures, it has been inconceivable down to the present moment when I should not be a missionary—in one fashion or another. I believe I have been, sometimes not very useful, but at other times perhaps more so, in different ways engaged in promulgating this work now for fifty years, and I thank God for it with all my soul, that I have been, in His mercy and providence, thought fit to perform some part in carrying on this great work.

I rejoice in the greatness of this work, in the prosperity of this people, in the approach of that condition of power that its message will be welcome throughout the length and breadth of the earth, when it shall be carried as it has never been carried before, when it shall be taken on swift wings, through the clouds, on the wings of the wind. I was telling a Catholic priest the other day that some of those angels the Apostle John saw flying in the midst of heaven, did not have feathers; but they were in flying machines, and that we Latter-day Saints expected to carry the gospel like the angels sung of by the prophets of old, to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, flying with the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell upon the earth. I have seen that partly fulfilled already in watching President George Albert Smith and his son soar up from the Hangar in Brussels and fly away to London in an aeroplane—angels, ambassadors of the Lord, having the gospel of Jesus Christ to preach to them that dwell in Great Britain. We will send many of our missionaries that way, in the time of many of you, young men.

I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, in the testimony the Lord has given me. I know that his power, that his Priesthood is upon the earth and that we who bear it have a message that mankind stands in dire need of. There is no salvation outside of the ministry of the Church of Jesus Christ to the children of men, and no other people possess it, but this people, to whom it was given through the ministry of Joseph Smith the prophet.

May God help us to be worthy and stand firmly, and assist in promulgating the truth, to the salvation of our fellow creatures, is my humble prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RULON S. WELLS

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

When I look out over this vast congregation of men and women, I am deeply impressed with the benefits, as well as the obligations, that come to us by reason of that wonderful association which we have with one another. I am also led to reflect that with every association that we form there will come certain obligations and we may derive certain benefits. When our father Adam was placed in the garden of Eden, he was there alone. He formed no association with other men, for there were none, but he stood alone. Under conditions of that kind, isolated as he was, it became his solemn duty to make of himself a splendid and suitable companion. This everyone can do when he becomes isolated, by the development of holy meditation, by keeping himself clean and unspotted from sin, by being worthy, by taking proper care of himself, both bodily and spiritually. But the Lord saw that it was not good for man to be alone and he gave Eve unto Adam to be his wife, and thus a new association was formed, and with that association came additional benefits and likewise additional obligations, the obligation of husband to wife and wife to husband. When children came, a new and enlarged association was formed and with it came the additional benefits of the family organization, and also the obligation of father and mother to their children and the obligations of the children to their father and to their mother. It is then incumbent upon all who form this family association that they shall discharge with fidelity the obligations resting upon them in order that they may receive the benefits that come by reason of it.

So it is with every association that we form and there are many of them. There are business associations, co-partnerships, joint stock institutions, and whenever such associations are formed they likewise have their obligations and benefits, and it becomes incumbent upon all to discharge, with fidelity and with honor, those obligations and thereby reap the benefits. Human beings, essentially social in their nature, continue to enlarge the scope of their association and form themselves into civil governments. All nations, kindreds, tongues and peoples together with their subdivisions into states, counties, municipalities constitute such associations, some better than others, because they are better governed or organized under better laws than others, but responsibilities and obligations come to each member of such association commensurate with the amount of power or influence that the individual member of that association exercises and can or is permitted to exercise for the benefit of those with whom he is associated.

In a despotism, an absolute monarchy, where the king rules, and the people only submit, great is the obligation of the king, but the individual citizen's obligation is correspondingly less. In our own government, where the people rule, each individual citizen is a ruler in the nation and great is his responsibility; great are the obligations that rest upon him by reason of that citizenship, for he himself is a ruler, a sovereign, and helps to form and fashion the government of which he is one of its rulers. If we have good government it is because the individual citizens are good. If we have a bad government it is because the individual citizens are bad. That applies not only to the nation at large, but to the state, to the county and to the city.

In this great republic, where all just powers are derived from the consent of the governed, how great is the responsibility of the individual citizen. How we ought to discharge, with fidelity, the obligations incumbent upon us as citizens! No citizen of this republic has the right to find fault with his government, unless he has exercised his power and his rights as one of those citizens, endeavoring to make the government what it ought to be. No citizen who has not exercised this power has the right to blame the sheriff or the mayor or the governor or any other officer of the state if, perchance, the laws of his state are not being enforced within the state or the county or the city in which he lives, for it is his own fault and he can blame no other; but when he has done his part, then he can be justified, and not otherwise.

What a wonderful privilege it is to be a citizen of a republic where every citizen has an equal right. He should then exercise the same for the welfare and exaltation of the people. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Sin should not be permitted to go rampant when it is a violation of law, and every good citizen will see that he does his part to have wholesome laws passed, and that they are executed and administered as they should be, in the spirit of right and in opposition to wrong. When we read in our newspaper files of the gross transgression of law all over the land, the people violating the provisions of the Constitution, which we believe has been inspired of God, how our hearts must be filled with indignation against this wanton violation of law. When we see such wholesome legislation, as the law prohibiting the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquor, wantonly being violated, and how many officers there are who perhaps are not in sympathy with the law or, what is worse, corrupted by the bribes of the law breakers, wink at such violations, how humiliated we must feel when we realize that these are the men whom we have chosen to execute the laws, and we are therefore ourselves to blame. Indifference to politics, neglect to attend primaries, apathy in matters of such vital importance as the government for which we are directly responsible, will not exonerate us from this blame.

There is another association to which I desire to call your attention, a still grander and greater one than those which form the nations of the earth. It is all-embracing in its scope. It is the Church and kingdom of God; and in looking out upon this congregation, made up of men and women coming from every nation under heaven, formed under a supreme law, the perfect law of liberty, the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, designed to exalt the children of God, to liberate them from the bondage of sin, governed by the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, the only plan by which men and women can be brought in harmony with the will of their Creator, how my heart thrills with joy and my bosom swells with pride to feel that I am a member of it. Then I think of the obligations; and Oh, how great the benefits! Our obligations to God; the Giver of all good, a life of devotion and obedience to his law; our obligations to one another as members of this great association; a life of honesty and integrity, of virtue, of brotherly love; our obligation to ourselves, to keep ourselves clean and unspotted from the sins of the world. In short, the obligations of this Association are so all-embracing that they include within them all the obligations of every proper association which we may form, and preclude our membership in any other.

Those who faithfully discharge the obligation of this association will incidentally fulfil those of all the rest, the obligations of husbands and wives, of parents, and children, business obligations, and the obligations of citizenship. Unfaithful husbands and wives are not good members of the Church. Parents who fail to teach their children, both by precept and example, are not good members. Men and women who violate the laws of their country, state and city, and especially officers who wink at such violation, or who conspire or join in their violation are not only not good citizens, but they are likewise not good Latter-day Saints. Not only is it an obligation to lead a clean and virtuous life, an honest and moral life in our association as members of the Church, but also in every other association. No man is a good citizen if he leads an immoral life. No officer is a good citizen who winks at and condones the violations of law. Such men may be found who will cry themselves hoarse in lauding the "Stars and Stripes," and prate about the Constitution and the principles of human liberty, and are frequently found at the primaries and conventions seeking nominations to public office, but if they are unclean they are not good citizens. "When the wicked rule the people mourn." Hence the obligation to choose good men and wise men for places of public trust.

Many and great are the blessings to be derived from our association in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but they may only be realized when we fulfil the obligations in connection therewith, the obligations of faith in God and repentance from sin, the works of obedience to the law of the gospel. Then shall we be cleansed from sin in the blood of the Lamb of God, then shall we be enlightened by his Holy Spirit, then shall we grow in the knowledge of God and good works day by day, and finally receive the crown of life which the Lord has promised to them that love him, even "Eternal Life,"

God's greatest gift to his faithful sons and daughters. May they all be yours, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, the Lord. Amen.

ELDER J. GOLDEN KIMBALL

(Of the First Council of Seventy.)

During our two day's conference I have listened with a great deal of interest to what our brethren have said to us. My mind has been very active during the conference, and I have thought about a great many wonderful things, to me, that might sound very flat to you; but for some reason, this afternoon, I feel like a fellow who had run entirely out of material, having exhausted the material that I had, in thought. I think of what Elbert Hubbard said. It struck me rather strangely the other day. He said: "If you are going to reform the world you had better begin with yourself, and there will be one rogue less in the world." Of course, I did not want to apply that to myself, but I would not object to applying it to you.

Now, brethren and sisters, I shall address you for a short period of time, only a few minutes—although it seems a long time to you, and does to me; it certainly will before I get through. My voice has been heard among this people for nearly thirty years. I think I have been in the ministry here at home for nearly that length of time. I would not give my experience and the association I have had with the brethren of the authorities for all the riches in the world. I hope, brethren and sisters, that during these thirty years, I have created an impression in your minds—at least I have tried to do that—that I am trying to be honest. I am trying to be truthful. I am trying to be sincere and loyal and unafraid. There is nothing that I desire more, outside of the Spirit of God and the honoring of the Priesthood and the sustaining of this work, than to have an honest mind. It seems to me during the past few years that the minds of many are warped. We do not think honest; we do not hear straight, nor do we see straight. I am sure, from the experience I have had in the Church, that the Lord can do very little for a man who persists in being dishonest and untruthful; and, of course, it goes without saying that no man or woman in the Church of Jesus Christ can be immoral, and have the Spirit of God to be with them. I read in the Doctrine and Covenants the message that was given to the elders in early days. The Lord said: "But with some I am not well pleased." Now, what was their trouble? "Because they will not open their mouths but hide the talent which I have given unto them, because of the fear of man. Woe unto such, for mine anger is kindled against them, and it shall come to pass if they are not more faithful unto me it shall be taken away even that which they have." I realize, my brethren and sisters, that, during the past thirty years I may have said some foolish things. I have, in my own way, given the people a good deal of chaff to get them to take a little wheat, but some of them haven't got sense enough to pick the wheat out from the chaff. If a man in this Church ever does say a foolish thing, they will remember it to the very day of their death: and it is the only thing some of them do remember. I think they do mighty well to remember that. .

I find out some things by reading the Doctrine and Covenants—which, by the way, I do read. I am familiar with the Bible, a little, and the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price. I have wished, sometimes, that there would be a big fire and burn all the rest of the books so that we would read these books more. Sometimes I feel that a man ought to be imprisoned for writing any more books; because I got my experience mostly by reading the books which contain the revelations of the Lord. I got my first experience in the Southern states in two years, and I read the Bible; I read the Book of Mormon; and I read the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price. I don't believe the man lives, unless God inspires him, who can ever breathe into a book what you can get out of the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants and Pearl of Great Price. That is my testimony. Joseph Smith said that a man will live nearer to the gospel of Christ reading the Book of Mormon than any other book that has ever been written. I want to say to the Latter-day Saints that according to my judgment and experience—I am old enough to know a few things, and I am old enough to remember some things—some of the greatest inspired men we have ever had in the history of this Church have been men who have read the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price. Now, brethren, I do not want to say anything to hurt anyone's feelings about books that are written. I read the Bible through once, and when I got through I said: "I will never tackle it again in the flesh;" but I have read in it, and I am acquainted with it, and I have marked it. I would not give my Bible for all the Bibles in the world, because it is the only Bible I can find anything in.

The first council ordained one thousand and forty seventies last year. The Lord has said in the Doctrine and Covenants: "There are many called and few are chosen." As I said, there were one thousand and forty seventies ordained last year; and why are they not chosen? The Lord gives us the answer clear and plain. I am glad he talks plainly. Why are they not chosen? "Because their hearts are so much set upon the things of the world, and they aspire to the honors of men." They would break their blamed necks to get an office in the state or in the nation. I haven't heard of anyone breaking his neck to go on a mission—not lately. Now brethren, I know what the trouble is. You remember not very long ago that Brother Hyrum M. Smith, when he presided over the European mission, sent word to us and gave the sign of distress, like all these mission presidents are doing now. He wanted one hundred capable, efficient, competent men—just what they need in every mission in the world. So the First Council started out to get them. We made a thorough canvas, and we never dreamed but what we could get one hundred out of the councils of quorums, the presidents of seventies, without any trouble at all. We interviewed those seventies by the hundreds, personally interviewed them, looked them in the face, and we never found one single president that was not willing to go, not one that I remember, but when we looked into their financial affairs they could not go. They seemed to be alright spiritually, but it was their financial troubles. That is the trouble now.

I believe in all that President Grant said. I preached it years ago, after I went broke, with just as much vehemence as he ever did in his life. I preached until I was almost exhausted. I remember a sermon. I think it was a very wonderful discourse, too. I was up in Smithfield at a conference, and I preached to the people on the subject of debt. I had just been through the mill of the gods, and they ground me to powder. I went "over the hill to the poor house," and I think I was able to tell them a pathetic story; they sold me out, just like they would sell cattle; and yet I was in the missionary field at that. I told my story, and told it very plaintively; and there was a salesman at this meeting. I saw him the other day at one of our conference meetings. That made me think of it. He was a salesman of the Co-operative Wagon and Machine Company. After I preached my discourse I met this man and he said: "Brother Kimball, that is the best sermon I ever heard. I never sold as many implements in my life as I did after you preached that sermon." After I had warned the people and forewarned them, that to be in debt was to be in hell—I don't know anything about hell, but that is the worst hell I have ever been in—to be in debt. I can tell you how you can keep out of debt; but I can't tell you how to get out after you get in. I had a man come to me the other day who wanted me to indorse his note. I had sworn, almost on an oath, I would never sign another note, not even for my wife. But he looked at me so pitifully, and was in such dire distress, and I had so much confidence in him, that I told him I would sign it, although I was quite sure I could not pay it if he did not. He applied at one of our banks. They did not know me, for which I was very thankful. I went to the bank and looked the man in the face. He said: "Mr. Kimball, haven't you got any collaterals?" I said: "Collaterals—I should say not! I haven't got a collateral of any kind." He said, "How do you expect me to take your indorsement?" I replied, "On my looks and general character. That is all I have got." And he turned me down; and I have been tickled to death ever since. That is the way to keep out of debt.

I thought I would like to read some scripture as a closing of my remarks: I am sure I can make it in two minutes. It is something my father read, in reading from his old Book of Mormon, that was published or printed in 1830. I found this page worn almost out, and I wondered what it was. This is what I found. It was just such a condition that we are now in. They had had war, and they had had famine, and then they went to the prophet and appealed to the Lord, so that the famine was withdrawn, and it says: "That ended the eighty and fifth year." In thirteen years that people fell down two or three times, and yet they were God's people. This is what he said. I want to read it to you and impress you, if I can, with this one thought: "And thus we can behold how false and also the unsteadiness of the hearts of the children of men; yea, we can see the Lord in his great infinite goodness doth bless and prosper those who put their trust in him. Yea, and we may see at the very time when he doth prosper his people, yea, in the increase of their fields, their flocks and their herds, and in gold, and in silver, and in all manner of precious things of every kind and art; sparing their lives, and delivering them out of the hands of their enemies; softening the hearts of their enemies that they should not declare wars against them; yea, and in fine, doing all things for the welfare and happiness of his people; yea, then is the time,"—Now that strikes me as a strange thing. After God has done all that for his children, and it could not be written any better if it was written of this people, how God had blessed them—"then is the time that they do harden their hearts, and do forget the Lord their God and do trample under their feet the Holy One—yea, and this because of their ease, and their exceedingly great prosperity.

"And thus we see that except the Lord doth chasten his people with many afflictions, yea, except he doth visit them with death and with terror and with famine and with all manner of pestilence, they will not remember him."

We are just like all other children of God, in all other dispensations. Notwithstanding the fact that we are a chosen people, for a special purpose, our hearts have been hardened and we have forgotten our God—some of us. Now, brethren, I think you will have no trouble in getting out of debt. At least you can get out as well as I have.

Now, brethren and sisters, I am glad; I thank my God that he chastened me. I thank God that I have had the love and affection of my brethren. I thank God that I am alive. I know the gospel is true. I know it because I learned it through adversity and through suffering and through hardships. I never learned it because I was Heber C. Kimball's son, because I was the son of a prophet. I learned it just as he learned it. I may not have paid as big a price as my father did, but I paid for pretty nearly everything I have. I paid well for it, but I am satisfied. I sustain the brethren of the authorities, and I uphold their hands. I never felt better in all my ministry in this Church than I do today. I thank God the sun shines. I thank God the grass is green, and the water runs down hill; as it did not for a long while. Now the Lord bless you. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang, "Redeemer of Israel," and Conference adjourned until 10 o'clock, a. m., Sunday, October 9. The closing prayer was offered by Elder C. Alvin Orme, President of the Tooele stake of Zion.

THIRD DAY

On Sunday morning, October 9, at 10 o'clock, the Conference continued, the Tabernacle being filled to its full capacity, every seat and isle being occupied, and hundreds were standing by the doors; besides, there were crowded overflow meetings at the Assembly Hall and the Bureau of Information. President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choir and congregation sang, "Come, come, ye Saints."

Prayer was offered by Elder William N. Patten, President of the Lost River stake of Zion.

The choir sang the hymn, "When dark and drear the skies appear," words by Emily Hill Woodmansee, and music by Professor Joseph J. Daynes, former Tabernacle organist.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I really believe that this is the largest gathering I have ever seen in this Tabernacle of a Sunday morning. I am told that the Assembly Hall is full and running over, and that there are several hundred people still standing up. It will therefore be necessary to hold an overflow meeting.

In announcing the hymn, "When dark and drear the skies appear," President Grant remarked: The words of this very splendid hymn are by Sister Emily Hill Woodmansee, the music by our late organist, Joseph J. Daynes. No person that I ever knew, lived more perfectly in keeping with these beautiful words than the good sister who wrote them. She came to this country, dragging a hand cart all the way from the Missouri River to the Salt Lake Valley. She lived and died one of the true and faithful Latter-day Saints. She has written some of the most inspiring of the many inspiring hymns that we have in our hymn book.

ELDER CHARLES W. NIBLEY

(Presiding Bishop of the Church)

Well may we sing "Providence is over all." Who is there that can doubt that the hand of Providence governs and directs in the affairs of this great Nation of which we form a part? Is there any one of us who can doubt, that the hand of the Lord is over all the nations of the earth, that they all are his children, and that he has care for them all? Is there any one of us who has any doubt, looking at this vast congregation, that the Lord is with us? The incentive, the motive, that brings these semi-annual gatherings, is a testimony, an evidence to us that the Lord is still with his people. It has been remarked during this conference that there never was a time when there was more evidence of the Spirit of the Lord in the hearts of the people in respect to matters spiritual—temple work, priesthood work, the desire to perform the labors that the priesthood are called upon to perform—than there is now among the people. The Lord is operating through his Spirit in the hearts of this body of priesthood, the priesthood of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in a most marvelous manner. Truly, I thought, as I came into this building this morning: "This is a marvelous work." It is a wonder to me to see this large body of men; for, where we go in Church association, and congregations generally, outside of this Church, the great majority, so far as I have been able to observe, are women who take a most active part—and the Lord blesses them for doing it—but here we have not only our sisters, who take a most wonderful and splendid part in the activities of the Church, but we have such a crowd of men here, good men, able men, men who want to do right, men who are doing right, clean men, and trying to keep the commandments of the Lord. It is wonderful to me. How does it all come about? Whose power is it that does this, that accomplishes this? Is it the power of man? No, it is the power of the Almighty God, the power that resides in the priesthood of the Church. The power of the Lord has truly always been over the nation. The nations are in his hands. When he undertakes to break down this power or the other, it is easy for him to do it. When he with-draws his spirit from the children of men they are left to themselves, and we see it. We can go through history and see instances, repeatedly, where the people have been left to themselves, through their wickedness, and they have gone into unbelief and darkness, and have dwindled away. He says in the revelations, in the last days, that he would finally withdraw his spirit from the people of the world if they did not repent and follow him. And woe be unto the people when that Spirit, which overrules for good, has been withdrawn from them, for that is the life-giving power. It is that Spirit that formed this government and gave us our Constitution. The Lord raised up wise men, he said, wise men for that very purpose. It was the Spirit of the Lord, making for liberty, that operated in the heart of a Martin Luther, of an Oliver Cromwell, and men of that character, who received a great portion of the Spirit of the Lord to direct them in their efforts; and Providence was over all.

The Lord has operated through them but in this body of priesthood he has told us that he would give unto us more power, the power of Priesthood, more power than he had given to men who are not ordained to this Priesthood. What is this power, what is this influence that causes them to operate in their activities in the Church in the way that they do, so that for one thing they have not a beggar—not a beggar in all the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, so far as we know, in any part of the world, certainly not one here in Zion; that is something to be noted—What is it that causes these sisters to sacrifice as they do of their time and of their means, to give their efforts for the betterment of their neighbors and their friends, for the uplifting of the people? It is the power and spirit of the Priesthood which they partake of; for, let it be said that while our sisters are not ordained to the Priesthood, yet we might just as well remember, we lords of creation, that we never can attain to exaltation in the Kingdom of God, not one of us, without our wives. It does not matter whether he is a president of the Church or what office he holds, or how great his Priesthood or calling: “The man is not without the woman in the Lord,” in the Church, in the Kingdom of God. He can’t be redeemed or exalted in the presence of God without his wife; so they partake of this honor, of this majesty, this power in this wonderful organization. Nothing like it, nothing can be thought of like it in the world, where there is such a union, men and women operating together, everyone members of the Church, everyone having a voice and a vote—the most democratic organization in all the world because everyone has that power: and, let me say, while the hand of the Lord is over all the nations of the world, yet the special power and the evidence of it that he would give to this people, and something more than he had ever given to any other people, is before us.

I read from the 84th Section of the Doctrine of Covenants; “And this greater Priesthood administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God;” and this is life eternal, to know him, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. “And this greater Priesthood administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God. Therefore, in the ordinances thereof, the power of godliness is manifest and without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the Priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh.” That is the word of the Lord. That is what we have. That is what the Lord has given us. I do not need to ask Latter-day Saints, which is the way? They are not groping blindly for the way of life, for the path that leadeth to eternal life. They have found it. They know it. They have it. In the world, where they have not this knowledge of God, nor the key of it, nor the power that goes with it, they are more or less groping for the way. They have lost the way; they are feeling their way, doing good, no doubt, many, many millions trying to do good, and will do good, seeking the way of life, and yet, sometimes, when the truth is placed before even those who are good people and doing good, as was remarked here the other day, they cannot accept it because the sacrifice seems too great.

But this is certain, everyone that seeketh, findeth; "If you truly seek, ye shall surely find." The Lord has decreed it, and, as we are told in the Book of Mormon, there is a promise held out, that if you seek with real intent, with an earnest desire to know of the truth, you can find it; and no man or woman who has ever put that matter to the test but what has been able to come to a realization and finally to a knowledge that this is the work of God, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in very deed.

Now, my brethren and sisters, I testify of it. I know that the power of godliness, as I have read here from this book, is manifested in this Church, and without this Priesthood, and without the ordinances of the gospel, and the authority of it, the power of godliness is not manifest to men in the flesh, and never will be. It is something to be proud of and to rejoice over. I bear testimony to you once again that the Lord is at the head, the Lord our God is giving direction and guidance to this Church and people, through his appointed servants whom he has called, whom he has brought to their present positions. They did not do it themselves, not by a long way, nor would they for a moment attempt to claim it. They never did and never will; but the Lord has done it. It is marvelous in our sight. It is a wonder how he operates and guides and directs in all the activities of the Church.

God bless you, my brethren and sisters, in this work. God bless our liberty-loving nation. It stands for liberty, after all. God bless every influence and power in every church, in every association, in every organization in the world, that makes for liberty and righteousness, peace on earth and good-will to all men. May the Lord help them, too; but in this Church, in this organization, where He acknowledges this Priesthood, this special gift, this special power, where the power of godliness is manifested through it; and without it—so says the Lord, not I—the Lord says that without this Priesthood and the ordinances that go with it, the ordinances of the gospel, the power of godliness is not manifest to men in the flesh. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

My Brethren and Sisters: This conference has been one of inspiring testimonies of God's work in the earth to redeem his children. With you, I feel to dedicate my life to better service among my fellow men for the cause of the Master. Service may be rendered in our daily activities of life, and though we feel at times how prosaic our duties are, yet with the Spirit of God with us, our words and deeds may radiate new life and hope to those with whom we come in contact. Life is a way of strenuous duty, but when we have been thrilled with Christ's love, we do not think of self, but the good of all humanity is our aim. You recall that St. Luke tells us in exquisite words how the shepherds returned to their flocks after they had heard the angels' song, and had seen the Christ-child in the manger. Though they had seen the Redeemer and had partaken of his spirit, they returned to their daily duties with hearts full of sweetness and light, and were thankful for their powers to perform their daily work and duties with an eye single to God's glory.

I was very much impressed with the words of Bishop Charles W. Nibley this morning. They contained much food for thought. They suggested to me a very important question for us all to think about: "Is the world to the point of a moral collapse?" This question, though one of large proportions, should be of interest to every one who has an interest in life. I am an optimist, and know full well that every child of God has more good in him than bad, but I have come to believe that mankind is suffering for the want of spiritual light, and that old standards of morality are fading away. The Christian sects today are teaching many false doctrines in the name of the Master; and our universities and schools are giving foolish theories in the name of truth. Much of our teaching has become nothing but a suppression of the powers of the individual child to live; and the planting in his heart of false conceptions of life. Today, our teaching has become mechanized; and much of our education reminds me of a "Tibetan prayer-wheel, busily turning, but barren of purpose." Teachers today are following an old time groove: they are traveling in a rut, and their words are barren of spiritual life and inspiration. I have a right to speak thus, for I am a teacher, and I realize something of our faults. It is due largely to the lack of spiritualizing of our children in the schools and churches that the world is lacking in high standards of morals. Our methods of teaching are wrong, because we are wanting in knowledge and spiritual insight into humanity's heart. Our schools and churches must be revolutionized and made to come into the new age in standards and in a knowledge of God's purposes.

Last evening, I had the pleasure of listening to our friend, Dr. Schwartz. He made a plea for Russia and the Russian people. Not only Russia, but all the nations of Europe need help, for their people are starving. They need not only bread; but they are in sore need of the "bread of life," for they have strayed from the teachings of Christ, the Master. I wish to say to Dr. Schwartz and his people that the gospel of Christ Jesus is again restored to the earth in its purity; and there is only one way in which his people and all peoples can come into the light, and that is through the Gate of Eternal Life as revealed by our Savior. All people must yet seek the "way, the truth, and the light," and mankind must unselfishly and humbly go to God for divine guidance. The Latter-day Saints declare that the Priesthood of God is again on the earth, and that the lives of those holding the Priesthood must be clean and pure.

The spirit of man is divine. We are of God, with the same powers in embryo likened unto a God. We believe with all our might and strength that the light within us and the divinity of our own spirits will yet cause us to be truly and greatly educated children; and we base our testimony of life on the inner light, the power and light of God within us. We Latter-day Saints are not basing our lives on gold and silver and worldly goods. While we know that we are in a life wherein we are to deal with materiality with the world, we do not believe in "pinned-on" religion or frivolous and conventional facts called education, but we take a stand for the real development of the individual and his unity and unification with God almighty and his great work. We are hoping that the time will come when it may be said of us that the Latter-day Saints are not only the most intellectual people in all the world, but they are the most spiritual, and they win souls unto the true and living God by the spiritual life they express in their words, actions and thoughts. "Mormonism," or the gospel of Jesus Christ, teaches us that the Master, Jesus Christ, is the Redeemer of the world. He is the Son of the living God. He is blessing us, and is watching the nations and all his children. We know full well that every individual born of woman is a child of this living God; and we bear testimony to the fact that the living God has spoken, and therefore it is imperative that we base our lives upon a knowledge of him who created all things. He lives in heaven as our Father, whose kingdom is to be established upon the earth. We must therefore become children of the light. There is too much stuck-on religion in the world. We do hold that that word "religion" has become more or less false throughout the world, but we bear our testimony to you that pure religion, the relationship of God to man, is known through the Spirit of God and in no other way. All the teachings of Jesus might be put into a small brochure and read possibly within a period of thirty minutes. Why has the Master's life influenced the world as it has done? Because he not only knew the truth, but was of the truth, and the greatest man is the man of the truth. His whole spiritual, mental, and moral life is the expression of the power and divinity of Almighty God.

God is watching the nations of the earth. He loves his children, and I believe that Russia, Germany, Austria, Turkey, and all the nations of earth will have great prophets and teachers who will direct those people to a higher and truer life. I do not wish to be understood as saying that the peoples of the different nations are wholly in darkness. Far from that. The world is becoming more civilized, and all nations and peoples have given something of eternal truth to the world. I think, in fact, that the great religions of the world—Buddhism, Brahmanism, and the philosophy of Confucius have with Christianity lifted the human race to a realization of something of the purposes of God. In the gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of all goodness and truth, and in it we live and have our greatest hopes for the future. It will be by humble acknowledgement of God that the nations will be kept from a moral collapse.

May God bless the suffering nations of Europe. May he heal up the wounds of the people of that great and noble nation, Great Britain; may he help France—the nation that has stood for the intellectual development of mankind; may he help Italy, the nation of art and beauty; may he bless Germany whose people are good, and who have had a pride in their industrial and intellectual life; may Russia be brought to the Gate of Life, for her people have a natural spirit of thrift and intelligence. May God bless all peoples, and may he hasten the day when all shall sing, “Peace on earth, good will toward men.” May we as a people go forth from this conference with a stronger testimony of the truthfulness of the word of the Lord; may we forget self, and live for the good of others. May selfishness go from our lives, and may we live in accordance with the laws of the divine priesthood of God. Then our lives will be sanctified. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

President Grant read the following, dated Waterloo, Belgique, September 2, 1921: Greetings from Orson F. Whitney, May Wells Whitney, Thomas M. Wheeler, Arthur H. Taylor, Lillian D. Lillywhite, John P. Lillywhite, Alvin S. Nelson.

ELDER HYRUM G. SMITH

(Presiding Patriarch of the Church.)

At the sight of this wonderful congregation here, this morning my heart and soul are filled with blessing for this people, and praise to our Lord and Redeemer who sacrificed his life upon the cross for us and who, in these the last days, has restored to the earth the wonderful plan of redemption, that we all, through obedience unto that plan, may come back into the presence of our maker. I suppose about ninety-eight, or more, per cent of this wonderful congregation here today are descendants of that Joseph who was sold by his brothers, and are of the lineage of his favored son Ephraim. Despised by most of his brothers, and, separated from them, and taken into a strange land, Joseph was protected and blessed. The Lord made of him an instrument through which salvation came to many people,—a valuable lesson that you and I today, and in fact the whole world, if they will only learn it, may appreciate and enjoy. Without reading the scripture, I should like to refer those who do read the Bible to the life and history of that wonderful youth of the Lord. He was so blessed that the Lord manifested his power unto him. That power was so arranged that not only the people of his own race, his own family, were saved from famine and from many other conditions of life, but whole nations of people were saved. In fact the whole plan of his mission and ministry is a type of the great plan of salvation which the Lord taught unto Joseph Smith and which he in turn taught the people would come to pass in the last days. Just a verse or two:

“And when money failed in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came unto Joseph and said: Give us bread. for why should we die in thy presence? For the money faileth.” * * *

And Joseph said: “Give your cattle; and I will give you for your cattle, if money fail. And they brought their cattle unto Joseph, and Joseph gave them bread in exchange for horses, and for the flocks, and for the cattle of the herds, and for the asses; and he fed them with bread, for all their cattle, for that year.” The next year the same, and so on, until, they had given all their money and all their cattle, and when all their earthly possessions had gone, they finally came and offered themselves to Joseph and to Pharaoh that they might be saved alive; and (because they did give all of their possessions, their lands and actually themselves, they sacrificed all that they had in order to be saved, through the blessings of the Almighty, through the ministry and mission of one of his chosen servants who was led away into a strange land and in a peculiar manner.

“Then Joseph said unto the people Behold, I have bought you this day and your land, for Pharaoh; lo, here is seed for you, and you shall sow the land. And it shall come to pass, in the increase that ye shall give the fifth part unto Pharaoh; and four parts shall be your own for seed of the field, and for your food, and for them of your households, and for food for your little ones. * * *

The thought is this, brethren and sisters, after they were saved alive, that was not sufficient. The Lord in his mercy provided for them to continue to live, to continue to live through working the lands which they had sacrificed for their living, and for their very existence, literally for their salvation. They were to continue to labor in the land and to have their actual salvation in that land, but they were to honor the rulers and the leaders of the land through giving them one-fifth of their increase. We are not asked to give quite that much.

I would like to refer you now to the more modern scripture upon this very subject. A descendant of this Joseph who was carried away from his brothers through his mission and ministry by the blessings of the Almighty did bring about literal salvation, not only to his own family but to all of the people of the land who rendered their service unto him. Reading from the third chapter of Second Nephi, concerning a descendant of this Joseph, of whom I have spoken: "And thus prophesied Joseph: "Behold, that seer will the Lord bless; and they that seek to destroy him shall be confounded for this promise, which I have obtained from the Lord, of the fruit of my loins, shall be fulfilled. Behold I am sure of the fulfilling of this promise;

"And his name shall be called after me; and it shall be after the name of his father. And he shall be like unto me: for the thing which the Lord shall bring forth by his hand, but the power of the Lord shall bring my people unto salvation."

I testify to you, my brethren and sisters, that the work which was entrusted into the hands of Joseph the Prophet, in these the last days, is to be a literal type. In other words, it is the actual restoration of this great plan of redemption which will not only save the house of Joseph, not only to save you and me who are here, representatives of that great family in Israel through our lineage and our obedience, but, it will save all who come in from the lands surrounding us, from the nations of the world, who render obedience unto the laws that govern it. Its fulfilment will be literal in these the last days. I testify to you, my brethren and sisters, that we are enjoying today the blessings of plenty, the blessings of the productions of the land; and as a servant of the Lord, I give thanks to our Father for those glorious blessings. I praise and thank him for the glorious plan of redemption, and trust that we shall return unto him that portion of our increase which he requires at our hands, and continue to live and enjoy the blessings of this land of Joseph; and in these the last days be instruments in the hands of God to bring about this literal salvation to the souls of men, that we may not only enjoy the blessings of our home and our lands, but that we may enjoy those unto his chosen children, that we may live, unitedly together, sharing our blessings, and our privileges and returning unto God the faith and works which he requires at our hands, that we may continue to live. In so doing we will not only honor ourselves and receive our blessings as they have been promised, according to the records, as they were promised to that Joseph who was sold by his brothers, and to our Prophet Joseph Smith who was raised up of the Lord in these the last days, but we shall enjoy the blessings as they have been multiplied unto us in these the last days, to bring about that wonderful and glorious salvation of the souls of all men. We sang yesterday that song about Joseph who gave his life as a martyr, for his testimony concerning the work which the Lord entrusted into his hands. I should like to read again the last verse of that song:

Sacrifice brings forth the blessings of heaven.
Earth must atone for the blood of that man.
Wake up the world for the conflict of justice.
Millions shall know brother Joseph again.

Hail to the prophet—and so forth.

His life and ministry were an actual type in fulfilment of that type which was given to Joseph who was sold into Egypt, to bring about the great plan of redemption, that we may all, after we have made our sacrifices, through giving into the Lord that portion which he requires,—in service, and the fruits of our labors,—continue to live and enjoy the blessings of heaven and earth,, which blessings I pray for, for us all, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

One of the great responsibilities which rests upon the priesthood of this church is to carry the message of the gospel to the nations of the earth.. Considerable emphasis has already been placed upon the subject by the President, in his opening remarks, and by other brethren. Since my heart is in this work, I desire to bear testimony of the great value of the missionary labor, the blessings and benefits derived therefrom and the absolute need of its being carried forward in the world today.

IMPORTANCE OF MISSIONARY WORK.

Since some of the brethren, who are in charge of the missions, feel that Latter-day Saints need to be stirred up with a renewed determination, not only to send the missionaries into the field, but to maintain them while they are there, I wish to endorse their plea. I feel impressed, my brethren and sisters, that the days are numbered when we may be permitted to send our missionaries unto the Gentile nations of the earth. The Lord has indicated in the revelations to the Prophet Joseph Smith, that there was to be a dispensation of the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles and that the day will come when their period, the times of the Gentiles, shall close. Since we have discovered, by the reports of the missionaries that there has been a marked increase this present year in baptisms, it surely should be an incentive, on the part of Latter-day Saints, to send the laborers, while the day lasts, into the vineyard where truly the harvest still appears to be great and the laborers are few. I hope and pray, therefore, that we shall not fail, and I know we shall not, in discharging the duty which devolves upon us toward the nations of the earth in this respect. For this gospel was not delivered to the Latter-day Saints for us alone; it was sacredly entrusted into our hands for ourselves and to preserve it for the whole world. There never has been a time, since the missionaries began to preach this gospel, when we have forgotten this obligation. Always there have been men worthy and willing to go. We have seen days that were more trying than these, and still there were missionaries provided. We have seen days when there were many things to lure this people away from missionary work, but still the hearts of our people have not been turned from the great labor which God has given to this Church, of carrying this gospel to the nations of the earth. There were days when the gold fever swept the whole country, and our people were nearest to the point of interest, still they were not deterred from this great responsibility by the allurements of gold. Our missionaries met those gold seekers as they pushed their handcarts across the plains, to carry the message of the gospel to the children of men. Surely we have acted as if we believed what we said, namely, that these are the last days, the days of God's judgments, that they now hang over the nations of the earth, and we alone know the means of escape. Men of Israel, we have been sent to inform all men to flee from the wrath that is to come and to find salvation in this world as well as salvation in the world to come.

THE SAINTS HAVE ALWAYS PROVED TRUE TO MISSIONARY OBLIGATIONS.

While this has not been altogether a pleasant message to deliver, nevertheless, our brethren have been true, and by thousands have delivered it faithfully and acceptably to the Lord. Using President Ivins' illustration, we have acted as if we realized the seriousness of the situation. For if there is a possibility of the head-gates coming out and the floods coming in on the people; if there is a possibility that the dam above the valley might break and the people in the valley be engulfed in the on-rushing water, what would we do? If we knew the danger, or if we saw this peril to men, from afar, or other calamities that might come upon them and we knew about it, would we peacefully find a place of security ourselves and watch while their calamity came? No, we would exert ourselves to warn men to flee from the danger. And this is the spirit that has actuated those warnings that have been uttered by the brethren who have spoken at this conference; this is the spirit that accompanies our missionaries who go into the world and cry repentance to this generation, warning them to flee from the wrath that is to come. But, since they do not see it, we who see and know it, with all the earnestness of our souls, we must proclaim repentance unto this generation. Some have repented, but the majority have not.

DISPENSATION OF PREACHING TO THE GENTILES DRAWING TO A CLOSE.

Thank the Lord that the day of their repentance is yet extended, but it shall not be extended forever, because we are drawing to the close of that dispensation when the gospel shall be preached to the Gentile nations, and the wheat is being gathered. Thank the Lord there is still some wheat, and as long as the days last, my brethren, we are to thrust in our sickles and reap, and send forth men to discharge this great duty and responsibility; for, when the day cometh that the calamities that are spoken of shall be poured out upon the nations of the earth, let us have no regret that we failed to discharge our duty. Do we rejoice at the prospects of chastisements that shall be ministered to men who do not repent? No, we do not. In my heart I know—and I speak for you, my brethren—we do not feel just exactly as Jonah did, who when he prophesied of judgments upon the people, if they did not repent, and when the judgments of the Lord were averted, through the repentance of men, he felt bad because his prophecies had not been fulfilled. No, I would rejoice with all my soul if these things that await the nations of the earth could only be averted. I would be happy; for do we not love the souls of the children of men? I have spent thirteen years of my life in missionary services and all of you who have spent years of your life out there in the service of our fellow men—walking in the rain, or in sunshine, in the mud and in the cold, because we love their souls—which we could not have done without begetting love for them. And if it were in our power to change the conditions we would do it; but we cannot; even God himself cannot change the conditions that will result, except men repent. If they repent, then they shall escape; but if they repent not, then they shall taste of these things that are coming.

LET US ROUND UP OUR SHOULDERS TO OUR DUTY, WHILE THE DAY LASTS.

In the meantime, while the day lasts, let us round up our shoulders and discharge that duty, out of love for those who are yet in darkness and yet in the world without the knowledge of this truth; that they may come to Zion and rejoice with us, and that we may have our garments clear of the blood of this generation, and that our heavenly Father may be justified in that which he shall cause to come upon the unrepentant and the wicked.

Now, my brethren and sisters, I feel sure that after the appeals that have been made, we will gather our strength and send it forth to continue to discharge this great responsibility; and those who do not have sons in the field will lend a helping hand to those who do, that the boys who have not means shall not be under the necessity of coming home, but that the bishops, as suggested, shall call for help and support and strength at home. There is no greater work devolving upon the Church than the preaching of the gospel while these precious days last. Let us not falter nor hesitate, but go forward and be justified.

OUR DUTY TO THE GATHERED SAINTS.

The other great responsibility that rests upon the priesthood of this Church, and all the members of the Church, is that we shall sanctify ourselves and our sons and daughters, and preserve that which the Lord has given us; so that we may establish here a people who shall be an ensign and a pattern, an example to the world, as well as to prepare the people for the coming of the Redeemer to live among men in the flesh.

I wish to read a few words from the 105th section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Verily I say unto you who have assembled yourselves together that you may learn my will concerning the redemption of mine afflicted people.

Behold, I say unto you, were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the Church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now;

But behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I required at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them,

And are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom;

And Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.

THE GOSPEL THE KEY TO SOLVE THE WORLD'S VEXING PROBLEMS.

Now, my brethren and sisters, I rejoice that, notwithstanding we are in the midst of these chastisements—not because, perhaps, of any deliberate wickedness on the part of the people but because many of us have heard the warning voice of the shepherd of Israel, but have not heeded that warning voice, I want to say to you that there is no plan devised for the solution of these vexing problems that are now before us and before the world; there is no plan devised that shall succeed, except the plan that our God has given to this people. In the restoration of the everlasting gospel there was given and committed to man in this dispensation every means, key, principle and power to solve each and every vexing problem that now distresses the world. We have been given those principles, and, thank the Lord! we are making some progress toward their solution. I rejoice, notwithstanding we are occasionally in need of chastisement, that we are not going to fail. I know that. You will read that in the days of Daniel, he, looking down through all the ages following his own day, saw the rise of the kingdoms of the world and their dissolution, until he saw, in these the last days, the kingdom of God being established, as a stone cut out of the mountain without hands.

GOD'S WORK WILL NOT FAIL, NOR BE GIVEN TO ANOTHER PEOPLE.

In connection with the rise of that great work of our Father in the last days, he declared a new thing, a thing that never was declared to any other dispensation from the days of Father Adam, namely, that the work of God in that day should not fail; it should not be overcome; neither shall it be left to another people. Two wonderful promises. I recognize that in the dispensations that have preceded our own, men have hoped and dreamed that there would be established in might and power, the work of God but in sorrow they had to see the power of evil triumph in the world. But that shall never be repeated again, for this work has been established to roll forth, and it shall not fail. You may fail; I may fail, but this shall not fail. I rejoice to know that, while some of us may falter and hesitate, this people shall not be rejected. The Lord said to Daniel that the work should not go to another people; and the Lord has indicated that in a revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith. You find it in the closing two verses of the ninetyeth section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants:

ZION SHALL NOT BE MOVED OUT OF HER PLACE.

But verily I say unto you, that I, the Lord, will contend with Zion, and plead with her strong ones, and chasten her until she overcomes and is clean before me;

For she shall not be removed out of her place; I, the Lord, have spoken it.

That kind of a promise entails the necessity of chastisement, when we need to be chastened and corrected and brought to a condition of repentance. I recognize that the Lord cannot fulfil his work nor accomplish his purposes without our willing obedience. He will not use this people unless we are willing to be used; but he has means of correcting, he has means of chastisement, which he will apply from time to time, and the only thing that impedes our progress today is our own lack of willingness to follow the counsel of those whom God has appointed to lead this people, because of the imagination of our hearts that we are wiser than they are.

AN APPEAL TO FOLLOW THE COUNSEL OF OUR LEADERS.

I want to make an appeal to the brethren and sisters of the Church and to the priesthood of the Church who lead in the wards and stakes of Zion, that we shall rally to those whom God has appointed to lead this people. What brings success? Doing the right thing at the right time. What will relieve this people of their present difficulties? Following the counsel of those men who have been appointed, in the wards and the stakes of Zion, to lead this people, not only in spiritual matters, but in material things as well. We do not wish that these brethren shall be appointed dictators or directors, but they are there for counsel and advice. I know that there are brethren who think that they know more than the bishop of the ward, and they would not go to him to counsel with him concerning their material things; nor would they go to the president of the stake or even to the president of the Church. But I want to tell you there is a wisdom and an inspiration resting with these men, who have been called to be leaders of the people, that is greater than the wisdom of men who may think they know very much more, but who, nevertheless, will discover that these are the days when the wisdom of the wise shall perish and the understanding of the prudent be hid. The light, the wisdom and the revelations of the Lord come to his humble servants to counsel and advise this people, and it will lead them to victory, as it has done in the past—to success in material things as well as in spiritual things.

ASK THE LORD FOR COUNSEL.

I ask my brethren and sisters to be more diligent with reference to seeking for proper guidance and direction in material things. When you do not know what to do, study it out in your mind. You get the key in the ninth section of the book of Doctrine and Covenants, which is applicable to these circumstances, and also to the affairs of life with which we are concerned. Go and study it out, and when you reach your conclusion, if you are not clear in your mind as to the thing you want to do, go and ask the Lord before you do it, as to whether it is right. If it is right, he will cause your bosom to burn within you, and you will know whether it is right. If you do not have that feeling, but only a stupor of thought, and there is uncertainty about it, turn away from that thing. Be sure you are right and then go ahead; and we can't be sure we are right until we receive the witness from the Lord, that it is the proper thing to do. I bear testimony to you that the Lord is concerned in the material prosperity of this people.

THE BASIS OF MATERIAL BLESSINGS.

God will never give this people that which will turn them from him. Whenever he sees that in our increase in the things of this world there is danger that our hearts will be turned away, he knows how to shrink that prosperity and bring us just where he wants us. He will continue to do that until we are willing to be led; and when the people are willing to follow those whom God has appointed to lead them, and they will serve him, pay their honest tithing, and keep his commandments, I will tell you there are blessings of a material character beyond anything we have ever conceived of, that the Lord could give this people immediately if he desired. O, I have faith in him. There will come tight times, yes, and days of peril. I think it is a blessing that the granaries and the barns are full. Do not complain about it. Brethren, do not be disturbed over it. It may be possible that even in this the Lord has a plan and a purpose, for, O, how much worse our condition would be if our banks were full of money and our barns were empty and our granaries were vacant. There are coming days of trial. There are coming days of famine, and the world shall feel the pang of hunger beyond that which they feel today; but even today, there are millions in Russia and in China, notwithstanding the world is full of abundance, who are suffering the pangs of hunger. There is coming a day when the crops shall be destroyed by a hail storm; and how easy to deluge the whole world in famine! Let this people keep a surplus of their foodstuffs, both for man and beasts, and it will be profitable to them. One good season may liquidate our material obligations, if we will be wise and prudent, and listen to the counsel of the brethren. Let us be economical and save, and pay our tithes. In this time when we are tempted to take everything we have to meet our other obligations, let us not forget the obligations which we owe to the Lord, if we want to be vindicated. I will tell you, as the Lord God lives, if this people will turn to the Lord and serve him, cease our extravagance, pay our tithes, and humble ourselves, we will see deliverance, and we will not come into bondage nor into difficulties; and there is no other way out of it that I know anything about. I rejoice to know that we have men who can stand as watchmen upon the towers of Zion and call our attention to these things.

THE DANGER OF IMMORALITY.

In conclusion let me make an appeal to you concerning another thing. Not only is there sweeping over the world distress of a financial character, waves that are deluging people in distress, in debt and in obligations, but there is another thing that is more serious. I would that this was the only thing that was afflicting us and the only thing that is imminent in the world. Far more precious to us than our houses and our lands and our fields are our sons and daughters, and the evil one has conspired to capture them. He is not so much concerned about getting our farms and fields, but O, more precious than all these things are our sons and daughters! Sweeping over the world are waves of immorality, for the standards of the world have broken down, and these dangers are all about us. Shall we stand when this tide comes upon us? I believe we shall; and yet, as a watchman upon the towers of Zion, I call you, my brethren, to watch, to work, to pray, and to guard the flocks over whom God hath made you overseers, that the insidious influence of evil, if it comes in to seek to corrupt the morals of this people, shall not have power to succeed, but that we shall live up to the standards under which I was raised, and you were raised, that we shall teach our sons and daughters that next to murder itself, is the crime of sexual impurity. We have that standard. We expect the boy to be just as clean and as pure as the girl whom he marries, to be his wife and the mother of his children. We have been preserved and protected up to this time by living up to these standards. Let us not lessen the requirements, not a bit; but emphasize them, and fortify our boys and girls against that which is conspiring against them. If they shall succeed in preserving themselves, during these perilous times, and come out clean and uncontaminated, I will tell you that their praise will be sung; yes, by more people and in louder acclaim than the praises of our fathers who subdued the desert and made it blossom as the rose. Good is coming to Zion. While she has her days of chastisement, repentance will come; we will not be forsaken by the Lord, if we will not forsake him, and may God grant that we shall not. Let us all go home resolved more nearly to serve him and keep his commandments, and then, I will promise you, all shall be well with Zion and her people, which may God grant, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

I desire that during the few minutes I stand before you, the words I speak may be prompted by the inspiration of our heavenly Father.

TWO TYPES OF GREAT SPEAKERS.

There have been two types of great speakers; shall I say two types of great orators? One type reached its highest form in Cicero. The other type reached its perfection in Demosthenes. It is said that when Cicero stood before the people they all listened with great interest, and as they were leaving the assembly they said to one another: "How well Cicero speaks." They had praise for his voice, praise for his words, praise for his rhetoric, praise for his eloquence.

But when the multitudes listened to that master speaker, Demosthenes, they never thought of his language, his rhetoric, or his words, but rushed from the building exclaiming: "Come, let us go up against Philip!"

PRESIDENT GRANT'S WORDS URGE US TO ACTION.

In the remarks of President Heber J. Grant, we heard words like the words of Demosthenes. This good shepherd told us to get out of debt and remain out of debt. As soon as possible I propose to get out of debt.

ON THE WORD OF WISDOM.

He asked us also to remember the Word of Wisdom. President Grant has himself been a model in the matter of keeping the Word of Wisdom. I doubt if any other man has appealed to the people more earnestly or effectively to induce them to live in accordance with these inspired health teachings than he has.

It has been variously estimated that ten per cent or twenty per cent, or forty per cent of the people in the Church use tea and coffee. I propose that when we leave this conference we do so accepting the message of the prophet of God, that is, that we leave the building determined to live in strict accordance with the Word of Wisdom.

ON HOME INDUSTRY.

The President, the man whom we sustain as our Prophet, also appealed to us yesterday to support home industry. I propose not to talk about his eloquence, but to leave the building determined to reform in this respect. Will you do the same thing?

I wish I could say, as he did, that he was standing in shoes made at Z. C. M. I., and that he has worn Z. C. M. I. made shoes for thirty years. I have made a resolution that at the next conference I will stand, on one condition, in Z. C. M. I. shoes—Will you do the same thing? That condition is that they can find a piece of leather big enough to make them. (Laughter.)

The President said that while the Knight Woolen Mills of Provo were manufacturing cloth for making clothing, he wore home-made goods. He did not say here what he said to me before the meeting, namely: "It was my intention to have a suit of clothes made from cloth from the Knight Woolen Mills before this conference, but I have been away from the city and from the State so much of late that I did not get it done."

When in Provo the other day I went to the Woolen Mills and purchased an overcoat, made of Utah wool by Utah workmen, and it is the best bargain in every sense I ever had in an overcoat. The reason I am not wearing it is because the weather, or this building is so hot. I promise to leave here with a resolution to the effect that if Brother Golden Kimball will sign a note with me, to get the money, I shall have a suit made of goods from the Knight Woolen Mills before the next General Conference.

Long years ago when the people of America were about to declare their independence and that great American, Benjamin Franklin, was before the House of Lords being examined, he was asked the question: "But how can you live in America without the products of England?"

Benjamin Franklin replied about as follows: "The goods that we receive from England may be divided into three classes: First, the necessities; next, the mere conveniences; and third, the luxuries." You have all seen that picture I am sure, of a sheep with a little wagon behind carrying its great big tail. That was devised as a result of the remarks of Benjamin Franklin.

He said: "In America the people are loyal, they have quit eating lamb, so they will have more wool, and it is only a question of a little time until we can produce all of the necessities. It will be but a little longer when we can also produce the mere conveniences; and the luxuries," he said, "because of the patriotism of our people, are cut off already."

So I appeal to you Americans to listen to the voice of the man who stands at the head of the Church, and support home industry.

I was at the Fair yesterday. It was gratifying to see there the products of the institutions and organizations of our own State. I propose to listen to the words of the man who stands at the head of the Church, and leave this conference saying: "Come, let us go forth and use first the products of our own State."

RELIGIOUS AND INDUSTRIAL TRAINING OF CHILDREN.

1 But that is not what I want to talk about. In the 22nd chapter of Proverbs, and the 6th verse, appear these words:

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." The 29th and last verse in that same 22nd chapter says:

"Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings, he shall not stand before mean men."

So I desire to urge the proper training of our children, the bringing up of the child in the way he should go. I urge faithful devotion to business. I ask you this question. If you have a son, in how many ways is he trained to make a living? I have the reputation, especially among the engineering students of the University of Utah, of helping them to find employment. I have helped a good many others, and I have been surprised when some young men have come to ask for employment to find before me a human being with untrained hands, and untrained eyes, and untrained ears, and an untrained mind. Honor be to the man who took his boy to an expert workman and said: "I want my boy to learn to work. I would like to have you give him some employment."

"I don't have very much business," replied the man, "I have no work for him to do. If I had the work, I haven't the means with which to pay for his services."

"Well," said the father, not in the presence of the boy, however, "I will let the boy board at home. You go to him, tell him you will pay him for his services $15 a month, and each month I will give you a check for $15."

Honor to the man who teaches his boy to work, and is more concerned in having him learn to do things than in securing financial compensation.

Honor also to the man who took his boy to a ranchman, a man who was a financial success, who had flocks and herds and fields, fields of grain and fields of hay, and said: "I would like to have you take my boy and train him to do things. I am not concerned whether you pay him anything or not, but I want you to teach him to work."

I had a little pamphlet put in my hands the other day, and in it is a story something like this: ("It is up to You," by Parlette.) A newspaper man in a paper mill was watching the operations of a machine with interest, when along came a man with an oil can, squirting oil into the squirt holes in the side of the machine. He asked that man a few questions that he answered fairly well. Then he asked something about the process going on in the next room, and the man replied: "I don't know nothing about it, boss, I haven't worked there." So he said he asked him another process and the answer came the same: "I don't know nothing about it, boss, I haven't worked there." He asked him a question about the pulp mill: "I don't know nothing about it, boss, I have never worked there." He asked him a question about the office, the number of people employed in the plant: "I don't know nothing about it, boss, I haven't worked there." And so the newspaper man, to himself, said: "Nobody home."

The newspaper man asked: "I presume, my friend, that you are new in this plant?" "No, no," came the reply, "I have been squirting oil into this machine now for twelve years." Twelve years and "don't know nothing" about any other part of the institution. He said: "I took off my hat in the presence of the dead." (Laughter.)

As he was leaving he asked the foreman: "You see that man standing over there with a can in his hand? Is he a human being, or do you just wind him up?"

A STUPENDOUS PIECE OF WORK BEFORE THE SAINTS.

The appeal I make to you is for the training of the hands, the training of the eyes, the training of the ears, the training of the minds of the young people in the Church. We have before us to be done the most stupendous piece of work that has been given to any people, that is the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ to every nation, kindred, tongue and people. This cannot be done by our boys alone. It will take men, strong men, men of training, men of experience, men of education, men of brains. The Church can have in it a great army of such strong characters only by training our children in the way they should go. The Lord bless us all, Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

When the British General with his army entered the City of Jerusalem I felt that the time of the Gentiles was very close to being fulfilled. At my request the choir will sing a song written by a converted Jew, the father of our faithful Latter-day Saint sister, Sister Rebecca Neibaur Nibley—"Come thou glorious day of promise!"

By special request the choir sang, "Come, thou glorious day of promise," by Neibaur.

Come, thou glorious day of promise,
Come and spread thy cheerful ray,
When the scattered sheep of Israel
Shall no longer go astray;
When hosannas,
With united voice they'll cry.

Lord, how long wilt Thou be angry;
 Shall Thy wrath forever burn?
 Rise, redeem Thine ancient people,
 Their transgressions from them turn.
 King of Israel,
 Come and set Thy people free.
 O, that soon Thou wouldst to Jacob,
 Thy enlivening Spirit send!
 Of their unbelief and mis'ry
 Make, O Lord, a speedy end.
 Lord, Messiah!
 Prince of Peace o'er Israel reign.

Announcement was made that Elder Ernest W. Wood, and President Lewis W. Shurtliff, of Weber stake, were ill, and desired to be remembered by the congregation of Saints, and they were prayed for by President Daniel Heiner, who offered the closing prayer.

The meeting was adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

FIRST OVERFLOW MEETING

An overflow meeting of the Conference was held in the Assembly Hall at 10 o'clock, Sunday morning, October 9, 1921. Elder John A. Widstoe of the Council of the Twelve presided. The music exercises were furnished by the Cottonwood ward choir, Cottonwood stake.

The choir and congregation sang, "For the strength of the hills, we bless thee."

Prayer was offered by Elder E. S. Rolapp.

The choir sang the anthem, "Rouse, O ye mortals."

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

My brethren and sisters, we may not be in the great tabernacle, a few rods away, in which is a great congregation of five or six thousand people; but we are here in this smaller building for the same purpose as are those in the larger building, and we are entitled to the same Spirit and should enjoy the same blessings. I am sure we shall have a splendid meeting here this morning. President Grant has sent us some faithful brethren to speak to us, and I know that we shall have the Spirit of God to bless and to comfort us during this hour.

A TESTIMONY FULL OF JOY.

I bear my testimony to you that I am happy to belong to this great people, chosen in the last days for the carrying on of the purposes of the Almighty. I delight to bear my testimony that I know that this is the work of God, that Joseph Smith was a prophet divinely ordained and set apart to carry out the great latter-day work that was planned before the foundations of the earth were laid. I know that in the light of the gospel, man may walk in happiness and in enjoyment throughout this life's journey, and ultimately, when we shall pass through the great veil, we may enjoy exaltation and eternal life throughout the endless ages. This testimony fills my heart with joy; and when, on a morning like this, I find these two great halls crowded to their capacities, and yet see beyond me a great concourse of people who are probably assembling in another overflow meeting, I praise God that he is blessing us so abundantly.

Who would have thought, in 1830, when a handful of people assembled to organize this Church, that in ninety years these thousands of people would assemble in these valleys, then unknown to the civilized world, twice a year, in devotion and fidelity to God. My experiences on this land and in other countries have demonstrated to me that a sight like this is not to be witnessed anywhere else on the face of the earth. Ten thousand people at least, I imagine, are on this square today, with the common purpose of worshiping their God, of testifying to the things that I have been testifying to you here this morning. And, probably anyone of these ten thousand could stand on this platform, as I do now, and bear his living testimony that this is the work of God.

Some years ago a mother with her children was standing near the statues of Joseph and Hyrum Smith on this block. They were looking at the conference crowds. One of the children, a girl pretty well grown into young womanhood, felt the spirit that we feel on this occasion, and she said to her mother: "Mother, mother, mother! If I know nothing else in this world, I know that I am a Latter-day Saint. I want to live with this people. I want to die with this people; I am of this people." That is how we all feel; we are leaving the world and we praise the Lord for it.

Not only in numbers have we become a "marvelous work and a wonder" in a little less than one hundred years; but in a greater and a larger sense have we become a marvelous people, for we have impressed our thought upon the whole world. The world does not believe today as it did ninety years ago. A few days ago I picked up a recent number of a great magazine, and my feelings were roused within me and my testimony increased, when I found one of the writers declaring to the readers of the magazine that "God cannot look upon sin with the least degree of tolerance," borrowed almost word for word, from section one of the Doctrine and Covenants. In such a way have the doctrines taught by the despised Latter-day Saints been appropriated by the nations of the earth; and whether the people of the earth accept the inspiration of Joseph Smith, nevertheless, in fact, the whole current of human thought has been changed by the doctrines of this people. That is perhaps the greatest achievement of "Mormonism" during the last ninety years, unless it be the achievement to secure a body of people numbering hundreds of thousands who almost always see eye to eye, who understand as with one mind, who feel as with one heart, who worship God alike, and who in that united worship and action find a tremendous advantage in life. Do you know of a happier people than we are? I have not found a happier people. I find happiness wherever I go, for Latter-day Saints understand the truth. They have seen the beginning and they know the end of the designs of God with respect to his children. They do not grope in darkness. Who cares if we are few in comparison with the 1500 millions of people on the face of the earth? We are as yeast in the dough, and will yet ferment the whole earth.

A few weeks ago I was in Canada, where I spent some time with people not of our faith. One afternoon we had a social affair, which ended in an automobile trip over some interesting places in that neighborhood. By my side sat an old gentleman, who was the man who drove the first railway train over the Canadian Pacific railroad into Vancouver. He told the story of that railroad; how a group of men saw a vision of the possibilities of building a railroad over the Canadian mountains, and how, with little influence, money and power, they formulated a plan to build from ocean to ocean a great continental railroad which would open up to humanity the great Canadian dominion. This man said: "I am ashamed to tell you how often I ran trains into Vancouver without a single passenger on them, during the first few years of the history of that railroad," and he said, "when we got a crowd of four or five people I thought the railway was coming into its own. One day we had 7 passengers, and we were all jubilant until we discovered that six of them were employees of the railway and traveled on passes." That was about a generation ago. Today, as I found, one almost has to plead for a seat on the trains that run every day over that same railroad. Who cares about the hard beginning and the empty trains when the end can be seen from the beginning? The makers of the Canadian Pacific railway saw the building of homes and schools and happy families, the growing of a civilization in that part of the world, so what did they care about the difficulties and modesty of the beginning?

MARVEL OF THE SETTLEMENTS IN UTAH.

You also, my brethren and sisters, saw the end from the beginning. If we know the message of the Prophet, what do we care about the hardships or the modesty of our beginning or of the difficulties of today? I know that the germs of permanent greatness lie in this great work; and I am content and glad and grateful to have been born into the worldⁱⁿ this age, to do my work; even if some one after me must have the joy of realizing even more completely the vision of the past.

Who thought when we came to the mountains in 1847 that we could build here an empire? Even Brigham Young, led by the Spirit of God, having visions by night and by day, of the future of his people, did not fully comprehend the destiny of this people when established in this once arid valley. But is it not wonderful that these great leaders did believe and trust in God as they did? The story is told that Brigham Young was met by the trapper Jim Bridger, who came to the Great Basin about 1824 and lived here for a quarter of a century; and that he said to Brigham Young, "I have spent a quarter of a century in the Great Basin, and I can't see any possibility of building a state on these barren wastes. I doubt if grain can be raised in the Salt Lake valley." But Brigham Young, taught by Almighty God, said, "You who have spent your life in these valleys may come to me with these conclusions; but I know that within this great American desert we may yet build homes and enjoy prosperity and happiness, and fulfil the destiny that God has promised his people." That is the difference between the inspiration of God and the judgment of men!

ALL LIFE WAITS ON US.

We are a small people in the eyes of the world; but we have an understanding of the purposes of God, and the gift of the priesthood and the authority to act for God in the accomplishment of his will. The living and the dead are depending upon us for the truth and the power of salvation. The living must hear our message; and the dead are waiting for us to open the doors through which they may go on to a greater life in the great hereafter. All life waits upon us and our actions for the fulfilment of the prophecies of holy men and the promises of God. I feel tremendously the responsibility that rests upon me as a member of this Church, having all this knowledge, having all this authority, having all these things placed before me to do. God grant that I may do all that God desires me to do, that I may not fail on account of any hesitancy on my part.

I pray that God may give us a full conception of the meaning of this great Latter-day work, and give us strength from day to day to enter into partnership with him to accomplish the great work that he insists shall be done for the human race in this great stage of our existence, I ask in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ARNOLD G. MILLER

(Late President of the Australian Mission.)

My brethren and sisters, I feel the responsibility that rests upon me at this time, and my heart is fluttering, perhaps, as is general when I have been called upon to face a congregation.

I have recently returned from the Australian Mission, about seven months ago. I want to say of the Australian people that they are not in general a religious people. They are hospitable and among them many intelligent people. Among those who have been converted to the faith we can find as fine people, perhaps, as any that may be found. Among the elders who labored with me, there could be no finer young people anywhere than those young men were. Remember we were laboring under very difficult circumstances at the time. The world's war was one, when it was impossible to get elders from Zion to fill our ranks where they were depleted as our elders were sent home. They left us with very few to carry on the work in that far-off land.
